Mrs. Nexdore was dressed in the manner that once tempted Nora Bayes to say of herself, "I don't know whether I am dressed for an opera or an operation."

And gathered about her was a flimsy sort of a wrap or cloak that seemed to bring something to little Jean's mind. The latter looked up at Mrs. Nexdore wonderingly and startled the lady by saying:

FLOWERS FOR THE ROCKERIES

Makes an Attractive Substitute for the Flower Garden—White Blossoms Very Effective.

If one has not space enough for a flower garden, or does not wish the care of a garden, a little rockery will be an attractive substitute and one that involves little labor in maintenance.

A rockery of white blossoms is especially effective. Here is a combination that is easily grown; Sweet alyssum, which blossoms profusely and can be cut all summer; candytuft, gypsophila and white portulacca. Do not sow portulacca until the weather is warm and settled; but once under way it is a sturdy plant and needs little care. All these flowers are hardy annuals, may be sown from seed in the spring and will flower during the summer.

If the rockery is to be permanent it would be better to plant some perennials. Kenilworth ivy, a small trailer that bears small lavender or purple flowers, and the helianthemum or rock rose, which comes in various colors, are good selections. For a yellow and white effect use, say, the yellow dwarf nasturtiums and the yellow portulacca. The nasturtiums spread rapidly and flower profusely during the greater part of the season.

Dwarf morning glory is a pretty vine for rockeries, and the pink and white flowers are especially effective when grown with a mass of lavender flowers, rose-colored portulacca, rock rose, Kenilworth ivy, gypsophila and sweet alyssum.

VALUE OF SCHOOL GARDENS

Encourages the Child to Get Into Close Communion With Mother Nature.

The value of school gardens in placing the child in close communion with Mother Nature cannot be overestimated. In these times of warfare we recall the words of one writer who asked:

"What conqueror in any part of life's battle could desire a more beautiful, more noble or a more patriotic monument than a tree planted by the hands of pure and joyous children?"

Ex-Gov. Curtis Guild of Massachusetts said: "Let the children in the public schools be taught that every egg they take from the nests of the birds means the loss of a little friend of Massachusetts; means one less winged crusader against the gypsy moth, the brown-tail moth and the crawling pests that destroy the food of the people and the beauty of the land. Save the trees! Save the birds that we may save the trees!" In the school gardens the children have some very practical and often painful lessons regarding damage to plant life through destructive insects.

Take Care of the Parks.

Years and years ago the necessity for presenting any extended argument in favor of the ownership of extensive parks by municipalities was obviated. It has come to be generally understood and appreciated that these outdoor breathing places afford not only pleasure, but profit, and that instead of being a liability they are a very valuable asset in the community which has them. To be sure, those who have automobiles or horses and who can go out into the country as far and as often as they like are not particularly anxious for these [illegible] grass plots, and yet when they have visitors they are sure to take them there, and they point with [illegible] these evidences of municipal enterprise. They ought cheerfully [illegible] their share to provide [illegible] for those whose lack of [illegible] vents them from getting [illegible] country at their will [illegible] hour or an afternoon [illegible] shade, in the fr[illegible] is no other tax [illegible] be more [illegible] which [illegible]

TALKED ABOUT DOCTOR'S FEAT

Borrowed Timers Heard Description of the Successful Attempt at Mountain Climbing by Former Fultonian

The Borrowed Time club at Monday's meeting listened to the reading of a paper by the secretary, Mr. H. N. Gilbert, who told of the feat accomplished by a former Fultonian, Dr. Andrew J. Gilmour. Recently the New York Times told of this feat in glowing words, of how the Doctor had climbed to the top of Mount Geike in British Columbia, to a height of 11,016 feet or to the summit of the peak—the first time in history that a man had reached the point. Former attempts have been made to reach the summit, but every hardy mountaineer had to give up the work on account of the large amount of glacial moss encountered. Dr. Gilmour was accompanied by Prof. E. W. Holway of the University of Minnesota. Dr. Holway is an experienced climber, having made more than twenty-five first ascents.

In making the climb the two men were equipped with Swiss ice axes and hob-nailed climbing shoes. For the first 5,000 feet of the climb the scientists were accompanied by a Norwegian pack carrier, who balked at going further. Sometimes the explorers had to cut steps into the ice walls and at other times they had their noses up against the wall where the snow masses bulged out like the cornices on a house. Three hundred steps were carved in the ice before the men reached the summit.

When the explorers returned to civilized life they were somewhat surprised to hear the comment made by the press and people, the praise for the daringness of the two Americans who had done what no Canadian had succeeded in doing.

Dr. Gilmour is a practicing physician in New York, a member of the Canadian and American Alpine clubs and is well known to the older residents of this city and vicinity.

RED MEN CHANGE PLANS FOR BIG CLAM BAKE

Reynolds' woods was decided upon some time ago as the proper place to hold the big Red Men's clam bake, but quite recently it was deemed best for the interests of all concerned that the fair grounds should be selected. Accordingly arrangements have been made to secure that delightful outing place, and weather permitting, Sunday will witness one of the biggest meetings of Red Men that the city has seen for many months. None but Red Men will be eligible to attend the bake.

The committee in charge of Sunday's affair are:

Henry Kelley, chairman; Joe Dingle, Jr., Chas. Church, Fred Battles, Erw. McoCrmick.

A list of sporting events forms a part of the program. The committee expects a large delegation from Syracuse Tribes.

NEW MEMBERS JOIN THE ODD FELLOWS LODGE

Six candidates presented themselves for initiation at last night's meeting of the I. O. F. lodge and received the first degree. A rousing good time was had by everybody at the social session which followed regular business, and a supper was served in the diningroom downstairs. This lodge continues to grow, new members being taken in at nearly every meeting.

Neahtawanta lodge is in receipt of an invitation from Syracuse to confer the first degree on the Americas lodge there during the month of November.

Tonight the first game in the pool tournament between the Maccabees and Odd Fellows is scheduled to take place at the I. O. F. rooms.

TWO WEDDINGS HERE YESTERDAY

BEALES—ELLIOTT

Mr. Edward Beales, 213 E. 2nd st., and Miss Beatrice Elliott, daughter of Mrs. S. Elliott, of 207 W. 5th st., were married last night by Rev. Mr. G. Buck at the pastor's home. Miss Ethel Elliott, a sister of the bride, and Mr. Ray Grangier were the attendants. Mr. Beales is employed at the chocolate works. After an extended trip through the North Woods the couple will reside in Fulton. While absent Mr. and Mrs. Beales will visit friends and relatives at Malone, Ft. Covington, St. Regis Falls and Westville.

The members of the Sunday school class to which Mr. and Mrs. Beales belonged learned of the approaching marriage and had made plans for a noisy reception. Twice during the past week a number of the class members have laid in wait at the parsonage with the usual supply of rice, shoes, etc., but the objects of attack did not appear.

The marriage license was taken out Tuesday night and when the safety signs appeared the elected ones appeared at the minister's residence; later making a safe retreat.

BEARDSLEY—MARVIN

Mr. Miller H. Beardsley and Miss Nellie M. Marvin were married by the Rev. Mr. Barrett at the First M. E. parsonage last night. The wedding was an extremely quiet one, as no one was present except the attendants who were Miss Lena May Demass and Mr. Lee M. Sullivan. A brief honeymoon is being enjoyed by Mr. and Mrs. Beardsley, who will upon their return to the city live in Utica street.

MANY ENTERTAINMENTS IN HONOR OF BRIDE-ELECT

Miss May Rosenbloom, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harris Rosenbloom, will be married to Harvey Shriber tonight at 6:30 at the Onondaga hotel, Syracuse. The Rev. Mr. Coblenz of Syracuse will officiate.

Miss Rosenbloom has been the recipient for a week of many entertainments at the hands of friends. Parties and showers of various kinds were given, and last night the bride-elect entertained in honor of the large number of relatives who are here to attend the wedding, which will not be elaborate. Only the immediate relatives and friends of the couple have been invited to witness the ceremony.

A number of pre-nuptial gifts have been received by Miss Rosenbloom.

COURT TAKES SHORT RECESS

No Business Ready for Judge Ross in Supreme Court Yesterday, He Excused the Jurors.

Oswego.—A jury in Supreme Court yesterday found for the defendant in the action to replevin a moving picture show in Phoenix brought by Arthur I. Melvin against Grover A. Woodard. O. M. Reilly of Phoenix was defendant's attorney and it was alleged heh ad not met the conditions in a mortgage of $2,000 given as part payment for the picture-house. The jury found that Woodard was entitled to the possession of the property; that if the plaintiff did not deliver it to him, he should pay him $1,200, and that damages in the sum of $150 should be paid the defendant for detention of the property.

The only case on the day calendar for yesterday was that of Mary A. Patridge against the Empire United Railways for $10,000 damages. When this was called it was announced as settled, so there was nothing more for Judge Ross to take up. He adjourned court and excused the jurors until tomorrow morning.

The next case will probably be that of Cessare Sconfetti, as admt., etc., of Nicola Piga, deceased, against the Steam Carriage Boiler Company. Plaintiff through J. T. McCaffrey, asks $25,000 damages for the death of Piga, who was struck and killed by an automobile owned by the defendant company at Minetto last fall.

The grand jury will be occupied for the next two weeks at least, according to District Attorney Culkin. The jury is considering criminal cases from various parts of the county, among the charges being that of criminal assault, burglary, grand larceny and assaults.

Witnesses in the charges of alleged violation of the excise law will probably not be called until next week. Indictments will probably be handed up a week from Friday netx.

MEN RECOVERING FROM FALL RECEIVED YESTERDAY

Yesterday when a scaffold collapsed at the Oswego Pulp and Paper Company's works, J. T. Donahue, William Brown and Robert Wallace, workmen, were thrown twenty-five feet to a cement flooring beneath and severely bruised.

The men were engaged in plastering the ceiling of one of the new buildings when the scaffold broke. All were stunned by the fall, but Dr. Joy when summoned found no serious injury was sustained. Mr. Donahue will undergo an X-ray examination today that the physician may determine if his ankle is fractured. The other two men are recovering from their many bruises.

An iron brace holding the platform, it was afterwards discovered, contained a flaw.

PEAR BLOSSOM TIME IN FULTON—AT MERRILLS

Mr. and Mrs. S. W. Merrill have pear trees in their garden at 215 Erie st., and other folks have them, too, which does not make up a real story, but when it comes to telling that the Merrills, in picking pears yesterday found high upon the top of one tree a branch containing a few blossoms, they at once decided that the news should reach the notice of the general public. The Evening Times was notified and now nearly everybody in Fulton, and many persons in the country surrounding this city, know by reading this paper that while apple blossom time comes in the spring, pear blossom time is about any old time.

RAGGED WORK BY REGULARS

Instruction Took the Place Yesterday of Scrimmages ---Kraus Looks to Coach Like a Punter.

Practice of the High school football team yesterday afternoon was held on a muddy field. The ball was slippery and could not be handled. The workout, on that account, was ragged at times and it is evident that the members of the squad must learn to handle themselves on a muddy field. Before the season is over regular elevens may have to be played on gridirons in just such bad shape as the athletic field was in yesterday.

Coach Merrill made several experiments. First of all he has his eye on Kraus to develop him as a punter. The coach tried out Kraus at tackle. M. Frawley and Kraus exchanged positions several times during the afternoon. No scrimmage was held, most of the time being devoted to instruction. Position on the line, method changing, etc., were the chief items in the drill. Only two more practice sessions remain before the game Saturday with Baldwinsville High, and today and tomorrow the coach will probably follow a policy of constant drilling to develop individual as well as team work.

SOME HIGH STANDARDS SACRIFICED FOR POLITICS

Washington (Special Correspondence.)—The demoralization of the navy under Josephus Daniels has been constantly evident, and never more so than now, as a result of the cyclonic upheaval which has recently occurred at the Naval Academy.

Last June it was discovered that some of the cadets at Annapolis had burglarized the desks of their instructors and had secured copies of the annual examination papers. An investigation which was made by the academy authorities implicated several young men, among whom were some who possessed that most inestimable treasure, according to the Daniels standard, a political pull. Two Democratic Congressmen—Hay and Carlin of Virginia—hot-footed to Annapolis and took up the defense of their political favorites who had been detected in this serious breach of honor. Messrs. Hay and Carlin were unable to convince the high-minded naval officers whom they found at Annapolis that the standards of a Virginia police court were applicable to the United States Navy; so they betook themselves to Washington and laid their case before Josephus Daniels. Now it so happened that the dragnet at Annapolis seemed perilously near to sweeping those North Carolina shoals where Josephus Daniels lives, moves and has political being; and he lent a ready ear to the Congressional advocates who were trying to set up politics instead of honor as the as the guiding spirit for American naval officers. As a result of the recommendations of the academy board were whittled down to include only those cases which were too flagrant for even Daniels to overlook, and thus the impressionable youth at Annapolis were given to understand that the rigid system of honor which has been the standard of the navy from its first days is not to be held operative when two Democratic Congressmen can get the private ear of a Democratic Secretary of the Navy.

This breaking down of the standards was ab itter dose for the Navy. Admiral Fullam, the Superintendent at Annapolis, asked to be transferred in order to show his resentment; and he was sent to an inferior post of duty on the West Coast. The other officers at Annapolis expressed their feeling less vigorously but to the same tenor—and now every man of them who occupies an important post at the Naval Academy has been ordered away.

Thei ncident is regarded here, especially in naval circles, as a plain serving of notice that politics rules the navy today, that honorable standards a century old cannot resist the pressure of modern political necessity. To add to the injury which has been done, there is a more or less direct charge of double-dealing on Daniels' part. It is said that he told the officers at Annapolis that he would sustain them to the limit in their efforts to maintain the honorable traditions of the Navy and that they would have the whole of the next academic year to put their notions into practice. Now, out of a clear sky, comes a sweeping order in repudiation of all that these high-minded men have been trying to do, and the Naval Academy has been made to serve as a plaything for Democratic politicians.

In the latest issue of its monthly magazine, the Chamber of Commerce of the United States publishes some pertinent facts and figures regarding the commercial development of Germany. Among other things, it is recorded that in May, 1914, before war was even dreamed of, Germany shipped to the United States goods valued at more than $14,500,000. In May, 1915, the exports from Germany to this country amounted to only $3,172,000. In other words, the war saved the producing classes of this country more than $11,000,000 in expenditures in one country in one month. It is difficult to comprehend how any wage earner or any other man interested in the industrial prosperity of this country can read those figures and still advocate a tariff law thati nvites Germany and other nations to supply our markets with the products of their workmen while American workmen are idle.

"KAISER" THE VICTIM OF FRIGHTFUL ATROCITY

"Kaiser," a dog owned by Mrs. E. J. Penfield, came to an untimely end early this week, when after a couple days' illness he bacame a true "dead doggie."

Mrs. Penfield, who is spending a few days in the North Woods left "Kaiser" in charge of a neighbor. When "Kaiser's" indisposition was noted a veterinary surgeon was called but to no avail. An autopsy was performed and powdered glass was found in the animal's stomach.

It now seems fitting to call the Allies to account for this atrocity. "Kaiser" was an aggressive creature and no doubt the Allies united in the absence of the generals-in-chief, to silence his majesty—the Kaiser.

The Teutons have been accused of gases, bombs and Kultur, but of powdered glass,—Oh, never.

BOARDS OF TRADE BACK CANAL PLAN

Party Lines Set Aside In Urging Approval of Canal Referendum.

The state committee on canal referendum, directing the campaign to secure the approval of the electors of the state at the coming election of the barge canal referendum bill authorizing the issue of $27,000,000 for the completion of the barge canals and the payment of all costs involved, was formed as the result of a conference in New York city on June 23 last, called by the chamber of commerce of the state of New York.

The men who attended this conference and formed the state committee on canal referendum comprise the leaders of commercial, industrial, mercantile, financial, educational, professional and other activities of the state irrespective of political affiliations.

Seth Low, former president of Columbia university, former mayor of New York and president of the New York chamber of commerce, is chairman of the state committee on canal referendum.

Eugenius H. Outerbridge of the New York chamber of commerce is treasurer. Welding Ring of the New York chamber of commerce, large merchandise exporter, is chairman of the executive committee.

Frank S. Gardner of the New York board of trade and transportation is the secretary of the state committee. Frank Brainard, also of the New York board of trade and transportation is chairman of the state committee's finance committee.

The chairman of the subexecutive committee, directly in touch with the working out of the state wide campaign, is R. A. C. Smith, commissioner of docks of New York city.

Dr. Jacob Gould Schurman, president of Cornell university, is one of the members of the state committee. Other prominent members include: A. Barton Hepburn, Samuel W. Fairchild and Isaac N. Seligman of the New York chamber of commerce; James Ward Warner, E. R. Carhart, W. H. Douglas, John P. Truesdell and Albert Kinkel of the New York Produce Exchange; William H. Gibson, New York board of trade and transportation; William Fellowes Morgan, Herman A. Metz and others of the New York Merchants' association; President Herbert A. Melligam, Henry W. Hill, C. Lee Abell and Howard J. Smith of the Buffalo chamber of commerce; George Clinton, Sr., chairman of the executive committee of the New York State Waterways association; General Francis V. Greene, Frank B. Baird and William A. Rogers, representing power development and extensive industrial interests, Buffalo; George W. Todd of the Rochester chamber of commerce; also James T. Hutchings and Roland B. Woodward, of the same organization, and Frank S. Elsworth of Rochester.

The Syracuse chamber of commerce is represented on the committee by J. R. Clancy, A. W. Hudson, Henry C. Allen and Lachlan Macleay.

John D. Kernan and F. H. Hazard represent the Utica chamber of commerce; Edward N. McKinney and Jacob Y. Read, the Albany chamber of commerce; F. B. Shepard and P. W. Cullinan, the Oswego chamber of commerce; Frank L. Moore, G. C. Burns and George H. Cobb, the Watertown chamber of commerce.

These men are united in the conviction that the canal must be completed without further delay; that the remaining costs for the canal work should be raised by bond issue, spreading the cost over a period of fifty years rather than have the costs become a matter to be raised in a single scoop by direct taxation.

LUMBER FROM WEST VIA BARGE CANAL.

The utilization of the barge canal to bring lumber from the vast forests of the Pacific coast to the chain of industrial and commercial centers across the state of New York is destined to take place within the next two or three years, according to Professor Nelson C. Brown of the forestry school of Syracuse university.

"The forests in New York from which wood pulp paper is made will soon be exhausted. Within two or three years we will be totally dependent on the west for our wood pulp supply." This observation was made upon his return from the west, having just completed a journey of over 12,000 miles. Linking the barge canal with the movement of western lumber, he said:

"There are vast forests on the Pacific coast. Three brothers who live in Cloquet, Minn., own two of these and are fully awake to their possibilities for the manufacture of paper.

"These men are interested in the opening of the barge canal. When it is completed they will be able to ship lumber directly to Syracuse and other points in New York state by water through the Pacific, the Panama canal, up the Atlantic coast to New York, then up the Hudson and the barge canal to its destination.

"The all water route from the Pacific coast, with the short cut through the Panama canal, and then the barge canal traversing the entire state of New York will lower the freight rates and result in the bringing of vast quantities of western lumber here to Syracuse and to other parts of the state."

Professor Brown's tour was made as a representative of the College of Forestry.

WILL ENABLE STATE TO COMPLETE CANAL.

If I vote "Yes" on the canal referendum and it should be approved, what will be the result?

(a) The state will issue its bonds and raise the necessary money to complete the construction work and to meet all the obligations of the state which have arisen from land damages, riparian rights, railroad bridges and other extraordinary expenses unforeseen at the time the original estimates were made in 1903.

(b) The construction work yet to be done on the barge canal will be proceeded with, and the improvement will be completed and opened to commerce within two years.

(c) The payments will be spread over a long period up to fifty years, and the state and all property within it will be receiving the great benefits from the canal and will therefore be better able to meet the payments before they fall due during the fifty years to come.

CANALS WILL PAY OWN WAY

Direct Returns From Erie Canal Great Profit to State.

REFERENDUM NECESSARY.

State is Obligated to Pay Whole Amount and if Not Provided by Bond Issue Must Be Raised by Direct Tax.

Why is it necessary to provide so large a sum as $27,000,000, in addition to the $101,000,000 already provided and expended?

Although the most careful estimates were made by a board consisting of the most competent engineers in the country, in order to provide for every possible contingency and expenditure, the sum of $101,000,000 has proved to be inadequate. But the actual cost of the work of construction has been within the original estimate of such engineers.

The shortage has arisen mainly from decisions of the courts which placed upon the state obligations which could not be foreseen or estimated. These include awards for land damages amounting to over $11,000,000. For this item the most expert information in 1903 provided only $3,000,000. They include the cost of railroad bridges, which in 1903 the act provided should be paid by the railroad, but the court has decided that the state must bear this cost of over $8,000,000 more.

They also include large amounts for riparian rights on the canals, for which no estimate was included because such riparian rights were believed to depend upon revocable permits, but the courts have held that the state must make compensation for such privileges which have been revoked, and also for water rights. They also include the additional cost of locks which were increased from twenty-eight feet to forty-five feet at an additional cost of $2,500,000.

The economy and fidelity with which the whole work has been conducted are illustrated by the fact that of the $200,000 appropriated for the original surveys and estimates of cost in 1900 only $154,000 was expended and $46,000 reverted to the general fund of the state.

It must be also borne in mind that the Erie canal paid into the state treasury over $43,000,000 profit over and above the cost of its original construction and including its improvement, operation, maintenance and repairs down to 1883, when tolls were abolished.

Woman's World

What Femininity Knows About War Was Told by Noted Woman

DR. ANNA HOWARD SHAW.

When Dr. Anna Howard Shaw was speaking the other day she touched on the subject of the war, and a man in the crowd called out, "What does a woman know about war anyhow?"

"Take the newspaper out of your pocket and hold it up," answered Dr. Shaw. "Five hundred and fifty thousand men already sacrificed to the war! You ask what a woman knows about war—550,000 men dead! No woman can understand the horror of the death of 550,000 men. Nobody understands this. But if you were to tell me that one man lay dead I might be able to understand something of its meaning. I might be able to go back over the years and remember that a woman whose heart throbbed with love and sympathy and hope of coming motherhood walked day by day with her face toward an open grave, with a courage so sublime that no man ever surpassed it.

"And then after her child was born that woman in her young womanhood laid aside what every human being of us has—her ambitions for herself—that she might give her life to the life which she had given. And year after year her child grew until he became a man, and the mother looking into the face of that boy knew herself built into him, her life wrought into his life. Then in an hour that wonderful thing, that beautiful spirit, was called out, and he lay dead. And while that mother is looking into his dead face some one asks, 'What does a woman know about war?'" then under a box plait. Skunk fur trims the metal braided collar and cuffs, and ball buttons lend a finishing touch. The trim sailor is of navy satin with cut brim and silk tabs.

Raspberry Sirup.

This is a very refreshing drink and is especially recommended for the invalid, to whom a cooling drink with tart flavor is appetizing. Boil the raspberries and strain, and to one pint of the strained juice add one pound of granulated sugar. Let it stand overnight. In the morning boil it again for about ten minutes and then bottle. When serving put two tablespoonfuls in a glass of cold water.

POPULAR MECHANICS

Temper For Butcher Knives.

Above all, use good steel and forge at an orange heat as much as possible then finish by refining the steel to a low heat with water and light hammering, but don't let the steel get cold enough for the water to set on it, as at that heat it would tend to crystallize the steel, says the Blacksmith and Wheelwright. Now reheat to a low red and lay it down until it gets cool enough, so that a pine stick rubbed or scraped on the edge will not brown then dip in hot machine or linseed oil and lay down until cold. This keeps the air from the steel and removes the strain, or, in other words, equalizes the steel, thus preventing cracking and springing out of shape and also to remove all hard spots caused by forging. Now heat to a bright cherry color and plunge in the same oil; remove and wipe the oil off. You will find that it can be bent or straightened on the anvil, but the air, which is life to everything, soon hardens the steel. When cold draw your temper with a furnace or a piece of hot iron to a purple or dark blue and then let the air finish cooling it.

Soft Hammers.

For driving bolts and keys and straps and other work about machinery a babbitt or lead hammer is better than a copper hammer, which hardens the more it is used, says the Automobile Dealer and Repairer. To keep the lead hammer from getting out of shape take a piece of copper pipe, drill a hole in one side of it and fit with a handle, and then fill in the hollow of the copper pipe with lead. Even better than the lead hammer are hardwood blocks on end. Put against part to be driven and strike with a hammer.

Tempering Drills.

Work your drills at a low heat and hammer them well so as to pack the steel. Then when you have finished your drill lay on the forge to cool down. When cold heat to whatever degree of heat that your steel will harden at. Do not get a long heat on the bit, but as short as possible. Then plunge in water with the chill taken off the water and leave in the tub till perfectly cold, and you will not have much trouble with your drills breaking off.

Electric Vulcanizer For Tires.

With an electric vulcanizer just brought out it is possible to vulcanize a patch or casing cut as well and as quickly, according to reports, as it can be done in a garage, says Popular Mechanics. The new vulcanizer is a light and compact device that operates on six volts and takes its current from the storage battery of the car. It is equipped with six feet of cord and can be connected with any light socket on the car. A thermometer attached to the vulcanizer permits the heat to be regulated to any required degree.

Black Varnish For Iron.

A good black varnish for cast iron and forgings can be made of half a pound of lampblack, half a pound of resin, one pound of asphaltum, one quart of turpentine spirits and a small quantity of linseed oil. The lampblack is first rubbed up with the linseed oil, no more oil being used than necessary for this purpose. The other ingredients are then mixed with it thoroughly. The varnish will be found to be durable.—Blacksmith and Wheelwright.

When to Use Bronze Bearings.

For bearings that must stand heavy pressures some form of bronze or brass is used. A bronze or a phosphor bronze is best when the bearing must also stand high temperatures, such as the piston pin bearing of a gas engine where the piston is attached to the end of the connecting rod. Here the bushing must withstand the heavy pressure and high temperatures produced by the explosions within the engine cylinder.

Deodorizing Lard Buckets.

Lard buckets are the most easily obtained and the most satisfactory of utensils in which to pack food or cook for a small picnic or camping party, but it is very difficult to remove the odor of the lard. This may be easily accomplished by boiling the grounds from the coffeepot in the bucket with about one pint of water.

Care of the Varnish Brush.

Turpentine is bad to keep the varnish brush in, because it not only impairs the spring or elasticity of the brush, but the turpentine gets into the varnish and causes specks.

Varnishing a Tennis Racket.

An easy way to put varnish in the grooves of a tennis racket is to use a medicine dropper.

SUBDUED COLORS INFLUENCE DRESS DESIGNS.

Chic, comfortable and stylish, this one-piece frock of brown gabardine, trimmed satin girdle and lace vest meets every demand of the season's wardrobe.

Because the smart dressmakers of the old world are using subdued colors this season it necessarily follows that they are selecting the most simple designs possible for their frocks. Gabardine in an appealing shade of brown is used for this costume, which is trimmed only with a satin girdle, lace vest and braid-stitched pockets.

The flare collar, which may be rolled back if desired, is made of crisp, sheer organdy. In average size the costume requires 4⅞ yards 44-inch gabardine, with ⅝ yard satin for the girdle and ⅜ yard lace for the vest.

Today's lesson will be confined to the making of the frock. Starting with the waist, the slashed edges are first turned under on slot perforations. Next, bring the upper slot perforations to small "o" perforations and tack. Gather shoulder edge of front and lower edges of front and back between double "TT" perforations. Close under-arm and shoulder seams as notched. Face flare collar and sew to neck edge as notched. Sew stay to lower edge of front and back, centers and small "o" perforations even, large "O" perforation at under-arm seam, and bring front edge to center-front; ease any fulness to fit stay from slash to center-front.

The seam of the sleeve is now closed, after which the seam of turn-back cuff is stitched as notched. Face cuff and sew to sleeve, single large "O" perforations and seams even; then sew sleeve in armhole with as little fulness as possible.

Next, take the skirt. Turn under front edge of right front gore on slot perforations; lap on left gore, centers even (large "O" perforations indicate center-front); stitch to position, leaving edges free above single large "O" perforation for opening. Join gores as notched, close center-back seams. Gather upper edge between double "TT" perforations. Large "O" perforations in pocket indicate front edge. Gather upper edge between double "TT" perforations and sew lap to gathered edge, notches even. Underface the tab to ½ inch above small "o" perforations, turn over on outside on small "o" perforations and tack upper edge to position. Adjust pocket on front gore, upper edge along crossline of small "o" perforations. Sew skirt to lower edge of waist over stay, centers even, side seam at under-arm seam; tack the end of waist to position skirt, leaving opening to pass girdle through.

Gather the girdle along edge between double "TT" perforations, draw gathers to the required size. Adjust, slipping through opening in tab and close on left side.

Since buttons are so fashionable as a trimming this year, they may be used as plentifully as desired in the trimming of this gown.

SPAIN WANTS OUR COAL.

Turns Here For Her Supply as Result of British Embargo.

Washington. — The British embargo on coal is giving the coal operators of Spain and other countries concern as to the source of future supply. In a report received at the department of commerce Consul Dawson, at Valencia, Spain, says that, while the coal deposits in northern Spain will this year be called on for larger shipments, the low value of the product is such that an outside supply must be had. Railroads and manufactories rely on the imported coal, and of late there have been large importations of American gas coal for railroad use with good results.

The quantity required for heating purposes among the people is comparatively limited, as the climate is not severe and much charcoal is used. Gas heating is, however, becoming more general, and therefore outside coal is necessary. Before the war England had this trade entirely to herself, but now American coal is being imported in considerable quantities. Whatever gains American coal may make in the Spanish market will in all probability be only temporary, as England takes nearly all the output of many industries in Spain.

CIVIL WAR DISK RETURNED.

Sent to Widow of Soldier Killed at Petersburg.

Harrisburg, Pa.—An identification disk worn by Eli Johnston Ague, a Pennsylvania soldier killed in one of the battles before Petersburg, Va., in the civil war, has been sent to the widow of the soldier, Mrs. Matilde Ague of Oil City, by Adjutant General Thomas J. Stewart after she had been searched for for months.

Officials of the war department at Washington and of the adjutant general's department here, members of regimental associations, officers of Grand Army posts, individuals and newspapers participated in the effort to find the widow.

The disk was dug up on the battlefield of Cedar mountain, Virginia, by J. R. Leman, who took it to Raleigh T. Green, editor of the Culpepper Exponent. It bore a device frequently seen on such articles in the civil war and the name of Ague, stating that he was a member of Company B, Tenth Pennsylvania Reserves.

FURNITURE COVERS.

It is especially necessary to have looseness in a slip cover. There must be plenty of "give" to it. Otherwise when one sits on it it is apt to burst open, which would be most disconcerting, particularly if it happened to be some one else's chair.

The strip which runs from the extreme top of the chair back down to the seat, across the seat and on down to the required length, should be cut lengthwise of the goods without piecing.

Before cutting it should be tucked well into the crease between the seat and the back. The narrow fronts of the arms are cut separately.

The arm's inner side is cut lengthwise and extends over the roll, under which another seam occurs. The outside of the arm is cut in one with the side of the seat.

The rear side of the chair back is cut in two lengthwise pieces, with the opening up the middle. The back's "thickness" will also need a small piece, extending to the arm.

The fasteners are balls and sockets, or buttons and buttonholes, or, in some instances, little bows. The balls and sockets are used for the back openings or for little tabs when seam openings are used.

A WOMAN OF DEEP MYSTERY

Tale of Strange Happenings at an Army Post.

Few United States army people remember the mystery which occurred at Fort C. many years ago, a mystery which has never to this day and doubtless never will be revealed. Those under whose notice it took place are now either on the retired list or dead. Yet here and there dozing over a newspaper at some army or navy club a white headed old man may be found who can give the circumstances.

One day away back in the last century guests were assembling at the quarters of Colonel Athern, commanding Fort C., to celebrate the wedding of the colonel's niece, Miss Roxana Bonfield, with Lieutenant Reginald Allen. Allen had secured a leave or had been sent away on some duty—it was claimed that he was purposely absent—and was to have returned for a bachelor farewell dinner he was to give on the evening before the wedding. There were no mails or telegraphs handy at that time by which he could send any word, and when he did not appear for the dinner it was supposed he had been unavoidably detained. But when the garrison clock struck 12 the next day, the hour appointed for the ceremony, and he did not appear there was a hum of surprise.

Allen never did appear again at Fort C. The lady he was to have married bore the slight put upon her so well, never uttering a word of blame, that she received the sympathy of every one. Not a person at the fort who afterward met Lieutenant Allen—he offered no explanation of his conduct—but gave him a dead cut.

Five years after his disappointment Miss Bonfield engaged herself to Captain Gregg. The engagement occurred just before Gregg was ordered to another post. Certain young wags with more love of saying mean things than delicacy debated among themselves if Gregg would behave as Allen had behaved. But Gregg, after being engaged for six months, during all of which time he was absent from his fiancee, returned in ample time for the wedding.

There is no record that any disagreement ever occurred between Captain and Mrs. Gregg. During the first few months of their marriage Gregg appeared as a devoted and happy husband. Then one day when he went on duty he gave evidence of having received a shock. To inquiries as to his health he replied that he was never better. Nevertheless he had a hunted look and lost flesh till his uniform hung about him in deep creases. While the loving devotion he had shown his wife did not continue, he was perfectly respectful and attentive to her. What surprised every one was that she did not treat him or appear to worry about him as a sick man.

Gregg finally got a year's leave and went abroad—without his wife. At the end of the year he returned in fair condition, but with something of the hunted look left, and rejoined his wife. In six months he was sent to a retreat, where he died a few years later.

Mrs. Gregg was now a woman of twenty-eight. She had no children and did not look her age. The unfortunate endings of her love affairs had not seemed to cast any cloud over her. She was not at all depressed. She appeared simply as any other young woman whose husband had died and left her a widow. Her widowhood was short. In eighteen months after Gregg's death she became the wife of Major Thurston. Then the young wags wondered if she was going to climb the ladder of rank till she married a general.

Thurston's sister, an army woman, begged him not to marry Mrs. Gregg. But when the brother asked for reasons he got nothing except what has been told thus far in this story—that is, that the woman had been treated shamefully by her first fiance and that her husband had died of some brain or nervous trouble. The major declined to act the part of the first and saw no reason why he should fear the fate of the second. The sister still protested; but, without a reason, he declined to change his course. He married Mrs. Gregg and ten weeks later committed suicide.

Thurston is not the first man who has made a mistake by not heeding a woman's warning because no good or sufficient reason accompanied it. Women have been known to be right in condemning a man from the shape of his nose. However, there was not the slightest proof that Mrs. Thurston had any direct or indirect influence on her husband's suicide. What surprised every one was that this climax to her unfortunate matrimonial affairs seemed to have no more effect upon her than either of the other cases. She seemed perfectly passive under each and all of them. Nevertheless she did not marry again, though it was reported that several men at different times were attentive to her. It was supposed that on learning her marital record they desisted.

Mrs. Gregg-Thurston died when she was past fifty. No explanation was ever given of the blight that fell on her lovers, but there was a story told by the physician who brought her into the world that her mother a few months before the child's birth had [illegible] frightened by a snake.

PEACH Butter.—Any of the cheap peaches will lend themselves to peach butter. At this time all peaches should be washed before paring. The peaches are fuzzy and dusty, and if not washed the parings are not fit to use for sirup. To each quart of pared and cut peaches add one cupful of water, one cupful of granulated sugar and one-half teaspoonful of salt; put into a porcelain lined kettle and bring to a boil quickly, skim, then boil slowly for one hour. Some peaches are more juicy than others. In that case they must boil longer or less water used. The peach must not separate. The butter can be flavored with a little ground cinnamon or spice if desired. Sterilize the jars and fill while hot.

Pear Marmalade.—Choose nice, fine flavored pears; pare, core and quarter and drop into cold water. When ready to use drain and weigh, and to each pound of fruit allow three-fourths of a pound of sugar. Pour over just enough water to cover and simmer until tender. Make a sirup with the sugar and some of the water in which the pears were boiled; add to this sirup lemons sliced very thin, using about one lemon to each six pounds of fruit. Boil the sirup until thick, then add the pears and simmer until they are clear. Pack the fruit into jars and pour the sirup over it.

Green Tomato Butter.—Slice eight pounds of green tomatoes very thin and chop one orange and one lemon very fine, being careful to remove the seeds. Boil together one hour, add five pounds of sugar, a small teacupful of vinegar and cook until it becomes a clear, smooth mass. [illegible] glasses.

French Troops Capture Town and Hill; Few Changes East and West

London.—There is little change in the military situation on any of the various war fronts.

Reports, which remain unconfiremd, are that an Austro-German force, variously estimated at from 100,000 to 500,000 men, with 2,000 guns is proceeding through Southern Hungary to attack Serbia. Military observers here, however. assert that a figure between these estimates probably would be nearer the truth, declaring that there is no evidence of any very heavy withdrawals of Teutonic troops from the Russian front, and that the Western front every day is demanding new drafts.

These observers say the Germans are not in a position to withdraw many troops from the Russian side, as the armies of the Emperor are making a desperate effort to assume the initiative in the fighting. On some sectors Petrograd reports that the Russians already have succeeded in doing this. Besides, it is asserted, they have now held up Field Marshal von Hindenburg's drive against Dvinsk for several weeks and inflicted very serious losses on him.

In the West the big guns are seemingly preparing a way for a continuation of the offensive of the Allies, which the Germans doubtless will try to forestall by an attack from their side. In Champagne the French have captured the village of Tahure and the summit of the hill of Tahure, which is situated at a point in the German second line of defense.

The Italians record another advance toward Rovereto, which has so many times been reported as evacuated by the Austrians.

The heavy losses sustained by the British and French in their attempts to penetrate the German lines in France and the large number of men required for the operations along the Euphrates river and in the Dardanelles and the Balkans have made necessary a further appeal for the enlistment of men throughout the country. The Earl of Derby, who is directing recruiting and who is receiving the assistance of the labor organizations in his work, has taken charge of the campaign, the object of which is to obtain at least 30,000 men weekly. Should it fail it seems fairly certain that Parliament will adopt a national service bill.

BULGARIAN ULTIMATUM SENT TO SERBIA; REPORT

London.—The Greek crisis and the severance of diplomatic relations between Russia and Bulgaria are the absorbing features of the war.

The Russian, French, British and Italian ministers at Sofia, soon after the presentation of Bulgaria's reply to the Russian ultimatum, requested their passports from the Bulgarian government on the ground that the reply was unsatisfactory. This was followed by a similar request by the Serbian Minister.

Divided by the avowed determination of the King of Greece not to assent to the ultimate policy of Premier Venizelos and a majority of the Parliament that Greece should come to the aid of Serbia, her treaty ally, the populace of the Helenic kingdom has taken sides for and against the war, King Constantine and his followers for the moment, at least, being in the ascendancy.

The Greek Cabinet has resigned and a coalition ministry headed by Alexander Zaimis, and in which Venizelos, "the master of Greece," will have no portfolio, is probable; Bulgaria has declined to accede to Russia's ultimatum that she have done with the Teutonic powers, and the breaking off of diplomatic relations between the two countries, and probably with all the Entente powers and Serbia, has resulted; King Ferdinand's government is reported to have sent an ultimatum to Serbia demanding Serbia's acquiescence in Bulgaria's demand for the cession of Macedonia; French troops will continue to land in Greece and proceed through that country to the aid of Serbia, and, if need be, against Bulgaria and the Teutonic allies, regardless of the Greek crisis—these are the main developments in the Balkan situation.

Whether King Constantine will be able to keep his country out of war against the wishes of the followers of Venizelos is still to be answered. Behind Constantine is said to be the Greek general staff and the court party. That Venizelos is strong in his conviction and that a majority of the people of Greece are with him in his belief that Greece should maontain her treaty agreement with Serbia, is indicated in official dispatches and correspondence.

Roumania's policy has not yet been announced. Her troops continue mobilizing along the Bulgarian boundary, however, and a fact that may be entirely outside her ultimate plans is found in a new Russian attack against the Austrians in Bukowina near the Northern Roumanian frontier, where the hostilities had been in abeyance for a long time.

QUIET WEDDING, SAYS MRS. GALT

Bride-Elect Is of Democratic Tastes and May Prefer to Hold Ceremony at Home.

Washington.—Woodrow Wilson, the President of the United States, announced tonight his engagement to Mrs. Norman Galt, of Washington. The date of thew edding has not been fixed but it probably will take place in December at the home of the bride-elect.

The brief announcement from the White House made by Secretary Tuintylu came as a surprise to official Washington, but to a number of intimate friends, it has long been expected. From this circle came tonight the story of a friendship whose culmination was viewed as a happy turn in the troubled and lonely life of the nation's chief executive.

It was Miss Margaret Wilson and her cousin, Miss Bones, who drew Mrs. Galt into the White House circle They met her first in the early autumn of last year and were so attracted by her that they sought her out more frequently and the friendship between them rapidly ripened into an affectianate intimacy. Mrs. Galt spent a month this summer at Cornish as the house guest of the President's eldest sister.

It was throug hthis intimacy of his daughter and cousin that the President had an opportunity to meet and know Mrs. Galt. One of the most interesting facts about the engagement, as told by friends, is that the President's daughters should have chosen Mrs. Galt for their admiration and friendship before their father died.

Mrs. Galt is 38.

Mrs. Galt is the widow of a business man of Washington, who died eight years ago, leaving a jewelry business which still bears his name. She has lived in Washington since her marriage in 1896. She is about 38 years old and was Miss Edith Bolling, born in Wytheville, Va., where her girlhood was spent, and where her father, William H. Bolling, was a prominent lawyer.

In the circle of people who have known Mrs. Galt for many years she has been regarded as an unusual beauty, gifted with natural charm.

For many weeks Mrs. Galt and her relatives have been frequent dinner guests at the White House. Often she has accompanied the President on motor trips. She is not quite as tall as Mr. Wilson, has dark hair and dark eyes, and always in stylish attire. Her tastes are said to be strikingly similar to those of the President, with a deep interest in literature and charity work.

Friends of the President expressed their pleasure over the announcement tonight, not only because of Mr. Wilson's personal happiness, but because they felt this new companionship would give him support and comfort in his home life—a vital need during the hours of strain over the nation's problems.

With the marriage of two daughters and the death of Mrs. Wilson more than a year ago, the President's life had become one of solitude. His absorption in official labors began to tell on him physically and when a few months ago he began to take a renewed interest in personal affairs, his friends and members of the family welcomed the distinct change which it brought about in his health and spirits.

Plans Not Made.

Tonight—at the end of a busy day for the President during which he announced that he would vote for woman suffrage—Mrs. Galt was a dinner guest at the White House.

The news of the engagement was given out in this brief statement:

"The announcement was made today of the engagement of Mrs. Norman Galt, of this city, and President Woodrow Wilson."

No word as to plans for the wedding was said to be available as yet but it generally is presumed that Mrs. Galt, who is of democratic tastes, will prefer a private wedding in her own home instead of in the White House. Grover Cleveland was the last President to be married in the White House.

Should Mr. Wilson eventually decide to be married there it will be the third wedding in the mansion under his administration, the first between his Jessie Woodrow Wilson and Francis B. Sayre being held in the East room, and the second between Secretary McAdoo and Miss Eleanor Wilson being solemnized in the Blue room.

The wedding, it is understood, will take place before the first of the series of state receptions and dinners is held.

Since the return of the President to Washington he and Mrs. Galt have spent many evenings together, sometimes at the White House and often at her home. Last week she occupied a prominent seat in the President's reviewing stand at the G. A. R. parade.

The President was in a happy mood tonight. The satisfactory settlement of the Arabic case and the disposition of many other important questions pending, together with the announcement of his engagement, had buoyed his spirits.

Scene from "Bringing Up Father."

BRINGING UP FATHER

As a rule plays are written for the purpose of making folks laugh, cannot boast of continuity of plot or story, however, in Bringing Up Father, the latest Gus Hill offering, which comes to The Quirk Theater, commencing Monday, October 11, for a stay of ... night; there is no doubt there is no trouble in following a tale strictly human and engrossing from every standpoint. The character are flesh and blood creations and not exaggerated types one might expect to see in similar contributions. This piece in its entirety, even from a literary angle, is the best production Mr. Hill has fostered during his long career as a producing manager. The piece which was suggested by the popular cartoons of George McManus, is in three acts. Action is ripe from curtain to curtain and interest is never permitted to lag one iota. During the development of the plot at least a dozen song hits are introduced along with a number of unique and original novelties. A competent critic has christened the production "A Singing and Dancing Comedy," apparently the appellation has been aptly applied.

MISS AGNES FRAWLEY'S DAMAGE CASE AFFIRMED; APPEAL IS DISMISSED

Judge Coville in opinions handed down yesterday affirmed the judgment in the action of Miss Agnes Frawley vs. N. Y., O. & W. Railway Company, amounting to $529.96, and dismisses the appeal from the order of City Judge H. J. Wilson, denying a motion of the defendant for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence.

Miss Frawley brought a suit for damages against the railroad company through her attorney Thomas L. McKay, alleging that while alighting from a passenger coach her skirt caught in the handle of a misplaced brake lever, projecting between the steps, and threw her heavily resulting in painful injuries. The action was tried before Joudge Wilson in City Court in January last and a verdict given for the plaintiff for $500.

Following this judgment, the defendant appealed to the County Court. Later, the defendant, through Attorney Cullinan, moved for a new trial on the ground that he had discovered evidence that Miss Frawley had been injured in an accident in March, 1913, by falling, and had settled with Lou B. Cleveland, the contractor on the new bridge, whereas she had sworn on the trial that she had never before been injured. Judge Wilson denied this motion, claiming that as an appeal had already been taken from the pudgment, the court had no jurisdiction and could not entertain the motion for a new trial. This position is sustained by Judge Coville.

When the appeal from the judgment was argued before Judge Coville, Mr. Cullinan, in his affidavit, claimed that Miss Frawley's high-heeled French shoes caused the accident. He claimed also that she did not take hold of the hand-rail of the car in descending.

Judge Coville holds that the evidence that the accident was caused by the plaintiff's skirt, catching on the projecting end of the brake lever, is convincing, and that as the car was standing still, the plaintiff had her arms full of bundles, she was not obliged to take hold of the hand-rail. She had no knowledge of the misplaced brake lever, he finds.

REGISTRATION LIGHT DURING EARLY HOURS IN ELEVEN DISTRICTS

The polls for the registration of voters opened this morning at 7 o'clock and reports from the various districts show a light registration during the earlier part of the day. Election officers predict heavier work during the afternoon and evening until closing hour at 10 o'clock. Next Friday and Saturday are also designated as registration days.

The law provides that voters in the eleven districts of the city which are included in the six wards must register in person or they will not be eligible to vote on November 2.

The voting places in Fulton are:

1st ward, first district—Langdon's barn, Worth st.; second district—John Crahan's store, Kellogg and W. 3rd sts.

2nd ward, first district—Howe block, W. Broadway; 2nd distrist—J. W. Stevenson's barn, 557 W. 1st st.

3rd ward, first district—Frank Dunn's barn, 460 E. 1st st.; 2nd district—Paige's marble shop, East Broadway.

4th ward—Foster's barber shop, 115 S. 2nd st., West Side.

5th ward, 1st district—City Hall, 67 S. 1st st.; 2nd district—Jenning's garage, S. 7th st.

6th ward, 1st district—Frank Hyde's barn, 114 N. 6th st.; 2nd district—Freeman's boat house, 505 Seneca st.

It will cost the city approximately $1,000 for registration this year, the increase being due to the change in election districts. In the last city election only six polling places were maintained, while this year there are eleven in each ward with the exception of the Fourth being divided into two districts. There is only one polling place in the Fourth ward, at Myron Foster's shop, 155 E. 2nd st.

Today is thel ast day for filing the expense accounts of candidates. W. L. Woodbury, candidate for County Committeeman in the Fifth ward, declares that auto hire, postage, etc., cost him $14, while H. C. Webb expended just $6.

PREVENTION WORTH MANY CURES

The executive secretary of the National Fire Prevention Association calls attention to the necessity of impressing upon them inds of people the following program:

That on October 9 all public buildings, factories and homes be thoroughly cleansed of rubbish accumulations.

That all heating, lighting and fire extinguishing apparatus be examined, and if found defective promptly repairea.

That fire drills be held in all schools factories and other places where fire drills are established.

That lectures be given in the public schools on Friday, October 8, by representatives of the Fire Department on the common hazards of fire, and where such officials are not available that teachers be urged to give such instructions as they may have at their commond on the subject.

Kaiser's "Battering Ram" Invades Serbia

London.—War is again raging fiercely in the Balkans.

Austro-German troops to the number of 400,000, with huge artillery forces, have invaded Serbia at many points. Field Marshal von Mackensen, "the Kaiser's battering-ram," is at their head.

Anglo-French troops, landed at Salonika against the formal protest of the Greek Government, are rushing northward to assist Serbia in stopping the invaders. Their object is to prevent the capture of the Salonika-Nish Railroad, the only source by which the Serbians and their allies can be fed with munitions of war.

Russian cruisers have begun to bombard the Bulgarian port of Varna, on the Black Sea.

The new blow against Serbia followed almost immediately the rupture of diplomatic relations between Sofia and the Entente Allies. The Teutonic armies have with them an enormous amount of heavy artillery, reports from Berlin indicate.

The invaders, according t othe [illegible] report, quickly obtained footholds and were able to [illegible] positions. As soon as all the forces of the Austro-Germans are acress it is expected they will begin to hammer their way toward Nish.

Reports received here indicate that public opinion in Bulgar is far from unanimous in support of King Ferdinand. Mobilization, it is declared, is being carried on with the greatest difficulty.

The King and Premier, Dr. Radoslavoff, however, finally have thrown in their lot with Austria, Germany and Turkey, having after consultation with the Ministers of those countries rejected the demands of Russia for the dismissal of the Austro-German officers who, it is alleged, have been engaged to command the Bulgarian army.

Bulgaria, in fact, denied the presence of such officers, and the Russian, British, French and Italian Ministers have either left or are leaving Sofia. Italy has taken action also by giving to the Bulgarian Minister at Rome his passports.

It is possible that Bulgaria may avoid arousing the Greek people by refraining from attacking Serbia, simply keeping her troops on the border. This would have the effect of preventing Serbia from bringing her full strength to bear against the Austro German attack.

Roumania, the other Balkan State, still is neutral. Roumania has not been heard from, but, like Greece, for the moment is bent on continuing on friendly relations with the belligerents. Doubtless to influence her and the other Balkan States, Russia is reported to have commenced an energetic offensive in Bukowina and to have attacked the Austrian positions northeast of Czernowitz.

French Reach Objective Point in Champagne

London.—In the series of furious attacks the French have been directing on the German positions in Champagne a detachment of infantry yesterday penetrated to Ste. Marie, a station on the Chillerange-Bazancourt Railway, two and a half miles southwest of Somme-Py. The latest advices indicate the force was not strong enough to retain its hold on the railway and was forced to retire in alignment with the rest of the French line. The fact that the railway is the immediate objective of the offensive, however, and that General Jo re's troops have been able to touch it at one pointi ndicates how far the advance has progressed and the imminent danger that confronts the Germans in this area.

Following the capture of Tahure and the hill to the north on Wednesday the battle between Auberive and Ville sur Tourbe has increased intensely. The scene of the most serious fighting yesterday was the Navarin farm, where the Germon counter attacks were particularly vicious. It was from this sector the French succeeded in penetrating to Ste. Marie. Paris reports last night said all the German efforts to assume the offensive have failed and that in addition to the gains at the Navarin farm some progress was made north of Ville sur Tourbe.

Sharp actions developed yesterday in the vicinity of Roye, but Artois provided nothing more than duels with bombs and grenades.

FIRE PREVENTION DAY TOMORROW; NEGLIGENCE A SOURCE OF DANGER

Tomorrow will be observed in nearly every city of the country as fire prevention day. It is the anniversary of the great Chicago fire and has been designated by the Safety First Federation of America.

Fire Commissioner Robert Adamson of New York has approved of the plan and is arranging for a parade and celebration in New York City; has issued a book, "Fire Prevention Lessons," for use in the schools of that city. In other sections of the country public school children are being taught the dangers of fire; but undoubtedly the greatest concerted effort ever made in this direction is in progress right now, while teachers all over the country are laying stress on the meaning and purpose of Fire Prevention Day.

In conversation with Chief Harry L. Waugh, The Evening Times learned his views, as follows:

"Most children consider a fire department in the same light they do a circus; the clanging of bells and the dash up the street always gets a cheer from them. A fire means a gay time for all the kiddies who can get there—except some poor little chap who may have caused the fire and pays the penalty with his life."

Fire Prevention Day, as the Chief suggests, should be used as a warning to the children as well as to the grown-ups. We all need the lesson it presents.

"Word comes from various parts of the country that in a campaign against careless fires, experts are considering the advisability of charging the expense of extinguishing the fire and any damage that accrues, to the persons responsible. Franklin H. Wentworth, Secretary of the National Fire Prevention Association, and one of the country's greatest authorities on all matters relating to this subject, has been forwarding the movement in many directions. In fact, it has already been taken up by several state legislatures, notably Pennsylvania, and the time is certainly not far distant when it will become a national issue.

"We have to pay our own doctor's bills and our own lawyer's fees, so why not our personal fire department expenses due to our carelessness or neglect? For fifteen years, England has had a law whereby the occupant of a house of which the chimney catches fire is forced to pay a fine ranging from sixty cents to five dollars, according to the [illegible]. The [illegible] has been a decided decrease in these minor blazes, simply because the people exercise greater care. In France a business concern must insure its neighbors as well as itself, so that the innocent sufferers may not be left without some indemnity. In Constantinople persons whose property take fire bargain with private individuals equipped with fire pails for the extinguishment of the blaze."

"Don't know quite how it would feel," the Chief continued, "to take down the telephone receiver some day and hear this: "Hello! Hello! Is this the Fire Department?—This is J. Clarence Browne. What do you charge to put out small residential fires? One seems to be bothering us in the library. This is a nine-room, modern dwelling and appears to burn rather easily. Please give me your best cash figures for a prompt call."

A taximeter fire department may not be found entirely practical, but the plan would certainly seem to have the recommendation of both safety and economy. In any event, it fits in well with the spirit of Fire Prevention Day. Many a good citizen, when watching the big parade next Saturday, will be trying to figure out how much it would cost him to have that display of men and equipment come dashing up to his front door—after which he will straightway go home and issue some commands about careless habits and fires.

Masked Men Hold-Up Train, Getting $500,000 in Notes

Wheeling, W. Va.—Two masked men early today help up and robbed a Baltimore & Ohio express train from New York to St. Louis, two miles west of Central, W. Va. Their booty was taken from mail cars, according to reports received here and was believed to be about $500,000.

UNSIGNED BANK NOTES WORTH ABOUT [illegible]

Clarksburg, Va.—Baltimore & Ohio railroad officials here quickly took up the hunt when they were informed of the train robbery at Central Station. The county officials were informed that ther obbers secured from the mail car about 100 registered packages and ninety packages of unsigned bank notes being sent from Washington to banks in the Middle West. The value of the currency was estimated at about $500,000.

TREASURY OFFICILAS GET NO WORD OF ROBBERY

Washington.—No word had reached the comptroller of the currency early today concerning the West Virginia train robbery and officials were at a loss to determine to what banks the stolen notes were destined.

THOUSANDS SEE OPENING GAME TODAY

Philadelphia.—After an all night rain which soaked National League park that it was thought impossible to play the first game today between the Philadelphia Nationals and the Boston Americans for the world's baseball championship, the wind shifted into the northwest, blew away the storm clouds and permitted the sun to shine brightly. At 10:45 the National Commission announced that a game will surely be played, starting at 2 p. m.

Opinions

Mayor Mitchel's Tax Fraud

For approximately every $40,000,000 of increase in the personal property list, as confirmed, one point may be deducted from the tax rate. Conceivably the rate might thus be kept within 2 per cent., but at what cost to the city!

Dead men cannot "swear off." Men removed from the city need not. Poor men, assessed at absurd figures by guesswork from directories often will not. The assets column will be burdened even more than in the past with uncollectable taxes, and the city must in the end foot the bill, plus compound interest, in tax deficiency appropriations.

A tax rate to deceive was made by the McClellan administration party by swollen tax lists, partly by borrowing money for current expenses. The cruder of these devices is now less used. The subtler one is pushed to an extreme of which no previous administration has ever dreamed. This is a blunder not only in finance but in politics.

After insuring local economies, the city should have made an honest tax rate, however high, and put the blame where it belongs—on the state government, which looted the city with an unnecessary direct tax of $14,000,000.

A tax rate high but honest would have been a masterstroke of clean finance, a true pay-as-you-go policy. It would have emphasized the necessity of home rule. The chance is lost. Not Albany tyranny and profligacy but a local tax policy of futility, if not of false pretenses, is today the general object of attack.—N. Y. World.

LaPORTE'S GROCERY

YOU ARE INVITED

"Oh, wad some power the giftie gie us to see oursel's as ithers see us"—Yes, and then when some one does show us we either get mad or refuse to look.

Suppose some individual with an all-seeing eye, and all-hearing ear an all-intelligent mind should walk into our city, interview us collectively and individually as to the faults of Fulton, what would be the sum and substance of the frank expressions? Wouldn't it be that there is a lack of community spirit? Perhaps some one would say, "There's no pulling together in this town; another might criticise his neighbor's faults, another the methods employed by the business men in the city, and another comment on the lack of loyalty of persons who shop in other places, but, all boiled down, doesn't it mean an absence of community spirit?

Think. Aside from the churches, fraternal organizations and clubs there is not one big democratic gathering where people of both sexes, all ages, different creeds, and varied as to social standards can meet, and laugh and sing and talk and think in a common cause.

Yesterday a man in Fulton, who has the idea of community spirit, pointed to Rochester as the ideal city. "Did you ever hear anything against Rochester?" he asked. No, Rochester is rich in community spirit, and as a result is happy, prosperous, beautiful city. Rochester did not deem it a waste of time to carry on a campaign this past summer for beautifying the business sections of its city with window boxes. The window boxes didn't mean much in themselves, but the spirit back of the campaign did.

Can Fulton's leading lights see the lack of community spirit? Will any "get mad or refuse to look," if one dares suggest there's a lack of pull-together in this community.

The Evening Times invites discussions on how to develop or increase, if you choose, the community spirit.

MR. WILSON FOR SUFFRAGE

Until very recently President Wilson had not been generally regarded as believing in the advantages of woman suffrage. He had been considered to belong to the group of voters yet to be convinced, and in consequence had been the object of missionary efforts, some of a variety to be regretted. His statement that he will vote for the New Jersey amendment and thinks the state will "be greatly benefited by the change," therefore, is properly to be interpreted as acknowledgement of the merits of the equal suffrage movement which must cheer the workers in every campaign state and prove especially valuable in his own.

The time for debating whether there shall be woman suffrage all over this country is past. The only question remaining is when it shall come. It is getting more and more foolish and futile to argue that some women don't want the vote and that many of them are not prepared for it. Some men don't want the vote badly enough to register, and some who have it and use it are as unfit in every way as any woman could be. There is no argument against granting the ballot to women which would not apply with equal logic to general male franchise, and there is no good reason why men should vote which is not an equally good reason for extending the franchise to women.

Women are people. They are taking their place in the world side by side with men, encountering the same difficulties; why, then, are they not entitled by every interpretation of the square deal theory to enjoy the same political privileges and to bear the same political burdens? If the Big Four—New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania and Massachusetts—are not added to the group of suffrage states this fall, it will be because the men of the East have not, like their Western brothers, recognized that woman as a partner in running public affairs has as much value as woman as a partner in running home affairs. President Wilson is a distinguished recruit and he is bringing a pretty solid Cabinet over—not to the enemy, be it said.—N. Y. Tribune.

MEASURING MEN; RAYMOND TALK

Efficiency Man Speaks in Auburn, Telling Business Men to Get One Idea a Day

The Auburn Citizen gives the following account of Frank Jewell Raymond's latest lecture in that city:

"Success? It's up to you," was the keynote of the lecture on Measuring Men given last evening in the High School Assembly hall by Frank Jewell Raymond, it being the second in a course of three lectures under the auspices of the Chamber of Commerce of this city on, How to Succeed in Business.

"Get one idea a day and then use it," was his advice to all and in addition he emphasized the necessity of not knocking either your own firm or your competitors. "A knocker never was a winner and a winner never was a knocker, for the winner does not have time to knock and the knoceker is too busy knocking to ever win," was the way he put it. The lecture proved absorbingly interesting.

Pass Phrenology and Palmistry.

"I am not going to deal with human nature from a theoretical and impractical standpoint. Phrenology, although there may be something in it, will not do for business for your cannot ask every man you deal with to remove his hat and lety ou feel of his head to see if he is honest. Palmistry would not do, for you cannot say to every lady customer who asks for credit, 'Please remove yout glove so that I can see if your life line is long enough so that there is a chance of your living to pay the bill.'

"Every human being is a camera and in each camera is a plate—the mind. We are, so to speak, mental photographers reproducing pictures on the other fellow's plate and to be successful we must be able to make a clear picture and be sure we have the right focus. Do you know that the average income of the ministers of the United States is $552 per year, of school teachers $490 and of physicians and lawyers from $920 to $934? Ther eason I am telling you this is that these men have had to study several years before they could practice while you who are in the selling game are getting paid while you are studying and as you multiply your ability i nyour line, so you will multiply your income.

"Now for a suggestion as to improving your ability. Get one idea each day and then use it. How can you do this? Take a memorandum book and each day ask yourself one question and answer it, jotting down both question and answer in the book. Get up to date. You don't put up with a mossback preacher who preaches the same as they did in 1498; you don't put up with a back number school teacher who won't attend institutes; you don't want an old-fashioned pill doctor who doesn't attend the clinic meetings. He is the kind that drives a one horse shay instead of riding in a Ford.

Three Ways of Aid.

The habit of questioning yourself will aid you in three ways. First, it will help you to find out where you use more words than necessary and cut them out. A lot of you talk like trees, get started all right and then branch off in every direction. Some men say what they want to and then shut up while another beats around the bush and spends two hours in saying nothing. Secondly, it will give you confidence in yourself, the confidence which comes from knowledge. If you know, and know what you do know, you will have that confidence. Thirdly, it will help you in dusting your brain. If you are going to guide others you must get the dust from your thinking apparatus every so often or else you will forget all you ever did know. You must learn the history of the articley ou want to sell so that you will be able to sell it to yourself. Of course you will nit reel off the entire stock of your knowledge to every customer but confidence comes from knowing that you know.

"Do you know that over 85 per cent of the children in this country do not go through high school and that the average wage of the young man at 22 who has not, is less than $10 per week, and at 32 less than $11.50? 85 per cent. of the workers earn less than $15 per week and all because they do not know that they know if they do know.

Warns Against Three Things.

"I take for granted that you know your business. Now there are three things which I warn you to guard against. First, don't knock a competitor's goods. Many of you do it every day and then when you get fired you go to work for them and knock the ones you were praising. A knocker never wins nor a winner never knocks, for a knocker is too busy winning to find time to knock. If you don't like your business get out. If you don't like your city get out. No man is too poor to get out of a town he doesn't like, and generally he can get help.

"Next remember that a person will never buy until they are convinced and they will not be convinced until they understand and they will not understand unless you speak plainly. Talk in terms which thec ustomer can understand. Don't shoot over their heads. Use terms in common use or you will fail to hit the mark in the prospective mind. Don't take it for granted that the other fellow knows what you mean because you do yourself.

"Lastly, as you quit knocking and learn to talk plainly you will get that poise which will enable you to fight the battle of life anywhere.

Types of People

"Now there are three types of people with whom you will have to deal, the head type, the heart type, and the physical or body type. When you are trying to sell something to the first type he will say: 'I can't see that,' or 'It's not clear to my mind.' He reasons everything out as a chess player would the moves in the game. If you are talking to the second type, he will greet you with a warm hand shake and will say: 'I believe so and so or it seems to me so and so.' You can then advance your arguments so as to appeal to him rather than convince him. The physical type is the one whose hands are flying and who is flying off the handle himself. You will have to handle him by mental jiu-jitsu or along the line of least resistance.

"What do these types mean? The head type allows their intellect to govern their decisions; the heart type are swayed in their decisions by their feelings and their sensibilities while the physical type allow their desires of the moment to direct them. The head tpye is like the salt shaker, they will reason and pick flaws in your arguments; the heart type resemble the sugar bowl; and sweet sayings will do the most with them; the physical type are the pepper box and you must handle them carefully or they will make things too hot for you.

"The arguments which will appeal to the head type will not to the heart type nor to the physical. If a person of the head type comes in with a complaint they make it without fear or favor, letting the caser est on its merits so to speak. If he happens to be of the heart type he states that he does not want to make any trouble for you but appeals to you to right the wrong if there is one. If he is of the physical type he comes in and with a wave of the arms tells you what he wants and when he wants it, threatening to advertise you from Seneca Falls to Skaneateles if he doesn't get it, and then afterward is sorry for the language he has used.

"Now if he happens to be the head type, reason with him but come strong or he will down you. If he is of the heart type appeal to his better nature and if he is of the physical type agree with him in everything he says until he gets over it. Lou also want to make sure whether your customer is an optimist or a pessimist for you have to deal differently with each.

Get in Step With Customer.

"Now for another point. If I was walking in the park with one of you ladies I would not be going at a run and letting you tag along in the rear. Oh no. Now the same principles apply in selling goods. If you are presenting your proposition to a man, get in step mentally with him. If I am talking with you I can tell by the way you answer me if you are keeping up with me and if you are not I can find out from your talk just how fast I will have to talk to you. Don't give the other fellow's mental plate an instantaneous exposure when it needs a time. Your success is due to the success with which you can reproduce the picture in your mind, on the other fellow's mind. Ask questions and if his answers show that he is behind, don't get mad because he is not as smart asy ou, but slow up and explain. Maybe in something else he would get ahead of you. Above all, make what you have to say interesting.

Self Control Essential.

"Did you ever think that the people you like are those who are in mental harmony with you who in some one thing, at least, hitch with you, and when you say that you don't like a person it simply means that you don't know him very well for everyone has good points. In selling your goods you want to have a circular view of your business so that if different customers want different views you can give them to them. Be so that you can bring out what the customer wants brought out just as fast as he wants it and no faster.

"Before you ever make a success you must acquire self-control. This means will power and there are five grades of this. The first is the 'I can't grade. You can always tell the I can't merchant. He stands in his doorway and advertises the fact that he is not busy. If any proposal is made to him he murmurs, 'I can't.'

"The second grade is the 'I wish I could' grade. This is the fellow with a wishbone where his backbone ought to be. He is the man with a spaghetti spine and he wonders why he does not get there. Your backbone is to hold your head up squarely and not to let it lop on your chest.

"The next grade is the 'I hope I can.' He is the dead live one. A lot of you people are like the Irishman's snake; you are dead only you are not sensible of the fact as yet. You are in a rut and the only difference between a rut and a grave is in length and breadth.

"The fourth grade is the 'I can' grade. They say 'Oh, yes, I can do it,' and then forget all about it and when they are asked why they didn't they explain that they can all right but it slipped their mind. The I can fellow is the one who, when he gets up against it good and hard, is ready to throw up the white flag and send for the ambulance.

"Now the fifth grade is the one you should remember when making a promise. It is the 'I will' grade. This means decision. Some men say 'I will go to work,' and they get started in good shape amid the plaudits of their friends, and then sit down and watch themselves go by. When some one says to them, 'Why, I thought you started in business,' and then you make all sorts of excuses as to why you stopped, throwing the blame on some one else every time. Let us look inside ourselves and get self-control. If we are going to be a success we must have it. Get a circular view on things and learn to import it from any angle, to the other fellow. Success? It's up to you. It's in you. As I said before you should use what you have to get what you want."

WINTERGARDEN SHOW AT THE QUIRK TONIGHT

Many complications and odd situations can arise from the detention in quarantine for two weeks of a winsome grass widow, her former husband, a stubborn school girl, a domineering fiance, to say nothing of several other suitors and many pretty members of the supposedly "weaker sex."

This popular bill was staged in an elaborate manner, and the musical features were presented with several novel effects. Deserving of special mention is the honeymoon song led by Miss Bertin, assisted by various members of the chorus. Another excellent number was "Goodbye Everybody" by Miss Pullen and the entire company.

Tonight's bill will be entirely different from any of those which have gone before, and a departure in some respects from any of the other productions. It is called "A Night at the Wintergarden," and is just such a performance as one might expect to see at that famous amusement place in New York, where novelties and revues are originated. There is just enough plot in the show to hold together a olt of amusing experiences of Barney O'Hart, the character played by Billy Allen, and to introduce a long series of singing and dancing numbers and unusual specialties. A railroad depot, a Pullman car, a New York street, a dancing academy, an art gallery and a view of Palm Beach, Florida, are the various scenes presented.

The part played by Billy Allen represents another of those simple minded fellows who are always getting things wrong and thereby causing ludricous confusion.

The chorus girls are shown in some especially pretty gowns and odd costumes, with many changes to suit the shifting scenes of thep lay.

"The Dingbat Family," that funny cartoon play with characters taken from the newspaper pictures, will be the company's offering for Saturday afternoon and evening. A special Saturday matinee has been arranged for the children to see the funny Mr. and Mrs. Dingbat and their comical friends.

HOUR OF LABOR'S OPPORTUNITY

Eight Hour Day For All Is Within the Workers' Grasp.

DEPENDS ON UNITED EFFORT

On Trade Unionists Rests the Responsibility For the Extension of Organization Among All Who Work—Quick Action Is Needed to Seize the Opportunity at Its Best.

A most momentous alternative is presented to the workers of our country. As a result of war conditions some industries have now immense contracts secured on most highly favorable terms. Other nations' needs have given work to men and women who have lived through a year in which unemployment has been greater than usual.

Whether or not this opportunity comes to the industries of our country through perfidy or greed of other nations does not alter conditions that confront us in this country. The problem of America's workers is whether the employer shall use them as a means to secure greater profits from the present necessity of other nations or whether this terrible world calamity shall be used to promote the welfare of at least a few of the world's workers.

Many workers have already decided that they will see to it that humanity shares whatever opportunity shall come out of the terrible war. Already there has been raised the slogan of the eight hour workday for all workers, and that demand has been and is being made more effective.

This spirit of enlightened self interest and industrial statesmanship among these workers is infectious—the slogan "eight hours" has been echoed by others. The workers have it in their power to make that slogan an irresistible force. Employers feel the impulse that sends its throb of hope and inspiration out among all the toilers; many feel and grant in advance demands they realize will be made, and justly made. Even the United States steel trust has increased wages. It granted them in advance because it did not want the workers to know the feeling and the experience that become part of the characters of workers who make demands for justice and secure them through their own organized power.

This is the time for a campaign for organization—a campaign that shall enable the workers to become responsible, resourceful participants in America's industries. It is an opportunity to develop individual independence, resourcefulness and understanding that constitute the virility of the nation.

The organized workers who know and value the power of organization must feel the heavy personal responsibility for doing a part in this organizing campaign.

Organization is not only necessary for taking advantage of present opportunities, but to protect the workers in the convulsive period of readjustment that will follow the war. Either the forces of greed and cruelty will use the workers or the workers will use organization to make the forces of greed and cruelty serve human welfare.—Samuel Gompers.

Organizing Baldwin Workers.

Business agents of the metal trades council are organizing machinists and metal workers employed at the Baldwin Locomotive works, Philadelphia. The agitaton of the union for an eight hour day and a minimum wage of $4 a day will center at the locomotive plant, according to the organizers. Only a small percentage of the workmen there are union men. About 7,000 men are employed in the Philadelphia plant, according to the union leaders, with about the same number at Eddystone, Pa. Of these, about 8,000 are machinists, while practically all come under the branches in the Metal Trades council.

Gallipoli.

Athens colonized the peninsula of Gallipoli more than 2,500 years ago. Its inhabitants, the Doloncian Thracians, asked Athenian aid against savage neighbors, and Miltiades walled off the isthmus near Bulair.

LOLITA ROBERTSON

Charming Lolita Robertson, the photoplay "fans" call the Pathe star and though the "fans" are usually right they are unusually so this time.

THE WHARTONS TELL ONE ON THEMSELVES

Here's a good one from the Pathe producers, Wharton, Inc., at Ithaca, N. Y. Recently in filming a "Wallingford" story which dealt with high finance as applied to skunk farms, they took down the big Wharton sign over the main entrance to Renwick Park and put up one with the words "Skunk Farm" on it instead. When the pictures had been taken and the first print was being projected on the screen they were first amazed and then carried away with laughter to find they had neglected to remove a smaller sign on the foot passenger gate, directly below the skunk sign, which read as follows: "No one not a member of the cast admitted."

"AT BAY," A PLAY WITH A HISTORY.

It is interesting to note in connection with the announcement of Pathe's intention to put George Scarborough's play "At Bay" into pictures, that Mr. Scarborough was formerly connected with the U. S. Secret Service and drew upon his experience there in writing the play. Naturally he had access to the secret records of the Service and when "Via Wireless" was running as a "legitimate" success on Broadway as well as the road, it was reported that various hidden scandals in high society had been utilized in the writing of the play.

Tricks of the Law.

Judge Audenreid of Philadelphia has reversed an award of $5,500 to Edward B. Stocker, who was struck by a freight car, crushing his leg so badly it had to be amputated.

Stocker's mistake, the judge asserted, was in filing his suit under the federal liability law. It was not proved the court says, that either the engine or the freight car that hit him was engaged in interstate commerce; therefore the claim should have been filed under the laws of Pennsylvania.

NOTES OF LABOR.

Machinists of Yonkers, N. Y., demand 40 cents an hour and an eight hour day.

The United Textile Workers of America will convene at New York city on Oct. 18.

The annual convention of the American Federation of Labor will meet at San Francisco Nov. 8.

James P. Holland of the Stationary Firemen's union is the new president of the New York State Federation of Labor.

Bridgeport (Conn.) street cleaners have made application to the American Federation of Labor organizers to be organized and taken into the federation.

EYESIGHT CAME BACK AS DEATH DREW NEAR

Soldier, Blinded In War, Saved From the Hesperian

London.—The fact that Private Chambers, a blinded Canadian soldier, who was thrown into the water when one of the Hesperian's lifeboats capsized, regained his eyesight as an effect of the shock of being pitched into the ocean, does not surprise London surgeons who attended him. His blindness, they say, was the result of wrecked nerves.

When he was put in a hospital in April he was not wounded, but was a nervous wreck, absolutely blind and incapable of distinguishing darkness from light. Later he regained his perception of light, but no more.

Chambers was blown into a shell crater on Hill 60. He staggered out blind. He heard a wounded man moaning and told him to get on his back and direct him toward the British lines. In this way both men reached safety, Chambers, unable to see, carrying on his back his wounded companion, who could not walk.

He says that he was dosing on the Hesperian when the explosion occurred. He felt his way to the deck and was put into a boat. Then he was plunged into the water, and when he came to the surface he saw the ship. In a moment somebody began to pull his heel and drag him under. He muttered to himself, he says: "Good God! To be drowned just as I am beginning to see!" Then he kicked hard and, freeing himself, swam to a lifeboat.

Since his arrival in Queenstown he has been roaming about the city enjoying his sight.

The Impossible.

The Duke of Wellington wanted a certain piece of work done and instructed an officer of the Royal engineers to do it. After examination the officer told the duke it was impossible. The duke sent for another officer, a much younger man and attached to another division of the army. This officer did what the duke required.

The next morning there appeared in the "orders of the day" the following epigrammatic note: "He who in war fails to do what he undertakes may always plead accident, which invariably attends military affairs, but he who declares a thing to be impossible which is subsequently accomplished registers his own incapacity."

HIGH TO MEET BALDWINSVILLE

Coach Merrill Exhibits a Lot of Faith in His Boys; Preatice Shows Making of Strong Team.

With only one more practice session remaining before tomorrow's game with Baldwinsville, the High school football team will probably be given a long drill this afternoon in place of scrimmage work. Yesterday's practice was fairly successful. The opponents for the regulars were selected from among the men assisting in the coaching of the team and some of the substitute players. No changes were made in the line-up. The regular team which is to represent the school has practically been decided upon with the exception of one or two positions. In Saturday's game several of the subs will be given a chance to go in. It is likely that several men with football ability who have not as yet made an appearance on the gridiron this year will be able to displace some of the regulars for the rest of the season. It depends on the showing made Saturday against Baldwinsville. Next Saturday the Auburn eleven is scheduled. The prison city boys have a strong heavy team of experienced players.

Coach Merrill has worked hard to drill the material on hand, but he is handicapped on account of lack of material to select from. School spirit should compel a lot of fellows to join the squad. Interest among the boy and girl students at the High school is not lagging by any means, but rooters will not make a team.

Tomorrow's game starts at 2:30 sharp. Athletic field is the scene of the conflict George Ward will referee. The Baldwinsville team will bring along a large number of rooters and the entire student body of the local High school should be on hand.

Aside from the probable shift in Kraus and M. Frawley to their former positions and the entrance of McLellan and Mangeot into the game, the local team will start with the following line-up:

MR. MATTEO LEAVES TODAY FOR ITALY

No Italian reserves left Fulton during the present week. It is not likely that any local Italians will respond to the call for troops unless request is made by the Italian Consul at Rochester who provides expenses for the trip across the Atlantic.

As a result of Italy's participation in the war, Passalacqua Matteo, a local resident, has been summoned to Palermo, Italy, to look after the business interests of his family, which have become directly affected by war conditions. Mr. Matteo leaves today.

COLLECTIONS IN AID OF WAR SUFFERERS

The annual collection for the benefit of the Holy See will be taken up next Sunday in all Catholic churches in this diocese. A letter from Bishop Grimes has been sent to all the parishes that briefly outlines the position of the Pope on account of the war and collections will be taken up in all the churches and the money sent to Chancellor James P. McGraw, who will send it to Rome.

It has been announced from Baltimore that a country appeal for the relief of the distressed in Mexico will be made to the three Cardinals, fourteen Archbishops, one hundred Bishops and approximately 18,000 priests of the United States to the Catholics of this country.

It is said that a personal letter will be sent by Cardinal Gibbons to every Archbishop and Bishop in the United States asking them to raise funds in their diocese for Mexico.

The relief movement is in response to the appeal made by Archbishop Leopodo Ruiz, the leading prelate of Mexico. It was said that the administration at Washington will probably be asked to protect the integrity of relief funds and supplies.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE LOSES MR. HEYDECKER

A rumor that Wayne D. Heydecker, Secretary of the Chamber of Commerce, was preparing to take up other work was confirmed last night by N. L. Whitaker, President of the Chamber. Mr. Whitaker stated: "I have received a letter from the American City Bureau, with whom the Chamber has a contract for its secretariel management, requesting the release of Mr. Heydecked as soon as possible, as they need him for other work which they are planning for this fall and winter. Satisfactory arrangements will be made by the Bureau with regard to Mr. Heydecker's successor. As soon as the new secretary can be installed Mr. Heydecked, of course, will be released as requested."

COLUMBUS DAY TO BE QUIETLY OBSERVED

No elaborate celebration of Columbus Day will be held in Fulton next Tuesday by the Italians. The Knights of Columbus are formulating plans for the day, but the program has not as yet been announced.

The Societa Mutuo Soccorso Vittorio Emmanuele III, the leading Italian organization of Fulton, is in receipt of an invitation to partake in the festivities of the Societa' Di Cristoforo Colombo, of Oswego. Frank Zaia, secretary of the local lodge, states that the invitation will be accepted and that the members of his lodge carrying outfit of badges and banners will depart for Oswego Next Tuesday night on the 6:06 p. m. car and march in a body in the parade which is to be held that evening.

OFFICIALS TO GO DEER HUNTING THIS MONTH

Capt. Lafayette Norton and Fred Sweet of the police department will leave on October 23 for the North Woods to hunt deer. City Sealer H. M. O'Brien and J. H. Wilson, of the firm of Wilson & Scott, will accompany them. The four will make the trip in Mr. Wilson's auto. The hunting ground is in the neighborhood of Newton Falls and Oswegatchie.

Last year the hunters were successful in bringing home a large deer and city officials partook of the venison at a dinner given in the Ward hotel. Several friends of the men, who were left out of last year's dinner, expect an invitation this year from the fact that promises have been made to bring back at least two carcasses.

PROGRESSIVE SUPPER PLANNED BY AID SOCIETY

A progressive movement will take place in the vicinity of the State Street M. E. church next Tuesday evening. It will not be of a political nature, however, as it will be under the auspices of the Mrs. W. H. Singleton division of the Ladies' Aid Society of the church, and therefore some "eats" will be prepared, consisting of four courses to be served at different homes.

Progressive suppers were features of church life last year and the women who were back of them look forward to even better times this year.

Tom Brown Association Expects to Have Clubhouse

New York.—The Tom Brown Alumni Association, composed of ex-convicts from Sing Sing and Auburn, has become a regularly organized society, it was announced yesterday. If the embryonic plans for the association do not fail it will be only a short time before the men who are striving to "come back" will have a clubhouse of their own and a large membership.

This plan was the outgrowth of the dinner given for the warden of Sing Sing by the prisoners who had "gone straight" since they passed from his charge, at the Park Avenue Hotel on Tuesday night. Mr. Osborne refused to discuss this new development in prison reform over the telephone yesterday, but intimated that he might have something to announce later.

Judge William H. Wadhams, one of the guests at the dinner, praised the warden's work in the highest terms yesterday, saying that he was making good and therefore should be supported and encouraged.

Welcomes Change of Methods.

"Under the old prison system," Judge Wadhams said, "men were turned out of the prisons frequently wrecked physically and mentally and expected to take their placesin society and follow honest pursuits. The large numbers of second, third and fourth offenders which that system produced leads me to welcome a change of methods in the treatment of prisoners which has for its purpose the reduction of the number of second offenders.

"When it is realized that some 1,500 men come out of the penal institutions of this state yearly it is important that they should come out in good physical condition and, if possible, with a purpose for right living.

"I was glad therefore to accept an invitation to the dinner last night tendered by the members of the Mutual Welfare League of Auburn and Sing Sing Prisons to Warden Osborne. The men wo gave the dinner did so as a testimonial of the fact that they were making good, all of them having been employed in an honorable career since their discharge.

Public Interested in Result.

"As I said to the men, the fact that Mr. Osborne's plan, inaugurated at Auburn and subsequently extended to Sing Sing, had been in successful operation for a year and a half was a matter of encouragement; the people of the state were watching the men as they came out, and if these men made good public opinion would support the new prison methods.

"The public was not so much interested in the detail of the method applied at Sing Sing as in the results which were produced; that if it checked the number of second offenders and so reduced the percentage of crime it was the best possible insurance against crime, in which the state could invest.

"The gathering of the men last night showed that Mr. Osborne is making good, and for that reason it is in the interest of the public that he should be supported and encouraged in his most valuable work."

GRAY RE-ELECTED CHAIRMAN OF COUNTY COMMITTEE

The Democratic Couny Committee met in Oswego yesterday and re-elected James Gray of Parish as chairman. He was prepared with a bunch of proxies as was Mr. Hartnett of this city, and of course the 35 men present voted solidly for the eastern man. No one else was nominated.

The anti-Bulger faction controls the commitee, having elected fifty-nine out of seventy-one committeemen at the primaries last Tuesday. Judge Bulger was not present at the session and there were no contests of any account.

Frances E. Cullen, temporary chairman, spoke of the desire for party unity in the face of the impending contests.

LODGE MEMBERS ENTERTAINED LAST NIGHT

Following the regular business session at Elks club last evening members of the Billy Allen troupe entertained with piano and vocal selections.

James Burke of Hannibal received hearty applause for his vocal selection "Why Did They Dig My Grave so Deep?"

A clam bake and a Hallow'een dance were among the social features planned last night by the lodge members.

FRIENDLY NINE BIRTHDAY CLUB MET YESTERDAY

The Friendly Nine Birthday club was entertained yesterday by Mrs. Patrick McSweeney. Mrs. Palmer gave an interesting account of her recent perilous motor trip through Pennsylvania, and every one, it was stated, was enthusiastic over the hostess' newly acquired flock of sheep.

The Nine was incomplete because of the absence of Mrs. Fred Summerville, who was entertaining a party of friends.

A dainty but bountiful dinner was served by Mrs. McSweeney.

RED MEN TO MEET AT GROVE ON SUNDAY

Announcement is made that the clam bake of the Red Men, scheduled for Sunday will take place at Reynold's Grove. In the event of rain, however, the affair will be transferred to the club rooms. A large attendance is expected and a number of guests from out of town will be present.

The most popular and original feature or our Great Auction Sale is the privilege extended to the public to make selections of such articles as they wish to have put up at Auction, but the choice of these goods can not be made while the Auction is going on.

Christmas Gifts bought at Auction do not lose their character on that account, but they add to the resources of the Christmas buyers because $1.00 will go farther at an auction sale than $5.00 would if spent around Christmas time when people add attractive margins to the original cost of Christmas novelties.

We therefore advise people to take advantage of one of the most popular Auction Sales ever held in New York State.

Upon Friday and Saturday of this week we propose to make a great display of Diamonds, Watches, Jewelry, Cut Glass and Sterling Silverware.

NOTABLES IN THE LIMELIGHT

General Carlo Porro, Italian Subchief of Staff.

According to recent disclosures, the entrance of Italy into joint military action with England, France and Russia against Turkey was arranged by General Count Carlo Porro, subchief of staff of the Italian army, during his visit to the Anglo-French front in July.

Count Carlo Perro is the son of a former member of the Italian senate. He chose a military career and has risen to the rank of major general in the Italian army and is now second in command of King Victor's forces. General Porro is a man of strong character and by many of his countrymen is regarded as the leading soldier of the kingdom. On Dec. 4, 1906, Premier Fortis proposed General Porro for the post of undersecretary of war, although he was not a member of the house of deputies, a requirement. He was offered election to the chamber, but refused, and then, for the first time in the history of Italy, he was placed in the cabinet without having been elected a member of parliament.

Early in his military career General Porro reached the conviction that the Italian army was far behind other European military establishments in efficiency. Last year when Salandra became premier in succession to Giolitti he was strongly recommended to appoint General Porro to the post of minister of war. During the negotiations concerning the offer Porro submitted his views and declared himself willing to accept the post under conditions that Salandra would include without change Porro's reform program. This was refused. General Porro was then given command of the Sixth army corps and on April 1 this year was appointed subchief of the general staff of the army.

Head of New Labor College.

Eugene Victor Debs, national leader of the Socialist party, who recently announced the establishment of a national labor college known as the People's college at Fort Scott, Kan., has been elected president of the college. In his announcement President Debs says in part:

"The devotion and loyalty of the members of the People's College union will make this college a great working class school and a tremendous factor in the struggle for labor's emancipation. The People's College union is the one organized effort of the working class to control education. Through the correspondence department we are reaching thousands of the working class with education. This is real service in the social revolution."

Mr. Debs is a native of Terre Haute, Ind., and is sixty years old. He began his business career as a locomotive fireman in 1871 and later served as city clerk of Terre Haute and also as a member of the Indiana legislature. For a number of years he was grand secretary and treasurer of the Brotherhood of Locomotive firemen, and from 1893 to 1897 was president of the American Railway union. In connection with a strike on western railroads in 1894 he was charged with conspiracy, but acquitted; then he was charged with violation of an injunction and sent to jail for six months. He has three times been candidate of the Socialist party for president of the United States.

POPULAR MECHANICS

Substitute For Horn.

A cheap and easily made substitute for horn can be made of wheat flour and sodium silicate. This substitute is very hard and strong and, by inserting organic dye into the composition while mixing, it can be colored to imitate almost any kind of horn substance. The compound is made by mixing ten parts (by volume) of sodium silicate (40 degrees Baume) with distilled water, and then stirring the resultant liquid into a thick paste with fine white wheat flour. The mass is then allowed to stand for three weeks, during which time it undergoes a chemical reaction that produces a hard, hornlike substance. This composition can be molded without pressure when first made and turned and machined like brass after it has set.

Future Development of Flying.

If this war, as it bids fair now to do, perfects the machine and so standardizes its manufacture that one may order his aeroplane or hydroaeroplane as one does his automobile, the field for its use is already waiting and established. We may then confidently look for as great a boom in aeroplane manufacturing soon after the war as we saw in the sudden development of the automobile business once the machine's reliability was an assured fact. Indeed, a more rapid growth, due to the forcing process in development arising from war's necessities, is impossible than obtained in the case of the automobile.—Engineering Magazine.

When the Engine Backfires.

A gas engine will backfire because some of the charge is still burning in the combustion space when the intake valve opens. It will be seen from this that to produce backfiring a slow burning mixture is required. Generally backfiring is due to too weak a mixture. The weaker a mixture is the slower it burns. The amount of backfiring naturally depends to some extent upon the speed of the motor. It follows that in an engine running at 1,000 revolutions per minute the period between each spark is much shorter than in an engine running at 500 revolutions per minute.

Support For Radiator Hose.

In certain types of automobiles the radiator is supported at the top by the rubber hose which connects the manifold to the radiator, says Popular Mechanics. The constant vibration of the radiator and its forward and backward movements are all imparted to the rubber hose, with the result that it becomes badly warped and twisted, and it does not take long before the hose is useless.

Trouble of this nature can be eliminated to a great extent by introducing a connection between the radiator and manifold so that the latter, being made of cast iron, will more readily stand the strains than the rubber hose. A piece of steel is firmly clamped to the manifold and is in turn connected to the radiator by another piece of steel. Such a connection is very flexible and therefore is capable of withstanding high strains and vibrations.

Driving on Slippery Roads.

If you are caught out in a rain and have to drive on slippery roads do not go at a speed which will necessitate the use of brakes. Try to avoid applying the brakes, for there is no surer way of skidding than suddenly to apply brakes while moving rapidly. And even in coasting down a wet hillside it is best to put the gears into low or intermediate and shut off the spark. In this way your car is held back by the compression of the engine without the use of brakes to any great extent.

Red Paint Tested.

All sorts of weather conditions failed to cause any perceptible fading of a new brand of red paint which was applied to Fire island light vessel, New York, in June, 1914, and was exposed to the elements for ten months, during which the craft was continuously on station. The bureau of lighthouses reports that the paint showed up a bright red at the end of that period and gave the vessel a very conspicuous and neat appearance.—Consular Report.

Uses of Molybdenite.

The mining of molybdenite is becoming an important industry in Tasmania, where extensive deposits of this rare mineral have recently been found. Molybdenite is used for a variety of purposes, but its principal value is in the manufacture of steel, to which it gives a hardness and toughness that make the steel suitable for use in propeller shafts, guns and boilers.

The Farm Engine.

In selecting an engine for farm work the prospective purchaser will find it economical to get an engine that will develop a little surplus power. It costs a trifle more and is a little more expensive to operate, but it carries the load without the wear and tear that an engine undergoes when overloaded.

A Biter Bit

By F. A. MITCHEL

[It is obvious from this story that the story teller was a young man bent on an adventure.]

One morning the postman left me a letter with the firm name of Outcault, Hardy & Dunn, attorneys-at-law, stamped on the left hand corner of the envelope. I opened it and read the following, signed by the lawyers:

Your proposition to unite the properties so long in legal dispute by marrying Miss Auchincloss has been referred to her with our assurances that the tangle between the two can never be unraveled except by such a union. Present circumstances if continued will in time eat up a property which removed from litigation would produce an income of $5,000 clear of all expenses. Miss Auchincloss, never having seen you, desires us to send her your photograph.

It was evident to me that the letter doubtless intended for another Anthony Page had come to me. I inclosed my photograph in a note stating in substance the note I had received from the attorneys and adding that I did not care to act further through them, but would be pleased to form her acquaintance direct. I chose this course, thinking that the real Anthony Page might be known personally to Messrs. Outcault, Hardy & Dunn and my photograph if sent to them would give me away.

In due time I received a note signed Bertha Auchincloss acknowledging the receipt of my photograph and inclosing one of her own. It represented a young girl of eighteen or nineteen, pretty as a peach and in whose eye lurked an inexhaustible fund of mischief. This will be a case of diamond cut diamond, I said to myself, and I see a lot of fun ahead. The letter was very short, stating that the writer agreed with me in direct action instead of the "horrid lawyers" and inviting me to call.

Without proper consideration as to the risk I ran of being horsewhipped by some of the young lady's relatives I went to see her. She came into the room smilingly and extended her hand, which I grasped and pressed. We began our acquaintance without the slightest reference to the subject of the union of property and, so far as that first meeting was concerned, made no progress in coming to an understanding with regard to a union of properties. This was gratifying to me, for the moment we should enter into details I would betray myself. On leaving I asked permission to call again, which was graciously accorded.

Having made no reply to the note of the lawyers, I did not hear from them again.

So delighted was I with my success that on my second visit to Miss Auchincloss I ventured to mention the object of my calls. She dropped her eyes to the floor and said that before the matter could be considered she must take time to have inquiries made concerning me. She could not even contemplate such a step without knowing more about me. I winced at this, for it seemed impossible for her to make such inquiries without discovering that I was an impostor. Nevertheless I brazened it out and offered to give her references. To this she replied that she already had the names of some persons who could give her the required information. Of course she meant friends of the real Anthony Page and I hoped he had a better character than I, though I did not express the hope to her.

Notwithstanding the perils by which I was surrounded my bark sailed on over an untroubled sea. At times I wondered how I could escape the dangers that beset me, but the truth is I was falling heels over head in love with Bertha Auchincloss and was infatuated not only with her, but the part I was playing. My calls grew more and more frequent, but instead of taking up the matter on account of which we had come together she not only refrained from mentioning it, but discouraged my doing so. This, taken with the fact that nothing adverse had come from her injuries, gave me quite a clear coast.

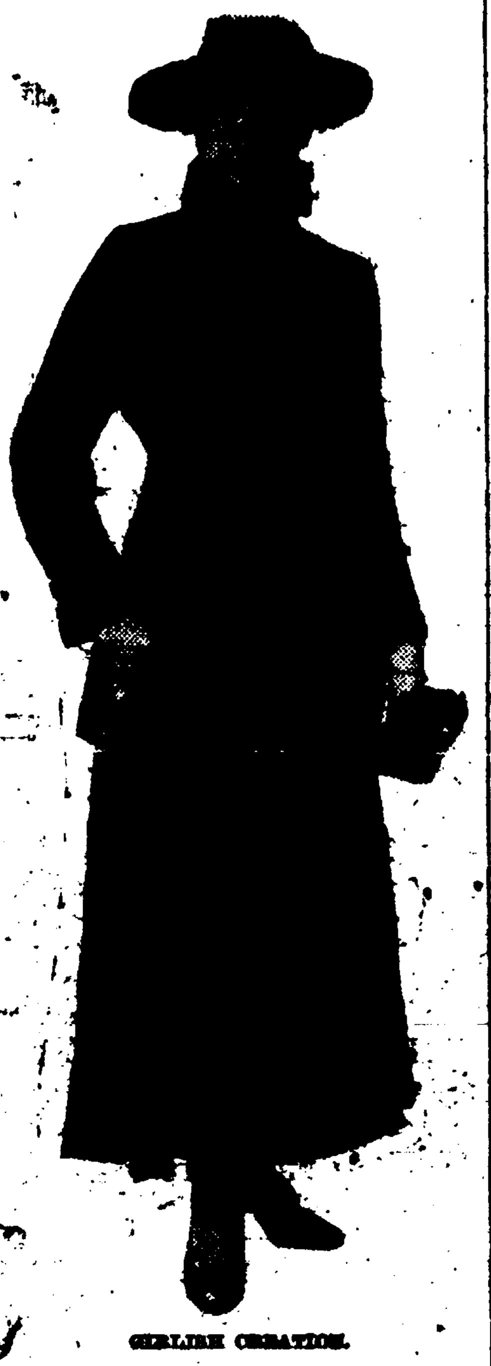
Plunging headlong into love as I was, the time soon came when I made a declaration without confessing my identity. I told her that I loved her and were the property on account of which we had come together sent to the bottom of the ocean still would I love her, still would I marry her if she would consent. She did not drop her head on my shoulder and whisper "Yes." She burst into a laugh.

"The next time," she said, "you play a game like that, keep your wits about you. My aunt, for whom I am named, is the lady you have supposed you were visiting. Since you first came to see me she has married the other Anthony Page. She is forty years old, and he is fifty. I took an interest in that case and remarked the handwriting of the letter he wrote my aunt and which was sent her by the lawyers. Believing that their reply to him must have fallen into the hands of a scamp—for the writing was not his—I sent for your photograph, thinking to have a little fun. Being pleased with it and realizing that it takes two to carry out a lark, I invited you to call. Accept my thanks for having afforded me the most amusing episode of my life."

I was madly in love with a girl who had been fooling me. Nevertheless, I began all over again and in time captured her. She says that in marrying me she did better than her aunt with the other Anthony Page, since their property involved only a hundred thousand dollars, while mine is half a million.

SMART TAILLEUR.

Belted Effect Makes Chic Suit For the Girl.



GIRLISH CREATION.

The belted effect in misses' suit styles holds quite an important place among the autumn season's smart models. Here it is featured in navy mohair, with belt confining narrow plaits that show above and below the waist line. The high roll collar with metal embroidery lends a military note, and the oblong metal buttons afford a trim effect. Deep cuffs and an odd shaped yoke are interesting features. The [illegible] skirt just escapes high button boots, and the trim [illegible] is very girlish.

MIDSUMMER CLOTHES.

Autumn Presses Closely Upon the Heels of Summer.

Midsummer is usually the signal for changes and modifications in the summer fashions. Spring clothes begin to show wear, and to demand renewal, and our fickle minds begin to look for something different.

Does it not seem strange that American men should not have adopted long since a more suitable August attire than blue serge and tan shoes? However, if men persist in conservatism in this respect, women make up for it, for no woman in the world indulges in summer clothes to the same extent as the American woman.

The women of other nations from reasons connected with climate or temperament, or an inborn sense of economy, may wear silks or thin wool, but we insist upon our ephemeral materials, and every year produces new ones for us. This, of course, is a taffeta season, and we are all wearing it accordingly. In order to cater to both parties we combine it with net, lawn, muslin and organdie in the form of colored basques, coatees and the sleeveless jackets, which it is now possible to buy separately in the department stores. What are called "porch frocks" are sold in great variety.

It is a good thing for one of the principal products of our own country that we so generally adopt the cotton fabrics for summer wear. But regard we this, as the French say. Some months ago an active cotton crusade to "help the south" was inaugurated with great blowing of trumpets. It was demonstrated to us how many varied articles were made of cotton, and endless were the surprises of finding, for example, that one's white "London ivory" comb was really made of southern cotton.

We were urged to give up linen bed coverings and take to the less frigid cotton ones; even the superior lightness and washableness of cotton blankets were pointed out to us. Ardent crusaders implored us to relinquish the silk petticoats, which widened skirts had just caused us to adopt, and take to cotton substitutes. Everybody talked cotton for a few weeks, and then the whole subject died a natural death until the Parisian designers, who know nothing about the south and care less, suddenly revived it with the decree of two washable petticoats under the summer's flounced gowns.

Care of the Stove.

To prevent your gas stove from rusting inside of your oven or outside surface use a few drops of linseed oil on a cloth and rub over thoroughly. This can also be used on coal ranges or other style iron stoves, after which you use stove paste to which a few drops of black coffee are added to moisten paste, and then brush over. It will polish up quickly and reward you with a brilliant luster.

Metal Polish.

A high polish for metals is made by mixing two ounces of prepared chalk, three-quarters of an ounce of pipeclay, half an ounce of white lead, a quarter ounce of carbonate of magnesia and a quarter ounce of jeweler's rouge.

A Matrimonial Shack

By ESTHER VANDEVEER

Jamieson proposed to his stenographer within sixty days after she entered his service. He had never seen her before she came to work for him; consequently he had known her but two months.

"You know little or nothing about me," was her reply to his declaration.

"I know you are refined, that you have character, and I am willing to risk the rest. If you marry me you will have to take me all on trust."

"Don't you care to know anything of my antecedents?"

"No. It would doubtless make me ashamed of my own antecedents. We will be marrying each other, not each other's antecedents. Marriage is a new birth. I expect to be a much better man under your influence."

She fixed her eyes on him curiously, but asked no further questions. She understood his peculiar makeup instinctively. It was fortunate she did. Couples who are incapable of understanding each other are liable to quarrel after wedlock has taken the edge off their romance.

Jamieson gave his fiancee a vacation for the rest of her term of service with him. She was to take a rest, which she sadly needed. A year before she came to work for him she had lived in affluence. Reverses had deprived her of the beautiful home in which she had been born and had always lived. She and her mother had been turned out of it, and half a year later the mother had died, leaving her daughter alone in the world. While in Jamieson's service she had been grieving, and she wondered how he could have come to covet one so lugubrious. He had never asked for the cause of her melancholy, and she had never offered to reveal it.

And now she had suggested that she tell him something about her past, for she wished him to know that she was born in a station no less exalted than his own, for he was not only well to do, but educated and refined. Though she liked his independent way of looking on marriage, she was a bit disappointed that he had not given her an opportunity to tell him that she had been brought up a lady and until a year before had lived in a home that it had nearly broken her heart to leave. But she knew that she must take him as she found him and had confidence that beneath his somewhat crude philosophy he was not a bad man, and she was quite sure that despite his matter of fact way of looking at sentimental things he was not devoid of sentiment.

Jamieson insisted on his fiancee going to the country for the summer months. "I don't wish my bride to look like a piece of marble," he said. "I desire that you put in the time between now and our marriage trying to get some color in your cheeks. I can make all the necessary preparations for a place to live and all that. If you did your share of it you would not be getting the rest you need. Besides, think how pleasant it will be not to be bothered with suggestions."

She admired his frankness, but it seemed to her that he was a trifle selfish. He was thinking of himself in wanting his bride to be approved by his friends instead of desiring her to regain her health for her own sake. He was a good man, but was inclined to selfishness.

Jamieson, while she was away in the country, did not write her long and loving letters. He claimed that a man of thirty-eight was too old for "that sort of thing," as he expressed it. He said that he would try to make up for the deficiency after marriage by giving her a kiss at least once a month. She took these things with a "good deal of salt," but after all how much pleasanter it would have been to be engaged to a lover-like man!

He wrote that he was looking for a "shack," as he called it, for them to live in; then one day he wrote her that he had found one. He didn't suppose she would like it, but it was the best he could do. He managed to say one pleasant thing—he believed the home in which a couple lived should stand in the name of the wife and he had put the deed in her name.

The summer came to an end at last, and the future Mrs. Jamieson returned to the city. Her lover seemed quite pleased with the change in her and said that he would not be ashamed of her appearance. He asked her if she would like a large or a small wedding, and she replied that since it was evident he would wish his own way about everything else she might as well give in in that as all the rest. Then he showed his obstinacy in refusing to decide the matter, and she chose a small wedding. Indeed, she preferred that no guest should be present.

They were married at noon, and, since the groom was unable to leave his business, instead of taking a wedding trip they went direct to their future home. The bride asked no questions about it, but she was in a quiver to see it. She did not believe it was a shack, but she doubted since Jamieson needed his capital in his business that he would buy a pretentious abode.

It was dark when they reached their new home, but when Mrs. Jamieson alighted and looked at it she drew back. She was before the house from which she had been turned out a year before. Then she looked at her husband in wondering inquiry. But he hurried her into it, and when they were inside he said:

"How do you like your shack?"

Then it burst upon her that under an assumed matter of fact philosophy he had been covering up the sentiment of a lover.

A STYLE TIP OF REAL VALUE.

One-piece dress of dark blue serge made in semi-princess effect and trimmed with velvet and fur.

A clever frock is this semi-princess costume in dark blue French serge, trimmed with buttons, panne velvet and narrow bands of fur. If the turndown collar is not desired a vest with high collar may be substituted very easily. The back gore and back of the waist are cut in one piece, while the skirt is a four-piece model finished with a deep hem. In average size the frock requires 5¾ yards 44-inch material, with ¾ yard velvet and 1 yard of fur for the trimming.

The front gore of the skirt is so wide that it is necessary, when cutting, to place it on an open width of the material. To avoid waste, the remaining sections of the pattern are cut in the same way, the serge, of course, being doubled. Two like sides should be placed facing each other so that the various parts will not be cut for the same side.

The piecing for the front gore is laid along one selvage edge, and next to it is arranged the shield. Opposite the gore piecing is the sleeve, which is provided in both plain and fancy effect, and to the right of the sleeve comes the front of the waist. South of the front arrange the collar and to the right of this the trimming piece that appears at either side of the waist, overlapping the girdle. The long strip forming the back and the back gore runs the length of the material which comprises the area between the crosswise edge and the front gore of the skirt.

Ankle length is sure to meet the approval of conservative dressers, but for shorter length the lower edges of the gores may be cut off on single or double "oo" perforations. Cut off the front edge of left front gore on slot perforations.

A narrow line of fur will add a characteristic touch to a simple frock and an air of distinction and elegance.

Faultfinder (in front of dairy restaurant)—I notice the word dairy on your new sign is spelled d-i-a-r-y. Proprietor—I know it is. I was going to have it changed, but the painter convinced me his way of spelling the word was more suggestive. Faultfinder—More suggestive? Proprietor—Yes; he said it conveyed the idea of putting things down.—Judge.

HOW TO USE SOME DELIGHTFUL AND HEALTHFUL BEAUTY RECIPES.

Here is a mixture for bath bags which is truly delightful: Four pounds of fine oatmeal, two quarts of clean bran, one and a half pounds of powdered orris root, one and a half pounds of almond meal, one pound of white castile soap, powdered and dried, and three ounces of primrose sachet.

Instead of placing in cheesecloth bags, which is a wasteful way of using the delightful stuff, sprinkle a little of the mixture on the moistened wash cloth.

Here is a bath for the emaciated which was a favorite with the ancients: Mix one tablespoonful of lavender water with several times the amount of pure olive oil. Apply a little at a time and rub it well into the body with the entire hand, using a rotary motion. Keep the body warm while taking the treatment.

Care of the Baby In Summer

Out of Door Life.

[Prepared by the children's bureau, United States department of labor.]

Keep the baby out of doors. It is almost as important to feed the lungs on fresh air as it is to feed the stomach on fresh milk. Stale air is almost as harmful as stale food, and there is far less excuse for it. Fresh air and sunshine at all times of the year are essential to the baby's health and growth, but mothers too often fail to realize this fact. Babies are frequently kept on a starvation allowance of these two things, sometimes from unhappy necessity, when the home is in a crowded, unventilated apartment in a large city. When this is the case the mother must do her best for the baby by taking him as often as possible to the parks, recreation piers, playgrounds and other public open places provided for this purpose by the city. Outings for mothers and babies to the country or seashore are often given by churches and other organizations during the hot summer months in large cities. Many an infant's life has been saved by even a brief stay in the country, but where this is not feasible even brief changes of air such as are secured in the parks are of great benefit to a baby, as well as to the mother.

In the smaller cities and towns, and in the country there can be little excuse for depriving a baby of outdoor life and a constant supply of fresh air. In fact, in suitable weather the baby may practically live out of doors. In the hottest weather, when it is cooler in doors than out, the baby should be kept in until the heat is over, but at night and in the morning he may be out for several hours. A screened porch on the shady side of the house, where he may play and sleep, will afford the baby many hours of outdoor life. A sick baby especially needs fresh air, and when possible the crib should be set up on the porch, provided the baby can be protected from the hot sun and from flies and mosquitoes.

Experience has shown that sick babies stand a much better chance of life and recover much more rapidly if kept out of doors. Common sense should guide the mother in this as in all matters where the baby is concerned, and she will realize that if a high wind is blowing dust about or a sudden storm comes up and the temperature drops many degrees in a few moments the baby should be taken in or protected from a chill by suitable clothing and wraps.

The young baby may be taken out when he is two weeks old for half an hour if the weather is warm and pleasant, gradually lengthening the time he stays out. Remember that the baby's eyes are very sensitive and must always be carefully shielded, not only from the sun, but also from direct light. Babies are often wheeled about in their carriages staring directly up into the sky. Try it yourself for a few moments and you will realize the cruelty to the baby, who may not even be able to relieve this strain on the eyes by turning his head to one side.

When the baby is sent out with a nurse she should be instructed on this point and also how long she is to keep the baby out and be warned of the danger of allowing strangers to play with him or kiss him.

The carriage outing should not be regarded as giving the baby enough fresh air for the day. In addition to this he should live on the porch in suitable weather. If it is necessary to bring him in the windows and doors should be opened, screening them as suggested in a previous article.

The baby should sleep at night in a well ventilated bedroom, in a bed by himself and if possible in a room by himself. Keep the doors and windows open. Do not be afraid of the old superstition of the "night air."

The fear of the night air likely came from the fact that it used to be thought that malarial poisons arose in the night before it was known that this disease is only carried about by mosquitoes, which fly chiefly after nightfall.

In malarial regions screens are indispensable. If the house is provided with a screened sleeping porch there is no reason why the baby should not sleep out at night after he is three months old, provided, of course, he is carefully protected. Babies thus taught from the beginning of life to enjoy the open air will be far less sensitive than others and much less likely to suffer from colds and similar troubles as they grow older.

AMUNDSEN VOYAGE OVER POLE IS OFF

New York.—Captain Roald Amundsen, discoverer of the South Pole and navigator of the only vessel that ever went through the Northwest Passage, has abandoned his drifting expedition across the North Pole, according to information received in this city yesterday. The European war and the choking of the Panama Canal, by which route he was waiting to approach the Arctic from the Pacific, combined to influence the explorer to forsake the proposed journey, which has been his ambition for nearly ten years.

Captain Amundsen has made arrangements to enter the Polar Sea through Behring Strait, thence steam due north until his vessel should become frozen in the ice. Then he expected to drift for six years, or possibly seven, the time that scientists have learned it takes for ice or wreckage to cross the Arctic Ocean from west to east.

Captain Amundsen was to have passed through the Panama Canal early last spring so his slow little freak of a vessel, the Fram, could get to the Arctic by summer. But the war and the slides in the canal have delayed him until he has decided to send his vessel back to Christiana, Norway.

Scientists and Arctic club members in this city will be disappointed at the abandonment of the expedition because they had the greatest confidence that the Norseman surely would clear up the mystery of the great expanse of unexplored territory still in the North. There was a reason for such confidence, because Captain Amundsen and his craft formed a magnificent combination for the feat.

Captain Amundsen looks more like a university professor than a navigator and talks with much the same precision, but his quiet steel blue eyes typify the explorer who tells of his accomplishments rather than of his intentions.

FORTY HURT AS CARS ON B. R. T. CRASH

New York.—Forty persons were injured in a rear-end trolley car crash during the rush hours last night at Church avenue and East Ninety-first street, Brooklyn. Nine were taken to the Kings County and the St. Mary hospitals, where it was stated that two probably would die.

A panic followed the impact. Both cars were crowded to the limit with men and women returning to their homes from business. The first car, a closed one, had come to a standstill around a curve and was out of sight of an open car coming behind it at a good speed until it also passed the curve, when Frank Fay, of No. 322 Palmetto street, the motorman, tried too late to stop it.

Many passengers on the running board of the second car, realizing that a crash was inevitable, leaped into the street, tumbling on top of each other in their eagerness to get away from the approaching danger. They suffered bruises and cuts.

JUST AS PUZZLING AS WHO WILL WIN SERIES

Newark, N. J.—The senior class in the New Jersey Law School here yesterday was directed by a law professor to prepare answers as part of their lesson to the following question:

"In whose possession is a baseball which has been thrown by the pitcher and before it has reached the batter or the catcher?"

The answers are to be submitted next week, with a statement of authorities and precedents. As the regular baseball season is ended several students said they probably would have to attend the World's Series to get first hand information.

A justice of the New Jersey Supreme Court said he was unable to answer the question; that possession and ownership always had been one of the most troublesome problems in law.

Our Northern Apples

Oregon is heralding a new apple. Oregonians call it the banana apple, and they are marketing the product for $1 a dozen in the East. They hold that it beats all the other kinds of apples, East or West, easily eliminating them from consideration.

It will be a hard labor to introduce a banana apple in the East, especially so if it comes from Oregon. Oregon apples are good to look upon, but disappointing to the taste. When it come to a palatable apple, with a twang that lingers, try a St. Lawrence or a Grimes Golden, grown right up here in Northern New York. There's no pulp there. They are not tasteless.

Oregon apples are not improving through grafting processes, but it seems to require a cold climate to make the perfect apple. The western apples are things of beauty in appearance, and therefore, they find ready sale—for the first time—on the stand of the Italian fruit vendor. But they are too pulpy and do not "take hold" with enough strength.

The easterner will say, "Deliver me from the banana apple." The ordinary western apple is soft enough without reducing it still more by processes of cultivation through grafting. In contemplating an Oregon apple there is much pleasure, but in partaking thereof one readily sees the full meaning of that old phrase about the Red Sea apples turning to ashes on the lips.—Watertown Times.

STRIKERS GET WAGES AGGREGATING $200,000

Schenectady. — Twelve thousand strikers of the General Electric Company employes marched through the streets here today to the plant of the company to receive wages aggregating $200,000.

Today was pay day at the big plant and it was decided by the strikers that rather than to apply for their envelopes separately that they would proceed in a body to the paymaster's window.

The great phalanx of idle men traversed prominent streets en route to the plant. It was a sight which can hardly be compared to any other spectacle witnessed in this city.

BLASTING HILLS TO STOP CANAL SLIDES

Panama.—The Panama Canal will remain closed until all danger of serious slides in the Gaillard cut is passed. Major General George W. Goethals, Governor of the Canal Zone, today issued orders to the dredging engineers to blast away the tops of the hills in order to bring into the channel all loose dirt and thus permanently remove the source of the slides. General Goethals was unable to say when the canal would again be in condition for the passage of ships, but said he would leave on November 1, the date to which the canal has been officially closed, unchanged.

General Goethals, however, expressed the personal opinion that the canal would be closed much beyond that date.

PRESIDENT AND FIANCE IN N. Y.

They Deny Quick Wedding Rumor---Will Go to Theatre Tonight---German Count Among First to Felicitate

New York.—President Wilson and his fiance, Mrs. Norman Galt, arrived here today. They will attend the theater tonight as guests of Colonel House and tomorrow the world's series game will be witnessed in Philadelphia.

Mr. Wilson and Mrs. Galt are accompanied by a party which includes Mrs. William H. Bolling, Mrs. Galt's mother; Miss Helen Woodrow Bones, Mr. Wilson's cousin; Joseph P. Tumulty, Secretary to the Presidtn, and Passed Assistant Surgeon Cary T. Grayson, U. S. N., the White House physician.

The entire party will leave the baseball grounds immediately after the game and board a special train for Washington. They hope to be at the White House for dinner.

Messages of congratulation poured into the White House yesterday from friends of the President who read in the morning newspapers of the engagement. They came from every state, along with notes from officials in Washington. Among the first to felicitate the President was Count von Bernstorff, German Ambassador, and Senor Romulo S. Naon, Ambassador of Argentina.

Mrs. Galt likewise received messages of good wishes from many of her friends, some of whom she received at her home, No. 1308 Twentieth st., N. W., near Dupont Circle. She denied herself, however, to interviewers.

"I Am Very Happy."

"I am very happy!" is all that she told the reporters.

Arrangements for the wedding are taking form. Close friends of the President let it be known authoritatively that the ceremony would be at the residence of Mrs. Galt, in order to correct a general understanding that it would be held at the White House.

There is no definite work, but it is regarded as probable the wedding service will be performed by the Rev. C. Ernest Smith, rector of St. Thomas' Episcopal church, of which Mrs. Galt is a communicant. Mr. Wilson is a Presbyterian and attends services at the Central Presbyterian church.

In all probability the bride will be given in marriage by one of her brothers. The speculation connects the nome of Colonel House as chief attendant for Mr. Wilson, although the name of Passed Assistant Surgeon Grayson also is mentioned.

One of the White House messengers went to the home of Mrs. Galt yesterday with a huge bouquet of flowers from the President's conservatories. Ie became known that Mr. Wilson had been sending flowers to her for several weeks, although care was taken to keep the fact from the public.

Mr. Wilson appeared at his desk in the executive offices of the White House yesterday and received the con gratulations of the staff of secretaries and other employes. He smiled radiant ly and then sat down to look over rapidly accumulating messages of greetings from friends.

Ninth from Pocahontas.

Washington took the greatest interest in dispatches from Richmond, Va., which said that Mrs. Galt is a descendant in the ninth generation of Pocohontas, favorite daughter of Powhatan, whor uled the Algonquin Indian nation three hundred and fifty years ago.

The dispatches showed that Thomas Rolfe, son of Pocohontas and John Rolfe, married Jane Poythress. Their daughter, Jane Rolfe, married John Bolling, son of Colonel Robert Bolling, of the British army.

Archibald Bolling, of Virginia, was the great-great-great-grandson of J. Bolling and also the paternal grandfather of Mrs. Galt. His son was William Holcomb Bolling, father of Mrs. Galt.

French Troops Cut Down German Salient; Artillery Triumph Over Germans

Paris, October 9, 1915.—The remarkable efficiency of the French artillery, which has been demonstrated again in Champagne by the capture of Tahure and the progress toward Ste. Marie, is expected here to retain for the French forces a definite superiority over the Germans. The gallantry of the infantry—the utter recklessness and high spirit of their charges—is contributing greatly to this result.

Reports reaching Paris from the front indicate the German advanced positions are suffering already from the bombardments to which the depots in the rear and the communication trenches are subjected.

"At the rate things are going," said a wounded sergeant major yesterday, "it will be a long time before the Germans are in a position to think of a counter offensive. Our heavy artillery 'sprays' their rear formations, paralyzing the bringing up of reinforcements and supplies to such a degree that the last prisoners captured at Tahure had not eaten in more than forty-eight hours and had no cartridges in their pouches."

The French now are working to strengthen out their line from Tahure to Ville surTurbe. The German front forms a pronounced salient southeast of Tahure in the direction of Le Mesnil. Last night's official announcement said two block houses and several trench positions on this salient had been carried during the day.

In the Artois sector the Germans launched furious counter attacks against Loos. All of them were repulsed. The artillery conducted a heavy bombardment of the British works as a preliminary to the infantry advances, but it had little effect on the strength of the defences.

The last communication from the War Office, made public late in the evening, read:—

"After an intense bombardment with shells of various calibre, the Germans attempted today a very violent attack against Loos and its northern and southern approaches. This attack was completely repulsed and the attackers suffered heavy losses.

"In Champagne we have made new and perceptible progress to the southeast of Tahure. We have gained a foothold in the fortified work 'Le Trapeze' and carried several trenches and two block houses included in the salient still held by the enemy in front of his second line of defence.

"More than two hundred prisoners, a bomb thrower and some machine guns were captured by us.

"Artillery actions have taken place on both sides in the Western Argonne, in the wood of Le Pretre, in the Vosges at Braenkopf and on the approaches to Sondernach."

VON MAC KENSEN DRIVES FOR CONTROL OF RAILWAY

London, Oct. 9—No news of a formal declaration of hostilities between Bulgaria on the one hand and the Quadruple Entente and Serbia on the other so far has been received. Instead, according to messages from Rome, the Austro-German intention is to postpone Bulgarian intervention so as to prevent Serbia from calling upon Greece to fulfill her obligations as an ally.

A despatch from the Daily Telegraph's Athens correspondent says the newspapers there publish long accounts from Salonica of the number of allied transports in the port and the troops landed. The Daily Mail's Salonica correspondent says that up till Thursday the number of men actually landed was 32,000 of which 5,000 were British.

Aided by British artillery which has been in service with the Serbs since last spring and by the French aviation corps, the Serbian army is engaging the Austro-German forces of invasion at every point on the frontier and has at least temporarily stopped the march to Constantinople in its first stage.

Contesting the crossings of the Save and the Danube, Serb detachments have held the Teutonic advance columns to the river banks or are engaged fiercely with them in the vicinity of the crossings. The Germanic trops who moved over from Semlin to occupy Belgrade seem to have met with a real reverse, having been either killed or captured.

Not until last night was the full extentt of the Serbian invasion revealed. Advices from Nish first located the points at which the campaign began. These reports named eight sectors of the northern frontier which had been selected by the Germanic command for attack. They extend from the Drina estuary almost to the Iron Gate, or from Yarak, on the Save, to Ram, on the Danube, an airline distance of one hundred miles.

Field Marshal von Mackensen, transferred from the eastern theatre with a part of his army which had been mired in the Pinsk marshes to take supreme command in the Balkans, apparently directed his heaviest blows at Ram and the Quay, east of Belgrade, and at Ozanlia Island and Ostrusuitza, west of the old capital. These sectors control the termini of the only railroads running into the interior of Serbia and on to Sofia and Constantinople—the Orient route, which runs from Budapest to Belgrade and the Bosphorus. A short branch leaves the main line at Vel Plana and runs north in the Morava Valley to Semendria, on the Danube. This town has been under frequent bombardment the last fortnight and is easily accessible from the Quay or Ram. Observers here believe the attacks on the extreme western end of the frontier and along the Drina are more in the nature of demonstrtions to contain the Serbian forces than actual attempts at invasion, since, the country being mountainous and destitute of railway or other means of rapid communication, little military advantage in the circumstances could follow from an attack in force.

No indication of the strength of the Austro-German advanced columns is found in any of the despatches from the Balkans. An official message to the Serbian Legation from Nish, received late last night, says the losses of the invaders have been "enormous."

ST. JOSEPH'S COUNCIL TO CELEBRATE COLUMBUS DAY; A FINE PROGRAM

Plans for the annual celebration of Columbus Day have been completed by St. Joseph's Council, Knights of Columbus, and a splendid program is announced. James K. PRESIDENT AND FIANCEE CHEERED EVERYWHERE

New York.—For the first time since the announcement of their engagement, President Wilson and his fancee, Mrs. Norman Galt, appeared in public here yesterday, coming from Washington to be the guests at dinner and the theatre of Colonel E. M. House, Mr. Wilson's closest friend.

The President's party arrived at the Pennsylvania station at seventeen minutes after three o'clock, and from the moment they passed out from the Thirty-first street carriage drive portals they had no reason to doubt the extent the public interest in the recently announced engagement.

The appearance of Mr. Wilson and Mrs. Galt was the signal for a loud outburst of cheering that came from the congested group of men, women and children behind a rigidly enforced line and from the windows of the station to the north and the south.

This applause and this interest reappeared everywhere they were seen and recognized during a ride in the afternoon and on their arrival at the theatre at night. To add to the general impressiveness of their progress at all moments there tropped behind them seven or eight automobiles laden with active photographers and motion picture men, who took pictures from daring angles, defying all known traffic rules and all regulations for the protection of life and limb.

President in High Spirits

Despite the President's usual distaste for public display he was in fine good humor, and he and Mrs. Galt settled themselves for photographic poses, with obliging smiles, time and again, even smiling and bowing to order at the request of an enthusiastic coterie of motion picture operators, who were stationed in frot of the St. Regis Hotel, at which Mrs. Galt, her mother, Mrs. W. H. Bolling, and Miss Helen Woodrow Bones, the President's cousin, are stopping.

In the President's party which arrived from Washington, besides Mrs. Galt, were her mother, Mrs. Bolling, Miss Bones, Passed Assistant Surgeon Cary T. Grayson, U. S. N., the President's naval aid and personal physician, and Joseph P. Tumulty, secretary to the President.

Long before the train arrived a large number of detectives from the Police Department and the United States Secret Service were about the station. On the platform, under charge of Police Lieutenant M. J. Regan, of the Second Branch Detective Bureau, several detectives were stationed, and they were reinforced by Secret Service men. In the carriage drive at the Thirty-first street side of the station were fifty detectives from Police Headquarters, who searched for weapons every man and woman who looked suspicious.

From the station to the St. Regis Hotel the President made the trip in a limousine, butf rom there and on the drive later he and Mrs. Galt rode in an open touring automobile. The President went into the hotel for Mrs. Galt before the drive, going to her apartment and escorting her to the automobile. His attention to Mrs. Galt at all times were marked.

"Isn't she stunning!" "My isn't she sweet!" "What beautiful roses!" and Mrs. Galt, overhearing these remarks looked about evidently pleased, and smiled. In the automobile the President raised his hat and smiled at the throng, which pressed close, and then turned his attention to the motion picture operators and photographers who were beseeching him and Mrs. Galt to smile.

It was the President who called Mrs. Galt's attention to these requests, being tried in a louder and more beseeching set of voices as each moment flitted by. He touched her lightly on the arm, and she turned and smiled rather timidly into the eyes of the cameras and made two little bows. Then, with a whirl, the automobile was off.

The President sat at the left, outside, in the tonneau, and next to him was Mrs. Galt. Her mother, Mrs. Bolling, sat on the outside to the right. Dr. Grayson and Colonel House sat in front of them, and Joseph Murphy, Chief of the White House division of the Secret Service, sat with the chauffeur.

The party drove up Fifth avenue to Central Park, and from there along the East drive to Cathedral Parkway, where it turned west to Riverside Drive, going as far as Broadway and 26th street. Behind the police and secret service automobiles came the procession of cameras. The drive was alive with automobiles and it was remarkable how many of them recognized the President, recalling that he was to be in New York with his fiancee.

Registration Yesterday Was Heavy; Increase Over Two Years Ago

One hundred voters, from an expected total registration of 267, registered yesterday in the first district of the Fifth ward. This number is practically twice that of the ttotal registration for the first day of the last mayorality election and it is expected that today will see another large registration all over the city. Men in political life say that the various nominees are taking added interest in bringing voters to the polls.

Republicans are confident of victory in the coming election but the Democrats claim they are sure of victory for their candidates, from the fact that a rumor going the rounds tells in effect that the Republican organization has been split into three factions, each faction upholding certain policies in regard to the campaign which the others cannot agree upon. Both parties have canvassers out, and it is apparent that the battle is already well under way.

The only bitter fight which has come to light so far is the situation in the First and Sixth wards for the election of a supervisor. George Pomphret, Democrat, who has held office for two terms is again seeking re-election. He is opposed by Benjamin Ingersoll who is the choice of the Republican and Prohibition parties. A number of Republicans in the Sixth, commonly known as the "bloody sixth", want to see Mr. Pomphret deposed, but the Democratic candidate says that he consented to run at the primaries mainly because of the requests made by his Republican friends.

Mr. Pomphret is the only Democratic supervisor hailing from the city. He has been twice elected by a good majority, even though the two wards which he represents are strongly Republican. Wade E. Gayer and George Fuller, the other for the supervisors hip are both Republicans and have held office three terms and are again candidates.

General satisfaction is also expressed with the last named gentlemen, from the fact that, having served their constituents long and faithfully, they have become well versed in the details of their positions and should by all sense of reasoning continue to give value received.

One reason held forth by the present incumbents on the Board of Supervisors for wanting to return is that the Crosby Hill road is the next county road in this vicinity to receive attention. Every old and new supervisor has announced his desire to see the connecting link between the city line on Oneida st. and the state road at the top of Crosby Hill placed in good condition.

Another argument used in favor of the re-election of the three supervisors is the decrease in the county tax assessment since the men entered office. The surplus tax on city taxpayers at that time the supervisors first took office ran into three figures; now it is low in the two figure column.

The polls will close at 10 o'clock tonight and will reopen next Friday at 7 a. m. Those who have been unable to register this week will have the two days next week in which to register and enroll. The polls next Friday and Saturday will be open from 7 a. m. to 10 p. m.

FOUND WITH PHEASANT; ARRESTED AND FINED $25 IN CITY COURT

Fred Collins, local game protector, arrested an Italian yesterday after a chase on a charge of having in his possession a pheasant. The man when arraigned in Police Court this morning before Judge Wilson pleaded guilty to the charge of carrying on his person game killed out of season but he refused to be responsible for killing the bird. He was fined $25 and released.

The man when first seen by the officer was carrying the dead pheasant under his arm. He tried to escape but was overtaken by the game warden and brought to police headquarters. He was locked up and bailed out later by Frank Massaro.

The man claimed that a friend of his shot the bird and gave it to him. Later it was learned he was trying to sell the bird.

There are separate game laws covering the case. One law covers the killing the game out of season, the other being in unlawful possession of game killed out of season. The State law allows sets a specific day in the month in which pheasants may be hunted.

THE PRE-ACADEMIC LADS DEFEATED MINETTO TEAM

The Pre-academic baseball team defeated the Minetto team yesterday to the tune of 9-3. Only one hit was made off of Wallace, the local slabster, while the Pre-academic team walloped the opposing pitcher all over the lot. Wallace walked two men. Baker, the Minetto tosser walked three.

REGISTRATION DAY

This is registration day for all voters who desire to exercise the privilege of the franchise at the November polls.

Communication

Evening Times:

While on a brief vacation I stopped at Fulton and in one of the public business places I happened to see a "notice" of the main business people of the town.

The part of the notice that struck me forcibly was, why not mention all those people instead of a few? I am afraid the person or persons who looked these "business people" up must have had other work at the same time and missed a good many of the very best in the place.

For instance, I see our druggists, E. A. Putnam and Roberts and Wood, were forgotten. These places keep as fresh drugs and give as good service as those mentioned. Katz as a department store was forgotten and you will find Dr. E. A. Gladman, Dr, E. M. Anderson, Dr. Schlappi, Dr. Keller, Dr, Terpening, Dr. Joy and Dr. Lake, all just as good in their line of treatment as those mentioned. Then the town has more nurses than two and I think, like the Doctors you will find their services are as much needed as those mentioned, Of these we have Blanch Robinson, Stella Godfrey Dann, Jennie DeForest, Mrs. Stevenson, F. Croreley Thorp, Mae Wells Cole.

As to liverymen, the list left out the "Fulton Livery," one of the largest liveries in Northern New York and Kennedy's.

I haven't tried to mention all but call your atention to a few and wonder if I should ever visit the city again, if I will find a "notice" with half of the best business people in Fulton mentioned and some of the rest who have done just as good work and served the people of the city just as well, forgotten?

Non-Political

The suffrage question is quite like the temperance question. There are Democrats and Republicans who believe in extending suffrage to women, and there are Democrats and Republicans who do not believe in doing so. President Wilson happens to be a Democrat who believes in woman suffrage. He does not believe in making prohibition a national issue. He does believe, however, in each State settling the question for itself as several States have done in the past, and as it happens that his own State is about to vote on the question. Mr. Wilson tells the people of New Jersey that so far as he, individually, is concerned he is a believer in woman suffrage.

The incident is interesting—not because suffrage for women has been endorsed by the President of the United States, but because Woodrow Wilson, a man of distinctive learning and broad study, announces that he favors that cause.—Utica Observer.

THE WAY OF SOME EVIDENCE

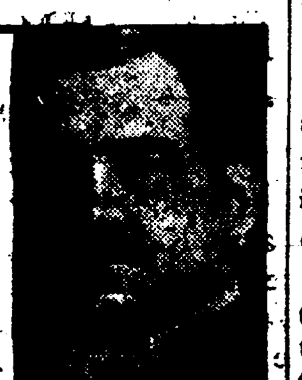
A prisoner was arrested in a western town, the other day on a charge of dynamiting. He was suspected of having purchased the dynamite from a merchant in another town, who swore roundly that he could pick the purchaser of the explosive out of a thousand. Bringing the merchant into court for that purpose, a level headed judge removed the prisoner from the box and shuffled him up with some attorneys, reporters and court attaches. Then the witness was asked to pick out his man. He positively identified a newspaper reporter present. Everybody laughed. Feeling that he had made a mistake, the witness backed up and spotted a court officer next. Then everybody roared. Pointing at the prisoner the district attorney asked if the witness had sold THAT man any dynamite. Suspecting a frame-up, he stoutly declared he had never seen the man before. The judge, in disgust, dismissed the charge.

It is laughable, of course, but suppose the accused had been in the prisoner's box where the witness instinctively looked for him, and where the police generally put him, in such cases. An innocent man would have probably been railroaded on "circumstantial evidence," the laugh would have been on Justice and the comedy a tragedy.

LITTLE TALKS ON THRIFT

By S. W. STRAUS

President American Society for Thrift



It is a hard thing for many people to realize that thrift, among other things, means taking care of the pennies. The housekeeper has a splendid chance to apply the rules of thrift and save many pennies in one way or another. Personal marketing instead of telephone marketing is an economy. The housewife may then select the best in the way of food and household supplies, and guard against short weights and measures and food adulteration. Watching closely the advertisements in the newspapers means a saving of money. The newspaper advertisement is often a guide post to economy.

Girls should be taught to make their own clothes, to darn and mend, trim their own hats, and be saving in the amount of material used. An old saying has it that instead of throwing anything away it should be saved for seven years; if at the end of that time one has no use for it, it should be saved seven years longer; but if one still has no use for it, it should be thrown away. This saying is typical of the American lack of thrift. To waste storage room by merely keeping a thing and not using it is not an example of economy. One should find the use to which it can be put in the saving of time, money, or energy.

Conserving waste material is now becoming a paying field in this country. A recent report shows that the value of old iron and steel re-used amounts to millions of dollars annually. The United States Geological Survey reports that the value of secondary metals recovered reached a total in 1914 of $57,039,706. "Secondary" metals are recovered from scrap metal, sweepings, etc. Recovered secondary copper (including brass) in 1914 amounted to 127,882 tons, being over 22 per cent of the primary copper smelted in the United States from domestic ores during the year. The secondary lead recovered was equal to 11 perc ent of the primary refined lead produced in the country. The amount of secondary zinc recovered in 1914 was equal to over 20 per cent of the production of primary zinc during the year.

Marshal Field knew the value of economy in little things. He was born in Massachusetts when, as he said, all the people were poor. Money was not easily earned and a dollar seemed a large amount. Because money was so hard to get it was not spent as soon as earned and people learned how to be thrifty. Mr. Field once said of himself that he was naturally of a saving disposition. He became a clerk in a country "general" store and during the four years that he stayed there he saved his earnings and paid strict attention to the business. No business man has ever become successful by doing otherwise. In 1856 Mr. Field went to Chicago and a little later became a member of a dry goods firm. Mr. Field always gave the credit for his success not only to ambition, energy and sound business principles, but to the fact that he saved his first $5,000, instead of spending it, as many do.

Constitution—Workingmen

The laboring men who are urged to vote against the proposed new constitution because certain demands of certain labor leaders were not granted, had better examine that document before making their decision. Certainly a good many workingmen who will read the document will see the great possible benefit for themselves if the following proposed amendment to the constitution is made in regard to "compensation for injuries or occupational diseases of employes:"

Section 19. Nothing contained in this constitution shall be construed to limit the power of the legislature to enact laws for the protection of the lives, health or safety of employes; of for the payment, either by employers, or by employers and employees or otherwise, either directly or through a state or other system of insurance or otherwise, of compensation for injuries to or occupational diseases of employees or for death of employees resulting from such injuries or diseases without regard to fault as a cause thereof, except where the injury is occasioned by the wilful intention of the injured employee to bring about the injury or death of himself or of another, or where the injury results solely from the intoxication of the injured employee while on duty;; or for the adjustment, determination and settlement, with or without trial by jury, of issues which may arise under such legislation; or providing that the right to such compensation, and the remedy therefor shall be exclusive of all other rights and remedies for such injuries or diseases or death. But all moneys paid by an employer by reason of the enactment of any of the laws herein authorized, shall be deemed a part of the cost of operating the business of the employer.—Watertown Standard.

Approaching Advent of Commercial Wireless Telephony

The announcement of the successful wireless telephone tests held on September 29th between the Government wireless station, at Arlington, near Washington, and a temporary installation at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, a distance of 4,900 miles by air line, has been received by the world of science in general, and wireless men in particular, with the greatest surprise. No more important step has been made in wireless communication during recent years. And the amazement created by the achievement is considerably amplified by the fact that the success is scored by an unknown wireless telephone system which has ben secretly developed during the past three years by the engineers of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company.

Aside from the great distances covered, the tests are interesting in that they have demonstrated the possibility of speaking into any Bell telephone instrument and have the conversation transferred to the wireless telephone apparatus situated several hundred miles away. This, obviously, renders the future commercial wireless telephone available to any one having access to the regular telephone service; and it is not impossible that at no distant date a person in his home, using the ordinary telephone instrument, will be able to hold conversation with another person on a steamer in mid-ocean: We have the assurances of John J. Carty, chief engineer of the company and head of the corps of engineers who developed the new wireless telephone, that this will be realized within but few years' time.

The wireless telephone has always toiled under an unlucky star. It never enjoyed that period of infancy in the laboratory that is accorded most inventions—it was exploited long before it approached a state of commercial practicability, and hence resulted in ignominous failure. Little wonder that the possibilities of the wireless telephone have been, and still are to a great extent, regarded with suspicion and derision by the scientific world. But it is fast living down its past unsavory reputation. Slowly, but surely, it has come into its own, now to be crowned by the greatest achievement of all—long distance communication in the presence of the Government officials and as the protege of capable telephone engineers as well as a powerful business organization.—Scientific American.

Psychology of Stares

A Western newspaper philosopher asks: "Can a stare be felt?" He is interested in the psychology of boiled cabbage, among other things, and when a woman comes along and tells him that a stare can be felt, he naturally wants to get at the truth of it. But let us quote him a bit:

"Can a stare be felt?" A woman who has conducted many experiments says it can—that 'no matter how deep her absorption the stare at her back will always disturb her. All girls feel a stare.' Doctor Coover, a psychologist, says a stare is not felt, and he has tested it a thousand times. It is, probably, all imagination on the part of the woman, for it is easy in such cases for what one imagines, to become real to her."

Really we thought the psychologist of the Ohio State Journal was too shrewd to be taken in by this sort of feminine experimenter. The trick she knows well eonugh that when she passes a man—or another woman—dressed in the height of modern freakish fashion, that they will turn around to stare at her. That is why she feels the stare—she knows that the human neck works automatically, and that it calls for more will power than the average woman or man possesses to refrain from turning about to see what that was which she just passed. To say that stares disturb her is nonsense. She would feel a great deal more disturbed if she caught the fellow not looking.—Rochester Herald.

WITH THE SUFFRAGISTS

Alberta bids fair to take the place in the history of woman suffrage in Canada that Wyoming has taken in the United States. Premier Sifton has announced that the government will back in the next legislature a bill giving full suffrage to men and women. If history repeats itself woman suffrage may be expected to spread from Alberta over all of western Canada and in the meantime the people of the conservative East will gravely discuss the question as though votes for women was something new under the sun.

"We expect to have the vote before New Year's Day," writes Mrs. Hettle of Manitoba to the Woman's Journal in regard to the promise of the Liberal Premier of Alberta to put through a bill giving equal suffrage, and she adds, "They promised us the vote if we could bet 15 per cent in signatures of the votes polled at the election of 1914. We expect to have at least 50 per cent.

If the Spokane Daily Chronicle is any authority, five years of woman suffrage in the state of Washington has resulted in putting "fresh support behind every lawmaker and every official who cares more for humanity than for dollars and multiplied the list of independent voters."

* * *

June in Denmark saw the signing by the King of the new constitution under which women were given equal suffrage. September in Holland saw the opening of Parliament at which Queen Wilhelmina announced that the government would introduce a bill which would clear the way for the enfranchisement of thte women of that country.

"Why to say a woman's place is home when the census says it isn't," says Max Eastman "is like saying the earth is flat after a hundred thousand people have sailed round it," and he adds, "Do you know that according to the census of 1910 more than one woman in every five in this country is engaged in gainful employment? Woman's sphere is in the home! Do you know where your SOAP comes from?"

* * *

All over the state on Sept. 28 it was made plain to every one that men do not really want to vote. Less than a third of the voters availed themselves of this "freeman's privilege" which many earnest and conscientious men hesitate to confer on women for fear they do not want it.

WOMEN TOILERS MUST ORGANIZE

In Trade Unionism Lies Their Hope For Freedom.

MOVEMENT HERE TO STAY.

Substitutes For Industrial Organization Must Be Rejected—Workers Want to Spend Their Earnings as They Please. Welfare Work and Social Centers Do Not Take Place of Justice.

By MELINDA SCOTT.
[President New York Women's Trade Union league.]

It has been very wisely said there can be no division of interest or purpose between the men and the women who work for the organization of the workers in our country. This is demonstrated in the onward sweep of organization among women wage earners.

The great curse of all nations and peoples has been and is that labor, especially woman's labor, is not properly rewarded.

One of the purposes of the American Federation of Labor through the organization of both men and women is to get the proper reward for services rendered to all who work for a living.

When labor receives such reward through the efforts of organization we will have no more sweated industries, no more child labor, in this country.

The National Women's Trade Union league held its fifth biennial convention in New York. Any one really interested in the organization of women need only attend these meetings to realize what a splendid body of women workers in all trades are today doing the uphill work of organizing the women wage earners of our country and teaching them the meaning and purpose of our great labor movement. These workers fearlessly teach that organization is necessary not only for their own industrial welfare, but for the protection of their fellow workers and those who will come after them. These women realize fully that upon them as workers rests the responsibility of working out their own salvation and raising the standard of living for all workers, because, organized or unorganized, we stand or fall together. These delegates from all over the United States proved that the organization of women is possible and beneficial, for every one of these women worked like a woman who felt herself a responsible member of a movement that stands for better conditions for every man, woman and child in the world today.

Anything which helps the organization of the workers helps to make us a better educated people as a whole. It has been said that organization breathes discontent. We organized workers must answer back: Well, if it does, it must be a holy discontent, for any man or woman who is satisfied with the labor conditions as they are today is little better than a slave. To wipe out all forms of slavery is a holy calling. Men have found it necessary to organize to improve their conditions. How much more necessary is it, then, for women, who are supposed to be the weaker sex, to organize. Yet in the unorganized trades women often work longer hours than men.

The cheapest thing in the labor market today is immigrants, women and children. It is just because women are so looked upon by the employers of labor that we, the organized women, must appeal to our organized brothers to help us by understanding us and our sincerity in the great labor movement. They can begin with the womenfolk in their own homes. We find very often that the wives and sisters of the brothers in our trade unions know nothing of the trade union movement, and we must work together until we get women as thoroughly organized as men are. Together we will see to it that child labor is abolished. There shall be equal pay for equal work and a workday which shall not bring to the workers physical and mental exhaustion and starvation wages.

This is a great age to be living in. Great changes are being made, and women must be alive to the situation and take their places by the side of the men in the industrial warfare which we are now waging against child labor, starvation wages, unfair conditions and the crushing of the hopes and aspirations of our men and women. These are causes for industrial war, and we must have soldiers with courage and sympathy.

Women must organize into trade unions, for organization among all the workers has come to stay. They must not take any substitute for industrial organization. We do not want welfare work, social centers or vacation funds. We find that the manufacturers are willing to give us everything under the sun but justice and the right to demand a living wage, shorter hours and decent conditions, with the right to spend the money that we have justly earned and a freedom to take our pleasures where and with whom we choose.

Urge State Labor Bureau.

At the first convention of the South Carolina Federation of Labor it was voted to ask the legislature to establish a state labor bureau. The unionists favored a state system of highways, a compensation bill and a fifty car bill to apply to railroads.

SOLVES DISEASE MYSTERY.

British Officer Finds Cause of 4,000 Year Scourge.

London.—Lieutenant Colonel Leiper of the London School of Tropical Medicine has just returned from Egypt, where he had been investigating bilharziosis, and has communicated an important discovery respecting this disease to the Royal Society of Medicine.

The disease, which has been a scourge to the Nile delta for thousands of years, has been discovered to have been the cause of death in mummies dating back to 2000 B. C.

In his report Colonel Leiper cited a village where 90 per cent of the children are infected. It has long been known that the disease was transmitted by water, but the life and history of the parasite have remained unestablished.

It has been discovered that the disease is started in a worm which lives in the human body. The eggs of this worm pass from the body into canals and pools, where they enter mollusc and there undergo certain evolutions. They emerge from the mollusc in a form enabling them to enter the human body through the skin. In this way the disease is commonly contracted while bathing and washing.

Colonel Leiper contends that the disease can be exterminated by filling the pools during the dry season.

Two-year-old Boy Got Bethlehem Shares Raffled by Orphan Asylum.

Ambridge, Pa.—During the orphans' picnic of Allegheny county, held at Kennywood, a ticket costing 10 cents and calling for a chance on ten shares of Bethlehem Steel company stock was bought in the name of Thomas McCroy, two years old, by his father, James McCroy, proprietor of the Hotel Grant here. The officials of the picnic received the stock from James Mulvihill, the Pittsburgh brewer.

A few days ago the stock certificate was sold in this city to a banker for $3,160 at the rate of $310 a share, the top notch price reached by the Bethlehem shares in their recent rapid rise. The money was placed on interest in the boy's name.

Old Joe.

Jolly old Joe is a fiddler man,
Who whistles and fiddles as fast as he can,
He waggles his head and he taps all his toes,
And always makes music wherever he goes.

He lives in a little red house by the brook,
A snug little, tight little, bright little nook,
Where all the small children run when they can
To visit with joy the fiddler man.

For Joey will whistle and fiddle and sing,
And happily show them each wonderful thing;
The ducks and the geese and his little red hen,
The pug that will dance when he fiddles again.

But, oh, best of all, when he whistles so clear
The birds from the woodland come fluttering near;
They twitter and chirp from each laden fruit tree
And answer old Joey as true as can be.

But when he sits down on the bench by his door
And takes up his sweetly tuned fiddle once more,
The children are quiet and stand in a row
And silently worship good gentle old Joe.

Labor Bureau Publishes Statistics by Dr. Hoffman.

PROBLEM MUST BE MET.

Declared That Compensation For Industrial Accidents Will Become Universal—Railroad and Agricultural Pursuits Responsible For More Than 4,000 Fatalities Annually.

Washington.—An important bulletin on the statistics of industrial accidents by Frederick L. Hoffman has just been issued by the United States department of labor. The New York Medical Record says in part:

"The abolition of the principle of workmen's compensation by more than half of the states within the last few years emphasizes the importance of the industrial accident problem and foreshadows the time when such compensation for industrial accidents will become universal throughout the United states.

"As one method of measuring this importance the bulletin presents an estimate of the number of fatal and nonfatal accidents occurring among American wage earners in a single year.

"The conclusion reached is that the number of fatal industrial accidents among American wage earners, including both sexes, may be conservatively estimated at 25,000 and the number of injuries involving a disability of more than four weeks, using the ratio of Austrian experience, at approximately 700,000.

"These numbers, impressive as they are, fail to indicate fully the number of industrial accidents, for such studies as have already been made show that of the accidents involving disabilities of one day and over at least three-fourths terminate during the first four weeks.

"The injuries which contribute the greatest number of fatal accidents, according to Science for Aug. 30, 1915, are railroad employments and agricultural pursuits, each group being responsible for approximately 4,200 fatalities each year. Coal mining contributes more than 2,600 and building and construction work nearly 1,900. General manufacturing, while employing large numbers, produces only about 1,800 fatal accidents.

"When the fatality rates are considered, metal mining ranks as most hazardous, with a rate of four per thousand; coal mining comes next with a rate of 3.5, and fisheries and navigation following with a rate of three per thousand.

"Manufacturing industries as a whole rank lowest, with a rate of 0.25 per thousand, but the fact should not be overlooked that this low average rate covers manufacturing groups varying widely in hazard, including on the one hand boilermaking and the various departments of the iron and steel industry, in some of which fatality rates as high as those in metal and coal mining have prevailed, and on the other hand the textile and clothing industries, in some of which the risk of fatal accident is practically negligible.

"These estimates are derived from the best sources available. At the present time there are no entirely complete and trustworthy industrial accident statistics for even a single important industry in the United States. This lack of trustworthy industrial accident statistics is due to the absence of any uniform requirements in the various states as to the reports of industrial accidents."

TWO BOYS CAUGHT WOLF.

Bagged Him With Gunny Sack Near Small Town.

Kansas City.—Cecil Lattimer, twelve years old, and his brother, James Edgar, ten years old, sons of J. J. Latimer of Independence, took a wolf scalp to the county clerk's office in that city recently and claimed the bounty of $3.

The boys said they captured the wolf on the Frazier farm, southeast of Independence. When they saw it it ran into a hollow log. They procured a gunny sack and tied it over the opening of the log and then scared the wolf out into the sack.

AVOID ALL WASTE OF GROUND

Italian Gardeners Utilize Space Which Americans Would Consider of Little Account.

Just outside the railway station at Springfield, Mass., is a row of tenement houses occupied by Italian families. Between them and the tracks is a garden, divided into long, narrow strips, each strip being tilled by one of the families. In the early morning and evening laborers from the factories may be seen busily at work in these small patches, some of which are not more than ten feet wide. In the daytime the women and children are busy in them. These Italians raise enough vegetables for their own tables and have a supply left for sale. It is intensive gardening. Not an inch of ground is wasted.

Connecticut, Rhode Island and Massachusetts have thousands of such patches and thousands of abandoned farms have been taken up and made highly profitable by these expert gardeners from Italy. They do it by wasting nothing. The refuse from their homes is returned to the earth, as nature intended that it should be. Chickens and pigs are made to fertilize unbroken ground, and the pigs root up underbrush and loosen stones. The simplest of implements are used, but the Italian gardeners know that constant attention is the secret of success. Never a weed is allowed to spring up, the soil is not allowed to go without hoeing and raking. The fence is a support for tomato, bean, pea and other climbing plants.

On an area smaller than that of the ordinary city backyard an Italian will grow vegetables enough to supply his table the year around.

TREE PLANTING AS A DUTY

Effective Way in Which Each Citizen May Take Part in Bettering the Community.

The man with a vision plants a fruit tree, and there is pictured upon the canvas of his mind the full grown, developed tree, laden with the fruit of its kind, painted and flavored with the richest colors and most delicious extracts, but he knows that before that picture can become a reality his hand must give that tree a fertile soil, the best cultivation, a scientific trimming and spraying for years. But nature thus assisted, does her part, and the tree, as the years go by, develops and in time produces its perfect fruit and rewards the labor of the tender.

But the tender took the greatest delight in his work, knowing that the time would come when his labor would bear its reward. His work was a work worth while, and the community in which he lived was made better for his work, for he who does nothing more than plant a tree by the wayside and tends it to maturity has done more for mankind than he who sits and dreams and talks great things of accomplishment, but does not a thing to bring them about; or even he who ever works at his task with stolid indifference to its great importance or unmindful of its pleasures.—From "The Business of Farming," by W. C. Smith.

'Twas Ever Thus.

Whose picture "The Beloved Vagabond" on the Pathe program has been pronounced by eminent critics to represent the very highest art in photoplays and which will have the unusual distinction of being the first American feature to be colored.

SCENES IN "VIA WIRELESS" FOOL SEASONED CRITICS.

George Fitzmaurice, whose picture, "Via Wireless" has just been released by Pathe, has been reading with much interest the many complimentary reviews which have been written about the picture. One thing in particular has interested him,—almost without exception the critics have praised the remarkable scenes in the gun foundry, showing the casting of a gun. "The highest compliment I could get," says Fitz, "those foundry scenes were all taken in the Pathe studio in Jersey City."

ACTIVITIES OF WOMEN.

Women's clubs of Havana have joined in a petition against bullfighting.

Although she is 101 years of age, Mrs. Elizabeth Taylor still works behind the counter in her tobacco store in Manchester, England.

Rather than take a civil service examination Mrs. F. H. Schmidt, who has been postmistress at La Mott, Pa., for the past thirteen years, has resigned.

Queen Mary is the only woman in Great Britain who does not come within the scope of the married woman's property act. Therefore if she contracted debts in her husband's name he would not be responsible for them.

Miss Katherine Minehart, a Philadelphia woman, has patented a new form of hand bag which is capable of being converted into a seat. When opened one part of the contrivance serves as a seat while another forms a support for the back.

During the present year $10,000,000 will be paid out to mothers in the United States for the support of their children in their homes. This sum represents public money distributed in twenty-five states that have adopted mothers' pensions.

Take it from European exhibits that it costs something to make the flag we live under worth while.

THE BATTLE OF LIFE.

In its best estate and in its highest condition life is a fight, not a truce; a struggle, not an achievement; a growth, not a pleasure; a discipline, not a relaxation. The man who wins its real successes is not he who has the most perfect health, but he who bears disease and misfortune with silent courage and gains from them a more daring spirit.

WAR THREATENS RUIN TO SWISS HOTEL MEN

Appeal Made to Government For Aid by Mortgages.

Geneva.—Bereft of tourist patronage by the war, the Swiss hotel keepers in convention assembled have appealed to the government for relief. They want a state system of mortgages on furniture in inns and a delay of two years after the end of hostilities for the payment of interest on the mortgages.

There are about 4,000 tourist hotels in Switzerland, employing 42,000 people, with a yearly wage list of $5,600,000, and $227,000,000 capital is invested in the business.

More than $109,000,000 was spent by tourists in Switzerland in 1913, of which $1,000,000 went for postage stamps and souvenir cards, $400,000 was spent for telegrams and phone talks, $4,000,000 was taken by the railroads for fare and freight, and the balance, less a comparatively small amount for customs duties, was got by the hotels and shops in the proportion of eight to two.

These estimates are the official ones made public at the national exposition at Berne.

English, French, German and American travelers make 60 per cent of the Swiss tourist trade. The war came early enough in the summer of 1914 to reduce the hotel receipts 40 per cent.

This season there has been practically no business.

FINDS BOY LOST YEARS.

Was Located In Company of Strange Man In Texas.

Fort Worth, Tex.—A four-year search through the United States and Canada for her eight-year-old son was ended here by Mrs. Julia Delo of Quebec, Canada, who identified the boy held by authorities here since the arrest of E. S. Carroll on March 5 as her son.

Carroll had been arrested on a charge of assault. He had been traveling around the country with the boy. Both told conflicting stories and were ordered held. Carroll, officials said, probably will be charged with abduction.

The boy recognized his mother immediately, although he was only four when he disappeared from home. Carroll's attorney filed a habeas corpus petition to regain possession of the child.

CARRIER BOY'S PAPERS STOLEN LAST EVENING

The carrier boy serving residents on Utica and Rochester streets with The Evening Times had most of his papers together with a canvas bag stolen last evening.

The boy had left his stock of papers on a corner while he went down the street to serve several of his subscribers and when he returned the bag was gone. The matter has been reported to the police and will be investigated.

Morning newspapers in the larger cities are at times stolen from doorsteps and when a thief is caught a severe penalty follows. The local police will not hesitate to prosecute an offender.

NEAR—ASPHYXIATION IN TWO CASES YESTERDAY

Two high school girls, Miss Marian Goodjon of Buffalo st. and Miss Merle Bartlett of Oneida st., had narrow escapes from asphyxiation Thursday night. Both girls, however, were able to attend school yesterday.

Miss Bartlett, whose home is in the country, attends the Fulton High school. She had dozed off while reading and awoke in time to open a window and allow the gas to escape from the room. Miss Goodjon was awakened by the strong gas fumes, and saved herself in about the same manner.

The young women suffered no ill effects yesterday from the experiences and were able to attend school.

"BOYS" THE SUBJECT OF REV. H. D. HOLMES

The Rev. H. D. Holmes, pastor of the State Street church, was in Parish today, to address the Sunday school convention in session there. His subject was "Boys." Mr. Holmes is an enthusiast on the subject, having a lively bunch of his own to lecture. Not satisfied with the demands of his family of boys he manages to find time to delve into the likes and dislikes of the Scouts connected with his church and the boys are at all times his good chums.

M'KOONS GETS $500 VERDICT

Suit for $10,000; Claimed Head of Machine Works Prevented Him From Holding Positions.

Freemont C. McKoon was awarded a verdict of $500 in Supreme Court yesterday, Judge Ross presiding. The suit was directed against Mr. F. B. Dilts, manager of the Dilts Machine Works, this city, and the original claim was for $10,000.

Mr. McKoon alleged that while a case which he brought against the Dilts Machine Works in 1913 for injuries received in their plant was pending in court, Mr. Dilts prevented him from getting any position in the city of Fulton; that Mr. Dilts told him he could not secure employment unless he settled the action against the company and that when he declined to drop the case he lost situations he had secured. Mr. Dilts through his attorneys, Fowler & Vann of Syracuse, made denials of all allegations. Attorney Giles S. Piper was also one of the counsel for the Dilts company. Attorney Thomas Wood of Syracuse represented Mr. McKoon.

At the opening of court Monday morning the case of Nelson Weiner against the New York Central Railroad will go to trial. The plaintiff sues to recover $10.000 damages for false arrest.

Weiner was taken into custody early last spring on a charge of criminally receiving stolen propertyt. The complaint was made by representatives of the railroad company. He was indicted and when the case was tried before Judge Henry D. Coville in County Court at Pulaski in June he was acquited by the jury.

It was claimed that Weiner, who was engaged in the junk business, pur chased railroad iron that had been stolen from the yards in this city.

Attorney Dennis O'Sullivan will appear for the plaintiff, while Frances E. Cullen of the firm of Purcell, Cullen & Purcell of Watertown will represent the railroad company.

The case of Mrs. Helena Heilig against the City of Oswego for damages as the result of alleged negligence has been settled for $700.

A large class of Oswego K. of C. men will take the fourth degree in Syracuse on about the middle of November and a reception is now being planned by Lemoyn Council of Syracuse for the entertainment of visiting knights at the Onondaga after the conferring of the degree.

FAREWELL TO BILLY ALLEN

"A Night at the Wintergarden" was spent last night by those who attended the Billy Allen Musical Comedy company's show of that title at the Quirk Theatre. Numerous scenes were shown, with Billy Allen and the other members of his clever company supplying an ample amount of comedy and ensembles. A vision of the old time calk-walk was seen in the Minstrel number, the members of the clever "Beauty Chorus" making a bright picture with their fancy costumes and graceful maneuvers. Circus Day was made realistic by the introduction of elephants, bears, and other circus features. Altogether the performance was excellent, and pleased immensely.

"The Dingbat Family," tonight's bill is a musical comedy founded upon the popular comedy cartoons appearing under the title in the daily papers. Who does not know that self assertive and much abused little man "Dinny" Dingbat and his socially ambitions wife "Min?" The play consists of a series of laughable situations in which Dingbat usually figures as the "patsy" but of course he ultimately triumphs over his enemies, acquires fortune as well as fame, and brings happiness to all the members of the lively Dingbat family. "The Dingbat Family" as a play was written by Mark Swan, author of many of the most successful farce comedies, in collaboration with George Herriman, the creator of the Dingbat Family newspaper cartoons. Mr. Allen has given the play a bright setting of scenery in keeping with the high class of all his productions. The first act occurs in the Dingbat Restaurant, and the second in a beautifully illuminated roof garden. One of the scenes represents a cabaret in which a number of specialties are introduced, including a fast exhibition of tango dancing by members of the Billy Allen Beauty Chorus. A new series of living pictures is also a feature of the entertainment.

The Chinese God

Part It Played In a Rejected Lover's Revenge

By RALPH COBINO

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

Arkeld moved about his room studying detail. The arrangement of the flowers did not please him, and he rang for his man.

"This is right in coloring," he said to the servant, "not in design. Oh, your best doubtless"— He checked apologies with a gesture. "Now work under my supervision."

The result was bizarre, startling; a mass of outrageous bloom in a quiet room, for the room was quiet; it breathed repose and stillness, hinted even at monotony.

Arkeld nodded to himself, well pleased with the effect.

His eyes fell upon the only ornaments in the room, two small models of Chinese gods which stood upon the chimney piece.

His hand caressed one of the grinning models. With a whimsical movement he stooped and whispered to it:

"Tell Stella that there is another woman in the heart and mind of Godfrey Liston. Be sure and give Stella the message."

Then his guests—a Mr. and Mrs. Godfrey Liston—were announced.

They were a handsome couple, distinguished in manner.

The lady's eyes took in at one glance the arrangement of the room and of the flowers. She said quickly:

"Here you have artistic charm. Only why introduce alien things?"

"You mean the flowers?"

"These particular flowers and their arrangement."

Dinner was announced, and the talk became trivial, leaving subtleties.

The meal was excellently cooked and served. Stella noted the details, approving them.

She thought of the days when she had been engaged to Arkeld. She thought also of the day when she had met Godfrey Liston.

Love had swept her off her feet when she met Liston. Whereas Arkeld—she had always feared Arkeld!

Fear had gone masked as love. Fear had been in all her thoughts of Arkeld when she wrote to tell him that she could not marry him—in fact, that she was going to marry Liston.

She had imagined to herself Arkeld's reception of this letter.

The fear that was within her portrayed something which would leap to a vivid showing of hate. And Arkeld had not turned this imagery of hers into a concrete thing.

He had made the astounding offer of his friendship.

It was eight years since she had seen Arkeld.

When the Listons had arrived in town a few weeks ago Arkeld had called, but found them out, an experience reversed on their return call.

Then followed this invitation to dinner. Could one refuse an olive branch? Eight years was a long time.

The talk was trivial, flippant. Stella laughed at her own voicing of inanities.

She was glad when she could escape to the room of dim gray and leave the men to their cigars.

She felt that this room voiced something, was full of suggestions.

She thought of this room as an outward showing of the mind of Arkeld.

She wondered what part of him found expression in the flame of the flowers. Anger, hatred, a desire to punish—

On the chimney piece stood the little Chinese gods.

Stella moved over to them, staring at them. The grotesque faces returned her gaze.

Suddenly she knew fear, was gripped by it. This was Arkeld's room, and he was surely an enemy. His offer of friendship could only be a mockery.

She must be alert, watchful.

Her love for Liston would sharpen her eyes, her ears, her intuitions.

Godfrey was alone now with Arkeld.

These thoughts drove her to the door, set her fingers on the handle.

The men's voices silenced her. They were leaving the dining room and coming to her.

"I have been studying the flowers. They say things. You meant them to do so," she said.

Liston's voice came from the chimney piece. He was examining the Chinese gods.

"Jolly, unpleasant looking fellows," he commented.

He laughed as he studied the grotesque and leering face.

"Looks as if he wanted to do some one an ill turn, play the deuce with some one's peace of mind."

Arkeld laughed. He moved near to Liston.

He took the other model from the chimney piece and held it in his hand.

"That has a history," he said, fingering it.

"An unpleasant one, I should say," Liston commented.

"Well, rather. Shall I bore you?" He turned to Stella.

She shook her head.

"These were given me by a Chinese," Arkeld said, "because in a little matter I had served him. The trifles pleased me. They breathe romance. This"—he indicated the one he held—"contained at one time a very subtle poison. Orientals are clever at crafty whisperings to death.

"This was given by a lover to the woman who had betrayed him." Arkeld's fingers found and touched a spring. "The head comes off, so, and reveals a cavity. In the old days it was filled with a deadly liquid, a subtle thing which rose in fumes and wafted the inhaler into oblivion and death."

Arkeld closed the thing with a snap and replaced it on the chimneypiece.

"By jove!" said Liston. He still held the other model in his hand. Automatically his fingers moved, seeking for the spring.

"Godfrey!" Stella spoke quickly. Tempest cried in her voice. "Do not"—Her eyes met Arkeld's. She fell silent.

The only sound in the room was made when Liston replaced the laughing god on the chimney piece.

"Music—shall we?" Arkeld asked abruptly.

"You will play?"

Her fingers touched the keys as though they shrank from sound. They refused to follow the bidding of her will.

"I can't play tonight," she said.

She turned her head and saw Arkeld fingering one of the models, which he had lifted from the chimney piece.

She kept her head so, sitting stiffly, intent and watchful.

Arkeld's hand moved over the head of this little god of his. Suddenly he held it toward Liston.

"I should like you to have this. Keep it in memory of tonight."

"Thanks," Liston said.

Stella's elbow jerked involuntarily and touched the keys of the piano. The sound was sudden, leaping into the room with sinister meaning.

She wanted to speak, but words eluded her. She felt that she was groping in a dark place.

She got quickly to her feet.

"We must go," she said.

Stella made no excuse for suggesting an abrupt departure.

"We must go," she said again.

Her manner silenced Liston, who inclined to apologies, not realising the subtle evasions of the hour.

Apologies still rose abortively to his lips when he and Stella were sitting in their motorcar, while Arkeld stood bareheaded at the door.

Stella, leaning back against the cushions, saw Arkeld's face with the light of a lamp full on it. Surely his face expressed triumph.

She felt that she saw in his eyes all that had been suggested, hinted at, in the room she had just left.

The jerk the car gave in starting was akin to the jerk of her thoughts when her eyes moved from Arkeld's face to the Chinese god which her husband held in his hand.

"Put it down," she said. "Do not hold it."

Liston's mood was one of mockery.

He spoke of nerves, jestingly.

Their hands met, struggling over the little grinning god. To him the skirmish was frivolity; to her a warfare of moment. Her fingers moved quickly; his slowly, teasingly.

He touched the spring, looking with laughing eyes into the opening.

"Something harmless," he said. "A letter"—

Her fingers were before his, seizing this paper. He still watched her with laughing eyes.

"Arkeld's writing?"

"No—not Arkeld's!"

Her voice silenced the laughter that was in him. Not knowing what it was she read, he yet had a desire to switch off the electric light.

All the time she read.

"Let me share the joke," Liston said.

She still read. There was contempt in her ignoring of his voice. Her silence stung him. He felt whipped. The car jerked again, and her hands, moving involuntarily, showed him his own handwriting.

He saw a vivid sentence, something familiar looking up at him from the paper. It was a sentence he had written to—the other woman!

His hand went to the button, and the inside of the car became darkness. Silence and darkness wrapped these two about. The darkness was like something palpable, a suggested presence of evil.

The car stopped at the entrance to their hotel.

Liston and his wife moved automatically, puppets moving at the bidding of Arkeld.

The entrance hall, the stairs, their own room when they reached it, were not so near to Stella as the room of dim gray with the massed, outrageous blooms.

She was still there, was wrapped about by its veiled suggestions of the thoughts of Arkeld.

She faced Liston, stared at him.

His eyes, not meeting hers, fell upon the crumpled letter in her hand.

She opened her fingers, and the letter drifted to the floor. She pushed it toward him with her foot. There was another woman!

She seemed to hear the laughter of Arkeld. Surely he had laughed when he fingered the little god.

This revenge was of greater subtlety than the poisoned fumes of which he spoke. Poison could but kill the body; this letter seared the soul of her.

"LET'S STILL HIS LAUGHTER," HE SAID.

Liston stooped, touching the paper as though he feared it. The date stared him in the face.

She read his thoughts.

"So recently"— Her words tripped, vague things.

Realizing, with a stab of something that was like physical pain, the mockery of her marriage, she ended with a sentence that was not vague.

"Then you married me merely for my money, fooling me with honeyed words?"

Suddenly she realized the subtlety of this vengeance of Arkeld's. He had hung a weight about her neck which she could not cast off. He knew her. Loveless she would starve.

Liston spoke volubly, seeking evasion.

He bit in two a sentence which cursed Arkeld for finding out this thing.

As for the letter, he sought to cloak its damning contents by contempt for Arkeld's probable methods of obtaining it.

"She is poor," Stella reminded him. She pointed to the letter. "You bemoan her poverty even while you cast her off."

Her voice stung her again.

"Such a woman would be glad of revenge—and money," she said.

Her mind held the picture of Arkeld paying with eager fingers a sum of money for this instrument of vengeance.

She spoke again, repeating herself:

"You fooled me with honeyed words!" The intolerable thought was that Arkeld knew this. He had seen her gather dross, thinking it gold. The knowledge was his revenge.

She had loved Liston, thinking him unaffected, certainly not subtle—a very honest man. That which she had loved had never had an existence save as a creature of her mind.

Liston threw the letter into the fire. They watched it burn. Flames leaped, tongues voicing sorry things.

That part of Liston which was least ignoble watched this burning with shamed eyes.

The part of him which was least ignoble crept to his lips, saying:

"Forgive me?"

She looked at him.

Her eyes seemed to entreat this part of him which was not base to triumph, to burn up other things. The thought came to her that this triumph would lessen the power of Arkeld's revenge.

Arkeld had conceived a very subtle form of vengeance. But subtlety was a thing which might be of small account in the presence of a great naturalness.

Liston said again:

"Forgive me. If not yet—then some day"—

Liston came toward her.

His fingers touched the hand that hung limply at her side. He pointed to the laughing god.

"Let's still his laughter," he said.

She felt her lips stiffen, refusing to move easily. She forced herself to voice forgiveness. Forgiveness was a thing which would strike that leering god upon the mouth and silence—Arkeld!

Yes, it was the way out!

Liston's fingers still touched her hand.

"There's a chance for us since you forgive," he said.

MISS WINIFRED HOLT.

Miss Winifred Holt, secretary of the New York Association For the Blind, writes from Paris, where she has gone to establish with the help of French military authorities permanent surroundings and occupations for soldiers blinded by war:

"The purposes of the committee are to find the blind sufferers, some of whom are marooned in improvised hospitals, farmhouses or chateaux, and many of whom are segregated in the large hospitals or Red Cross stations.

"The committee will send visitors and teachers to these blind soldiers, furnish them with entertainment through reading, games, etc., and for those physically able it will start the task of putting eyes on their finger tips and giving them light through work.

"We have found all the blind men in the hospitals of Paris and some in their homes. I estimate that there must be from 3,000 to 4,000 blind soldiers in this immediate neighborhood.

"We have begun teaching in the hospitals here and have among our pupils two very interesting and grateful blind soldiers who will make good teachers and attractive agents for the Paris Lighthouse when it is opened.

"The committee will seek to consider the men's individual interests and abilities and as far as possible to train them in trades and occupations for which their blindness has temporarily unfitted them or to find new openings in which they may become wage earners.

"When they have become proficient it is hoped wherever possible to return them to their home surroundings with the knowledge and tools to make them self helpful. When this is not practical it is hoped to establish them in congenial surroundings, where they may again have a feeling of independence and well being. Without prompt expert assistance soon after loss of sight the blind man is apt to become despondent, to lose his intelligence or to drift into an apathy from which it is difficult, if not impossible, to arouse him later.

"The work is very heartrending, but unspeakably essential. We found a blind soldier the other day who had not left his room in the hospital since the accident and was afraid to walk. After we told him of Fawcett's wonderful life the man jumped up, looking a new human being, and, to the amazement of his nurse and everybody else, strode forth, with his head lifted high, into the corridor and walked up and down with his hands behind his back like any other proud man. That is what hope does for these people, who were desperate until we brought them light.

"I wrote you last week of the young officer who was blind, had lost his arm and had only two fingers remaining on his right hand. He is doing wonderfully and is full of hope and light. His fiancee comes from Corsica to see him at the end of the week. I am to see her before she has the shock of receiving what remains of her soldier, so as to prepare her to appreciate what life may still hold for them both."

Miss Holt wrote that there should be a corps of at least fifty teachers to cope with the work and that funds were badly needed for materials for work and clothes. She hopes her American friends will send her a million dollars. "I can use all of it and to good purpose," she writes.

A Wedding Breakfast.

Serve a fruit cocktail for the first course. This must be ice cold and the fruit prepared long enough in advance for the several flavors to be well blended. Follow this with creamed chicken and mushrooms and potato and nut croquettes, else chicken croquettes and peas, with finger rolls, then tomato salad with dressing and last the ice cream, cake and coffee. Any light wine will be suitable, if there is no objection to its use. Serve with chicken course.

Shredded pineapple, grapefruit and orange pulp make a delicious cocktail. Prepare each separately and sweeten to taste. Let stand on ice several hours; then mix and let stand over night on ice. Serve in sherbet glasses with maraschino cherry on top of each.

The Beloved Art of Soothing

There are many types of femininity, but perhaps the rarest and most appreciated is the girl who soothes. There are so many vivacious girls, types which excite one to mirth or to lively interest, but there is only one girl in a hundred who soothes. She is like the oasis in the desert, restful, refreshing, welcome to one and all. The woman with the keen wit, she of the bubbling mirth, the girl with the languorous manner, all are of interest at times and under certain conditions, but the girl who soothes never fails to attract wherever she may be.

It is she who smoothes down your ruffled feelings when circumstances seem to have conspired against your peace of mind. If your dressmaker has failed to deliver your new frock at the promised time or if your maid has just broken your favorite bit of china, you take your troubles to the girl who soothes and come away feeling much better for her cheering words.

To learn this most difficult branch of social diplomacy—namely, the gentle art of soothing—you must have, first of all, a goodly share of intuition. There are times when your ruffled friend may want you to ignore her very apparent perturbation. At other times she may be just waiting for you to speak a word of sympathy or perhaps to touch upon the upsetting subject in order to burst out with her whole tale of woe. Your intuition will have to tell you.

One of the first things for you to learn in the gentle art of soothing is never to disturb your friend's poses. There is nothing quite so ruffling as to have one's pose detected. If a friend is a chronic invalid (with nothing really the matter) sympathize with her imagined aches and pains just as if they were real.

If a friend has her mind all made up to be a martyr let her be one and don't suggest possible ways out of her martyrdom. She will rant on for hours on the subject of all she has to undergo, and it would be fatally tactless to disturb her in this pose. If she imagines her husband untrue to her just because he has had to consult a woman client on a matter of business, condole with her by all means, whether you think her foolish or not.

You must never suggest by any chance that your confidant was in the wrong in a quarrel. If she tells you at length how Bobby and she no longer speak to each other because he is so ridiculously jealous, smooth her down in your most tactful way. Suggest that Bobby would not be so jealous if he did not care for her; never intimate in the faintest way that she would give any one ample cause for jealousy.

If you want to be one of these rare creatures, a girl who soothes, never tell a tired woman shopper that she could have obtained much better bargains at another store. If a friend wears an overelaborate gown, make no comment on it, but tell her that you have never seen her hair look so well. It is strange how far an adroit compliment will go at times toward smoothing a ruffled mind.

There are women, however, who cannot be helped by such methods at all. You must study your friends and their characters in order to learn the art of soothing thoroughly. There is no single way, but rather myriad of ways of calming down a ruffled mind. In fact, each woman seems to need a different treatment.

It is well worth studying the art, however, for the girl who soothes is beloved by all who know her.

ATTRACTIVE FOR GUESTS.

Very few young housekeepers have been spared the acute misery of trying to equip the guest room for the unexpected guest at the last minute.

The best sheets were probably at the laundry, the supply of Turkish towels had suddenly reduced itself to rock bottom, and most tragic of all there was not a single presentable nightgown to offer the guest, who had left her own at home.

Only a very few of these humiliating experiences are needed to make the hostess appreciate the advantage of a guest chest.

The chest may be a shirt waist box, a carved oak or cedar chest or whatever fits into the general scheme of the guest room.

In it should be stowed a nightgown, kimono or bathrobe, a dressing jacket, an extra pair of blankets, an extra coverlet, a hot water bag, several large and small sized towels, washcloths, individual cakes of soap, absorbent cotton, court plaster and medical helps.

It is a gracious touch to add other things for the comfort of the guest, articles she might hesitate to ask for, such as a workbasket equipped with black and white thread, a darning ball, needles and pins, scissors, card of hooks and eyes, a roll of linen tape, buttons and numerous other things that suggest themselves.

A list should be kept of all articles in the chest, and as soon as any part of the supply is exhausted it should be replaced immediately.

Easy & Practical Home Dress Making Lessons

Prepared Especially For This Newspaper by Pictorial Review

A REMODELLING SUGGESTION.

This design may be used to excellent advantage in remodelling a waist of a former season. It is made of satin and chiffon.

There are times when the home dressmaker finds it necessary to remodel the garmenhs of a previous season, and the question of making ends meet causes perplexity. Where there are remnants of contrasting materials and none sufficient for an entire waist it is a good plan to combine them, if the colors blend. If they do not blend there is always recourse to dyes, which are not at all difficult to handle if one follows directions carefully.

This waist may be made up in a combination of silk or satin with chiffon or all over lace. The surplice closing back and front is novel, and the chiffon or lace vest may be finished with a round or high neck. The sleeves are of chiffon, being finished below the elbows with hemstitched hems.

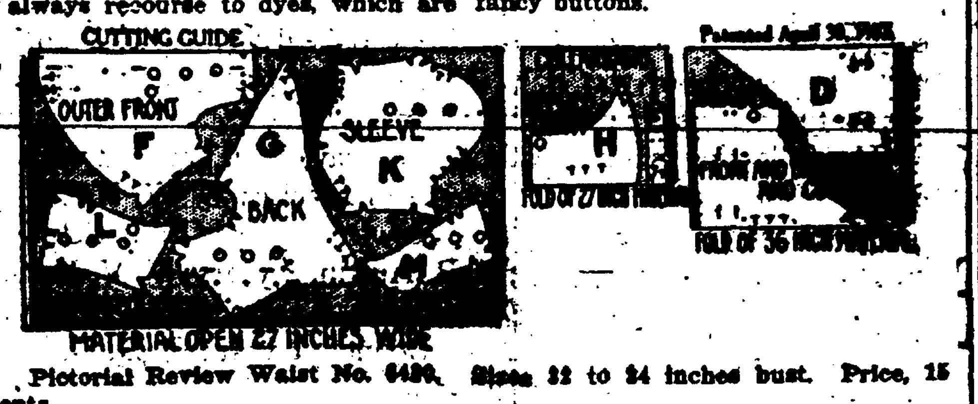
If new materials are used average size requires 2 yards 27-inch silk, 1 yard 36-inch lining for the lining and 1⅛ yard 36-inch chiffon or lace for the vest.

Five sections of the pattern are cut on an open width of 27-inch material—namely, the cuff sections (if the sleeve is finished with a cuff, instead of at the elbow), the back, sleeve and outer front.

The front and back and yoke and collar are cut from 36-inch material, and the three parts are in one section of pattern. A study of the cutting guide will show how to place the pattern along the lengthwise fold of the goods to avoid an extra seam.

The waist may also be made with an applied front, and this is cut from a fold of the 27-inch fabrics or that used for the outer blouse. The applied front gives the effect of a bib and affords an opportunity to apply a bit of decoration in the form of embroidery or beading.

For the surplice front a simple garniture would be bands of satin or satin cords held in place at either end with fancy buttons.



Pictorial Review Waist No. 6420. Sizes 32 to 44 inches bust. Price, 15 cents.

HELPFUL HINTS FOR HOUSEWIVES

Tack Puller That Protects Hands From Injury.

There are all kinds of tack pullers, and some pull tacks in a very satisfactory manner and others do not, but most of them, good and bad, have unfortunate quality of slipping occasionally when the end is being pushed under the tack head, and the result is often a badly scratched or cut hand. The newest implement of this character is a tack puller with a shield, which makes it impossible to injure the hand in this manner. The shield is mounted on the shank in front of the handle and is curved to afford complete protection to the hand of the worker.

Creamed Chicken With Dumplings.

Take a chicken (not too fat), clean, joint and put in rather large stew kettle, pour in water to not quite cover and let come to boil, skim off scum and let boil slowly till done. The water should be well boiled down by now. Pour in rich milk or cream and milk enough to make a generous allowance of gravy. Thicken with flour rubbed smooth in a small quantity of milk or water, season well with pepper and salt. Have a pan of small light baking powder biscuits freshly baked. Lay these in the kettle over the chicken, cover and let steam for ten minutes, remove and place round the edge of platter. Put chicken in center and cover with gravy. There should be enough gravy to serve extra in pitcher or boat.

Shoshone Baked Apple.

For each cored and pared apple allow one scant teaspoonful of honey and a bit of butter. Put the honey in the cavity and the butter on top. Arrange the apples in a deep baking dish which will just hold the number to be baked. Pour on enough boiling water to come halfway up on the apples. Cover closely and set on top of the stove. Boil about ten minutes, or until the apples begin to look clear. Then remove the cover and finish by baking until done in the oven. The secret is in boiling the apples first, which makes them puff up when baked instead of shrinking. If the honey is not at hand sugar can be used, though it is not so rich.

Apple Ketchup.

One cupful of sugar, one teaspoonful of pepper, one teaspoonful of cloves, one teaspoonful of mustard, two teaspoonfuls of cinnamon, one tablespoonful of salt, two grated onions, two cupfuls of cider vinegar. Wipe, quarter, pare and core twelve apples. Put in a saucepan, cover with boiling water, bring to the boiling point, let simmer until soft, when nearly all the water should be evaporated; then rub through a sieve. To each quart of apple pulp add the above ingredients. Bring all to the boiling point and let simmer one hour. Bottle, cork and seal while hot.

Stuffed Peppers.

Select one-half dozen sweet peppers. Cut the tops off and scoop out the seeds. Prepare a forcemeat of one pint of chopped meat or shredded fish, one cupful of mashed potatoes or a half cupful of breadcrumbs, a tablespoonful of parsley, one egg yolk, dash of salt and a few drops of onion juice. Boiled rice or macaroni may be used in place of the potatoes. Fill the peppers with the mixture, sprinkle breadcrumbs on top and bake in a hot oven for a half hour. They may be fried in deep fat if preferred.

Spiced Grapes.

Make a sirup of one cupful of vinegar, one-half cupful of water and one and one-half cupfuls of sugar. Add one teaspoonful each of ground cinnamon, allspice and cloves. When the sirup has become thick add the grapes, which have been carefully picked from the stems and washed. Simmer very gently for ten minutes; then seal in glass jars at once.

Ideal Sponge Cake.

Beat four eggs very light, then beat in, a little at a time, two cupfuls of sugar. Add one cupful of sifted flour, a little at a time, then another cupful of flour in which two teaspoonfuls of baking powder have been mixed, lastly a scant cupful of hot water. Stir in a little at a time. Flavor with lemon.

Ironing Lace.

Lace with a raised surface is better ironed between blankets or not ironed at all. It should be stretched, while still wet, with a pin at each point or at distances of an inch or less apart on a sheet of clean cardboard.

PERSEVERANCE.

The gods demand their victims.
Who shall know
What failures time and circumstance compel?
Yet if such doom were mine I would 'twere so
That they would mark my absence then: "How well
Even unto the last he struggled, lo!
He tore the raider with him when he fell!"

—George Cronyn.

Hints For the Needle Worker

Marguerite Lace and Insertion.

Abbreviations: ch., chain; d.c., double crochet; tr., treble; l.t., long treble; d.l.t., double long treble.

Most simple to crochet, yet so very effective are these wheels when joined as an insertion for trimming casement window curtains, pillowslips, tray cloths, etc. Our design shows a pretty curtain for a window.

This lace is worked in crochet cotton No. 24 with a No. 5 steel hook. Begin with the lace. For the first flower work 5 ch., join into a ring by a slip stitch.

First round—4 ch. for long treble, 2 l.t. (cotton twice over needle) over the ring (keep the first two stitches on the needle and work them off with the third), * 5 ch., 3 l.t. over ring, work them off in the same way as first group; repeat from * six times.

Second round—Into each of the eight spaces of five chain work 1 d. c., 6 tr., 1 d. c. This completes one pattern. Work a second pattern and join to the first by the third treble on one pattern to the same treble on first pattern. Join them by two leaves. Leave two free leaves on both sides of joining. On the corner leave four free leaves on the outer edge.

The heading—1 d. c. into the first of two leaves on inner edge, 5 ch., 1 d. c. on next leaf, * 8 ch., 1 d. c. on first leaf on next pattern, 5 ch., 1 d. c. on second leaf on same pattern; repeat from *. On the corners, after working 5 ch., 1 d. c. on last leaf before corner, work 8 ch., 1 d. l. t. (cotton three times over needle) between two leaves on corner pattern, 8 ch., 1 d. c. into first leaf on next pattern.

Third round—* 9 d. c. over first space of eight chain, 4 ch. Turn back over four double crochet, draw the cotton through the fifth double crochet, over this small space work 8 d. c., 5 d. c. over same space as first nine double crochet were worked, 6 d. c. over next space of chain, 4 ch. Baked Beets.

Beets retain their sugary, delicate flavor to perfection if they are baked instead of boiled. Turn them frequently while in the oven, using a knife, as a fork allows the juice to run out. When done remove the skin and serve with butter, salt and pepper on the slices.

The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

WITH FRESH FRUIT.

EVERY refrigerator has its quota of fresh fruit leftovers. Perhaps you have a bit of pineapple left from last night's dinner, either cut in blocks or shredded. With this mix banana cut in dice, a few strawberries, and over all squeeze a goodly measure of orange juice. Serve very cold in glasses or sherbet cups.

Sweet Fruit Salad.—Three ripe yellow pears, one bunch of white grapes, one blood orange, two red bananas, one glass of maraschino cordial or the same quantity of rum, and sugar to taste. Peel the pears and quarter them, taking out seeds; seed the grapes, peel and slice the bananas and cut the orange in slices through the skin, dividing the slices then or leaving them whole. Put all the fruit together and sugar it liberally, then put it away on the ice; when ready to serve put on the liquor used. If this salad is served in a glass bowl and the red orange slices are left whole the effect will be very ornamental.

Salad Creole.—Orange, romaine, lettuce, green peppers and chives are the ingredients of this refreshing dish. Choose young and delicate lettuce, strip the leaves, wash carefully and dry each piece with a napkin. Put them in the bottom of a mixing bowl and add the pulp skinned and broken in halves of one or two oranges. Over these shred a large green pepper finely and add from one to two teaspoonfuls of chopped chives. Season with olive oil and salt, and if more acid is liked add a light squeeze of lemon juice. Instead of orange, grape juice could be used with this salad and the beauty of it will be much improved with strips of Spanish pimento.

Fruit Appetizers.—Almost any kind of fresh fruit can be used as an appetizer. Watermelon cut in cubes and served sprinkled with a very little sugar and lemon juice, ice cold, in grapefruit glasses, is one good appetizer. Another is cherries dipped in lemon juice, pitted, chilled and sprinkled with sugar. These should be piled in glasses with a little shaved ice and a sprig of mint. Strawberries on the hull arranged neatly on plates around little mounds of powdered sugar are always delicious.

Sweet Sandwiches.—Sweet sandwiches can be filled with many summer fruits. Sliced strawberries, sprinkled with sugar and arranged between slices of buttered bread, are good, and raspberries, slightly crushed and sweetened, are also good.

1875—A Brief History of Mt. Pleasant Grange—1915

Forty times has the year's golden cycle revolved since Mt. Pleasant Grange, No. 349, Patrons of Husbandry, was established.

This grange was organized by Deputy A. J. Potter of Orwell, at the residence of Gardner Lamphere on the evening of Sept. 25, 1875, with 40 charter members whose names follow:

Jason S. Markham, Gardner Lamphere, James Minnish, L. A. Seymour, Fred Foster, Darias Foster, Frederick Vant, Bradford P. Sandford, E. W. Kellogg, Monroe Skeel, Letson LaDu, Virgil Rowlee, O. E. Armour, Charles Markham, Adam Springer, Wm. R. Sherman, Z. B. Austin, Henry Sandford, George Washburn, Henry Crouch, Harriett Markham, Cornelia Lamphere, Sarah Minnish, H. A. Seymour, Maryette Foster, Hattie Foster, M. R. Vant, L. G. Sandford, E. A. Kellogg, E. H. Skeel, O. B. LaDu, J. A. Rowlee, Maryette Armour, M. Markham, E. Springer, C. Hardwick, Rhoda Ives, Ada Lamphere, Josephine Sherman, Kate A Vant.

Of this number nine are now living four of whom are still united with the grange.

The first officers chosen in our grange were Master, E. W. Kellogg; Overseer, O. E. Armour; Lecturer, L. A. Seymour; Steward, Monroe Skeel; Assistant Steward, Virgil Rowlee; Chapllain, B. P. Sandford; Treasurer, J. S. Markham; Secretary, Letson LaDu; Gatekeeper, Z. B. Austin; Ceres, H. A. Seymour; Pomona, E. H. Skeel; Flora, J. A. Rowlee; Lady Assistant Steward, Maryette Armour.

Small Membership in 1875

The first five meetings were held in the homes of Gardner Lamphere, Monroe Skeel, and B. P. Sandford, but the sixth meeting found the members comfortably quartered in rooms on the north end of the upper story of Mt. Pleasant cheese factory which were rented for 12 dollars a year and fitted up as a hall at a cost of a little more than $200.00. The first meeting to be held in this hall was November 27, 1875.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Clark and daughter are distinguished as the first members to unite with the grange after organization. From the minutes of the meeting of their initiation, I quote the following: "In this ceremony I am sorry to say there occurred some ridiculous jollity and some bungling which perhaps may be considered excusable under the circumstances, as it was the first actual work of the kind our officers have had occasion to perform."

At the close of the year 1875, after the grange had been organized three months, the following facts are noticed:

Nine meetings had been held, 44 members were enrolled with an average attendance of 26. Amount received for fees and dues, $95.64; amount expended in incidentals, $60.79; cost of fitting up

"Life is real! Life is earnest!
And the grave is not its goal,
'Dust thou art, to dust returnest,'
Was not spoken of the soul."

"Not enjoyment, and not sorrow,
Is our destined end or way;
But to act, that each tomorrow
Find us farther than today."

"Trust no Future, howe'er pleasant!
Let the dead Past bury its dead!
Act—act in the living Present!
Heart within, and God o'erhead."

"Lives of great men all remind us,
We can make our lives sublime,
And, departing, leave behind us
Foot prints on the sands of Time."

"Let us, then, be up and doing,
With a heart for any fate;
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labor and to wait."

and furnishing grange rooms, $247.62. The Executive committee made one small purchase of flour at wholesale at a discount of about $1.25 per bbl.; they had also made one purchase of groceries at wholesale. Soon after this larger purchases were made and a grange store was conducted for many years by Z. B. Austin.

The Fire Relief Association was organized in 1878. E. W. Kellogg was selected as our first fire director and served six years. He was succeeded by Z. B. Austin who held the position for 30 years. His successor was B. L. Howard, our present director, who has held the office for nearly two years.

The following is a list of those who have been honored with the office of Master, together with length of service: E. W. Kellogg, 3 years; Letson LaDu, 2 years; Virgil Rowlee, 2 years; Frederick Vant 1 year; L. A. Seymour, 1 year; Z. B. Austin, 2 years; V. V. Vant, 2 years; Wm. H. Cook, 1 year; E. D. Distin, 2 years; E. M. Bonner, 1 year; M. C. Graves, 2 years; E. M. Bonner, 1 year; E. D. Distin, 2 years; Albert Paddock, 2 years; Ovid V. Taft, 3 years; W. A. Seymour, 2 years; C. W. Rowlee, 2 years; I. L. Hale, 1 year; B. L. Howard, 3 years; Charles N. Potter, 3 years and George A. Parker, the present Master, who is serving his second year.

The following is the list of those who have served as Secretary: Letson LaDue, 3 years; E. W. Kellogg, 2 years; V. V. Vant, 6 years; Z. B. Austin was next elected in 1887 and has continued to serve down to the present, with the exception of the year 1895, when Lucy E. Graves was elected.

Ambitious Grangers

In the meeting of Dec. 4, 1875, Brother Austin was elected janitor and he has served in that capacity all these years. This brother has a record which we venture to assert is nearly, if not quite unparalleled throughout the broad lands of our Empire State. He has never missed but one session of our grange since organization. This was necessitated by his duties as fire director, he being called to the home of a brother to adjust a loss by fire.

Early in 1881, the grange feeling the need of a musical instrument, purchased an organ at a cost of $60.00.

The meeting of Jan. 9, 1892, is notable as being the session at which plans were made for the purchase of a library. The Worthy Master appointed the following committee to select and purchase books for the same: Brothers V. V. Vant, John W. Distin and Sister Frances Payne.

At the session on Feb. 6, 1892, Brother V. V. Vant presented to the grange a bookcase which was very gratefully accepted. This bookcase was made by Brother Christopher Kerfein, the materials being furnished by Brother Vant, who was chosen librarian.

In the winter of 1898 the grange was presented with a large rustic chair by Brother Ovid V. Taft. Some years later he kindly made and donated another chair similar to the first one.

Mt. Pleasant Grange, like many another grange, has experienced its times of depression as well as its seasons of prosperity. In fact, at one period of its history, the tide of interest was at so low an ebb that it was in danger of becoming dormant. A few of the faithful ones, however, stood shoulder to shoulder and firmly held the reins and ere long prospects began to brighten.

The year 1907 was ushered in with Brother I. L. Hale as Master. It was during this year that the idea was conceived of building a new hall and all arrangements were made at this time.

The Modest Building

The building was erected and dedicated in 1908 with Brother B. L. Howard, Master. The dedication ceremonies occurred on our thirty—third anniversary. On this occasion we were honored with the presence of Worthy Past Master E. B. Norris of State Grange; also Worthy State Secretary W. N. Giles, who ably assisted in the exercises of the day.

The site of our hall consists of about one-half acre and was purchased of B. L. Howard for $55.00.

The following building committee was appointed: Asa B. Sandford, Z. B. Austin, Willis Streeter, I. L. Hale and Earl Rowlee. This committee purchased the site and decided to erect a story and a half building with basement, the dimensions of the building to be 65x36 feet. When we commenced to build the hall we had $438.00 in the bank. This building cost us, including the lot, $4,500.00.

Since its erection we have made the following important purchases: chairs, $51.00; piano, $65.00; 1 heater, $29.00; 1 range, $45.00, besides numerous smaller articles. Our present indebtedness is $300.00.

Outside of the sum which we had on hand when we commenced to build the collection of fees and dues, besides some individual donations, both of money and labor, our debt has been paid thus far by holding fairs and plays. Our first fair in the new hall was held in December, 1908, the receipts of which were $278.00. Many excellent plays have also been finely rendered from time to time by members of our order. These have not only served the public with good entertainment, but have contributed a large sum towards our indebtedness.

We feel certain that the time is drawing near when our obligation will be eliminated and this will indeed be a season of rejoicing for all.

Among the Leaders

And now, on the eve of our fortieth anniversary, it seems fitting that we manifest no small degree of righteous pride: First, that we are a part of this grand organization of the Grange, which never meant so much to the American farmer and his family as it does today.

Secondly, that we rank among the leading granges with a membership of more than two hundred, and Third, that we have a grange home, second to no rural meeting place in Oswego County.

In closing, this article would be quite incomplete, did we not pay tribute to one whose example has ever gleamed forth as a shining light down through the annals of Mt. Pleasant Grange. This brother to whom I refer is our Worthy secretary, Z. B. Austin.

Language is inadequate to clearly describe the zeal with which this brother has labored so long and so efficiently among us. You, who know his career so well, hardly need to be reminded that he is always with us. Through sunshine, rain and snow he is ever on hand to open the doors of our grange home and to see that everything is comfortable and in order. Perhaps we can best portray something of his noble efforts by the use of one sentence, simple in its construction but with fathomless depths of significance; a sentence, written in huge characters and emblazoned in gold: "Well done, good and faithful servant." Although we realize that he is advancing in years, may we here pause and breathe the fervent wish that he may continue to meet with us for many years to come.

Should Cherish Memories

Let us ever cherish the noble deeds of the many other older members in our order, some of whom are still with us while others have passed to the "Great Beyond." By their faithful perseverence and untiring efforts they have each had a share in perfecting the work of the Grange. May we, then, be imbued with much of their earnestness in striving to accomplish our labors as becometh true Patrons of Husbandry.

"A Herald of Progress"

Volume 1, No. 250. MONDAY, OCTOBER 11, 1915. Price One Cent

"I am in favor of equal suffrage for men and women, because I think it is right. I shall vote for the amendment to our State Constitution November the second.

"Frank E. Fox, M. D."

Suffrage Opposition in Cities Seems Greater Than Upstate Favor

The New York Herald today forecasts, the result of a canvass, the indications for and against carrying the state for suffrage at the November polls.

The Herald says:

The indications are, according to the Herald's correspondents in various parts of the state, that the amendment will receive a substantial majority in many of the up-state counties and that it is likely to be snowed under in New York City.

It should be noted, however, that there is a vast number of independent voters in the metropolis, and while the present outlook is for a tremendous vote against the women's cause no one cares to give any figures.

There is apparent everywhere in the state a disposition on the part of the regular party organization to "let the whole matter alone," to let it stand on its own bottom. There is no doubt they could beat it if they set out to do so. There is no doubt they could put it through if they were so disposed.

But from all the information obtainable by correspondents and reporters for the Herald the machines are determined to give the women a fair chance. As a matter of fact, the most hidebound machine leaders do not seem to be over eager to see the amendment defeated. Some of the leaders opnly say they intend to vote for the change in the franchise; others say they are very desirous of having it adopted.

To one who travels through the state or gets in touch with representative citizens it is bound to be apparent that the issue has stirred up more interest than anything else in many years. President Wilson's declaration in favor of the issue and the whole-souled indorsement of the women's cause by Lindley M. Garrison, Joseph P. Tumulty, William G. McAdoo and William C. Redfield have brought the question home to multitudes who previously were indifferent.

There are no longer predictions that the amendment will be overwhelmed by a half million majority. Most of the politicians think it will be beaten. Most of the women say it will pass. A careful estimate of the situation, based on consideration of all the information obtainable from guarded sources, would indicate that the amendment is likely to be defeated. With the women working like beavers, however, and with distinguished men swinging into line every day for the cause the sentiment for it is spreading rapidly.

The cities are inclined to be against it. New York City seems certain to roll up a big majority against it. Buffalo probably will follow the example. Rochester apparently is preparing to vote for the amendment. At least nineteen up-state counties now seem reasonably certain to roll up a majority, mostly small, for the amendment. In the southern tier of counties west of Binghamton there is an apparently overwhelming sentiment for the amendment.

Various influences are at work all over the state for and against it. The Herald, in an effort to reflect the feeling in the most representative sections of the state, sought information from its correspondents, and their dispatches are published herewith. They show many interesting phases of the great battle.

LOCAL UNION IS OPTIMISTIC

Members Returning From Ithaca Convention Enthusiastic About Treatment in University City.

By Mrs. Wm. Sylvester.

With hearts filled with gratitude to God for His gracious guidance the Woman's Christian Temperance Union held its 42nd annual session in Ithaca, where they were entertained by the Ithaca Union, the largest local Union in the United States, having 785 members.

Four decades of prayerful, earnest effort with their encouragements and achievements have passed into history. We rejoice in God who has given us so many victories in the past and is leading us to the final triumph of the prohibition of the liquor traffic.

Nineteen states have state-wide prohibition. Seven states have outlawed the cigarette.

A marvelous result from the reading of a leaflet on Scientific Temperance, prepared and sent out by the W. C. T. U., into all lands is national prohibition in Russia.

The convention was heartily welcomed by the pastors, the mayor and President Schurman of Cornell University, who are honored and enthusiastic members of the W. C. T. U. At the invitation of President Schurman special cars carried the delegates to the university, to Bailey Hall, where a fine organ recital was enjoyed.

The convention was the largest and most encouraging ever held—six hundred delegates and visitors. Nearly four thousand new members have been gained this year. The present membership of New York State is 40,460. We were introduced to one of the mots honored white ribboners of Utica, Mrs. Shaw, the police woman. All Utica sings her praise. The good she is doing can never be estimated.

Suffrage Day was one of the most inspiring and enthusiastic on the program. The ringing messake was "N. Y. State Can Carry The Day for Woman Suffrage if it Will." Let every woman say this one thing, 'I do work for woman suffrage till it wins." The vote of the women will sound the death knell of the liquor traffic in every state where women have the vote. They have reduced the saloons by the hundreds.

Oswego county won four honors. A free lecture by the State President will be given to Phoenix and Fulton for having gained over 50 new members during the year. A standard of efficiency was reached for temperance work in the Sunday schools and an honor for the Y. P. B. of the county.

It's coming, it's coming,
The day for which we pray;
We'll take the state for prohibition
Some glad day.

"In my opinion women need the franchise. I shall vote 'Yes' on the amendment Nov. 2.
"Geo. G. Whitaker, M. D."

MACCABEES PREPARE FOR TOMORROW'S BIG TIME

Frank Carrier, Deputy Great Commander Knights of the Maccabees, looks forward to a big time tomorrow night, when the local Tent will enjoy a feast and smoker. Besides these features of the meeting speeches will be made by Edward Hope, Dr. Hedden and W. E. Spangle, all of Syracuse.

Perhaps most important of all numbers on the program will be the singing by a double and single K. O. T. M. quartet, whose members have been training for the occasion, but who at present remain in the back-

"I am in favor of extending the right of suffrage to women and shall be glad to vote favorably on the amendment Nov. 2.
"H. L. Lake, M. D."

GRAND CHAPTER IN N. Y. THIS WEEK

Local Members of Eastern Star and Court of Amaranth Will Participate in the Many Festivities.

Delegations of delegates from nearly every city and town in the state are being carried by train, etc., to Greater New York where they will attend either officially or as visitors the Grand Chapter, Order Eastern Star and the Court of Amaranth, both of which organizations are in big conclave this week.

Mrs. I. Fred Scholts left this city last Wednesday for New York, Brooklyn, etc., as a delegate of the Court of Amaranth, and Mrs. John A. Bort leaves tonight as a delegate to the O. E. S. convention.

The first session of the Eastern Star Grand Chapter will open tomorrow.

The election of officers will take place on Wednesday. Rochester will present Miss Paul for advancement to the post of grand matron, and Dr. Erlo H. Gray will be supported for associate grand patron.

Mrs. Vera Shutt of New York has been selected for the office of grand Esther. Mrs. Shutt is a past matron of Ruth Chapter. Mrs. Anna Christiansen of Rochester will be appointed grand warden. Mrs. Christensen is a past matron of Paul Chapter. The new district deputy will be selected from Monroe Chapter, and the assistant grand lecturer from Mary Jane Holmes Chapter of Brockport.

Tomorrow evening a dinner will be tendered by Miss Paul by the thirteith district representatives. Covers will be laid for 200. The dinner will take place at the Chelsea hotel, in West Twenty-third street, where the delegates from this district are staying. The new district deputy will be tendered a reception by Monroe Chapter on Tuesday evening, November 2, when Charlotte Chapter members will be the guests of Monroe Chapter. By annexation of Charlotte on January 1 the chapter of that place will be in the Rochester jurisdiction. Numerous receptions and dinners for the members of Rochester chapters chosen for Grand Chapter officers at the New York convention are being arranged.

WEATHER FORECAST

Partly cloudy and warmer tonight. Tuesday, probably rain.

WHY FARMERS OPPOSE VOTES FOR WOMEN

New York.—A Democrat from up-state, talking woman suffrage in the state headquarters last week, let a little new light on the farmers' attitude toward the issue.

"A good many farmers are against the amendment," he said. "I wouldn't say that the opposition is formidable, but it is opposition nevertheless. One of the rural voters was speaking about the matter the other day, and this is what he said:

"It's all right when a farmer goes to town to buy things for fall or Christmas to take his wife along. Sure, no one kicks on that. But this fixing up the law so women can vote is another matter. When a man living fifteen or twenty miles back in the country goes to town on Election Day he don't want no wife along. Not on your life. That's his day off. If he wants to take a few—but, anyhow, a man wants to go to town himself once in a while, and that's what election's for.

"If it's a temperance town a man might rustle up something if his wife wasn't along. If she was along there never would be a chance in the world. So I'm against it.'"

Disaffection Does Not Exist, Says Chairman

H. Putnam Allen, chairman of the Republican city committee, denies the rumors current of disaffection within the ranks of the party, which, in effect, are, that a man prominent in the Sixth ward may head an independent ticket.

Those men who have knowledge of the proposed new ticket will not talk on the matter, further than to say that their mayoralty candidate has a large following.

Incidentally, it is being said that James H. Brooks, Prohibition and Independent candidate for Mayor, is gathering supporters every day and that he may receive the votes of a large number of Republicans and Democrats.

The Republican candidates for office on the entire city ticket as well as all the members of the Republican committee have been notified to attend a joint meeting in the offices of H. P. Allen Wednesday night. Plans may then be laid for the campaign. Followers of political affairs make the assertion that the Republicans do not seem to be making much effort toward giving their candidates for various offices publicity, or in other words, support. It is possible however, that the coming meeting may get the machinery started.

Republican leaders are confident of success for all of their candidates. The only doubtful situation is that in the Sixth ward in the fight for supervisor, which is being staged by George [illegible], Democrat, present holder of the office, and Benjamin [illegible], Republican and Prohibition nominee.

Discussions are already taking place on the [illegible] of women being given the franchise to vote. [illegible] forecasting the possible effects it will have on the [illegible]tical [illegible]tions.

"I believe that women should have the right to vote, and I shall vote 'Yes' on the women's suffrage question on Nov. 2, 1915. H. W. Schlappi, M. D."

HIGH-BROWED BOSTON STAGE

Setting There Today Will Attract Largest Crowd That Has Ever Seen Title Contest.

Boston.—The country's leading base ball teams, the Phillies and the Red Sox, came to this city yesterday to resume here their series for the championship of the world. Each has scored a victory in the opening installment of the games just finished at Philadelphia and their overnight trans fer brought the teams to the scene of their further test on equal terms.

Indications last night were that today's game would be noteworthy at least for the attendance. The crowd undoubtedly will be the greatest that has ever seen a World Series contest and possibly the greatest (paid) that has ever seen a baseball game. It will exceed 45,000 persons, probably. More than half that number of tickets have already been sold. The first of the crowd that will occupy bleacher seats took up positions at the gates of the Braves' field last night.

The third game of the series, it is expected will develop a more studied scheme of play by both teams. Having grappled for eighteen innings, each team has gained an understanding of the method and caliber of its opposition, and each is expected to show improvement in strategy and action.

Philadelphia's campaign will again revolve around Alexander, king-pin pitcher of the National League champions. The failure of Mayer, who did the pitching for the Phillies in the game which Boston won on Saturday, has emphasized the fact admitted by the Philadelphia team's supporters, that it is largely in Alexander's pitching skill that the team's hopes for a world championship lie. As the Red Sox were successful in an unexpected degree in hitting his delivery in Friday's game, followers of the local [illegible] of the team's pros-[illegible]

THREE QUESTIONS ON ONE BALLOT

In Voting For or Against New Constitution It Will Be Possible to Approve or Reject Questions.

Albany.—The revised state constitution will be submitted to the voters of New York State on election day in three separate questions on the ballot. It will be possible to approve or reject any one or all of the questions. There will be two voting squares opposite each question. Opposite one square will be the word "Yes" and opposite the other the word "No."

The first question to be voted upon will be headed "Revised Constitution" and will ask the following: "Shall all the revised constitution be submitted by the constitutional convention not included in questions 2 and 3 be approved?

Question 2 will be headed "Legislative Apportionment." It will ask the following: "Shall the proposed amendments submitted by the constitutional convention to sections 2, 3, 4 and 5 of Article III relating to legislative apportionment be approved?

Question No. 3 will be headed "Taxation." It will ask the following: "Shall the new Article X submitted by the constitutional convention relating to taxation be approved?

The three questions must be voted upon with paper ballots according to a ruling of Egburt E. Woodbury, Attorney General. Two amendments to the constitution and a proposition will also be submitter to the voters on November 2 and may be voted upon either by paper ballot or where voting machines are used, on the machines.

The first amendment relates to woman's suffrage, the second relates to the rate of interest upon debts incurred for some specific work or object authorized by act of legislature and ratified by the people, and Proposition No. 1 relates to the $27,000,000 bond issue for the canals.

"I believe that men and women should have equal priviliges, as they have equal responsibilities. I shall vote 'yes' on the amendment Nov. 2.

"H. J. Terpening, M. D."

LELAND ROOT RECEIVES GOVERNMENT LICENSE

Three young men, all bound together by a fraternal feeling, the outgrowth of their interest in wireless telegraphy, spent the week-end together at the home of Leland Root. Sunday was a day of felicitations for all of them, as on Saturday young Mr. Root received from his Uncle Samuel who takes an interest in wireless, too, a license to operate his instruments in sending and receiving messages through the air. Of course Mr. Root felt good and his guests, Harold Hill of Palermo and A. M. Hudson, showed their whole-hearted spirit in boosting for Leland, and all because they too, are working to secure perfection in the art of wireless telegraphy.

The young men spent yesterday in South Granby as guests of Fr[illegible] Ware, the trip being made by auto[illegible]

"I believe that the right of [illegible]frage should be extended to w[illegible] men and shall vote for [illegible] amendment Nov. 2.

Opinions

Example and Precept.

No longer "Hoy!" and the clink of glasses when national guardsmen of this state meet in social intercourse if Major General O'Ryan's example and admonition are followed. General O'Ryan would prepare for preparedness by having the guard go dry. He merely suggests the reform; but the suggestion is as good as an order, no gentleman failing to comply. In a bulletin to the guard the general reviews the effect of prohibition at camp. He concludes as follows:

"The state military service now exacts from its soldiers a high standard of discipline and a vast amount of arduous training involving in most cases great personal sacrifices. Their interests demand there should be some substantial recognition by the state of their sacrifice and service. But, while awaiting such legislative recognition by the state, there is much that can be done of permanent and immeasurable value to the future of our young men by raising the standards of moral, physical and mental training applied to them. No greater opportunity in this regard exists at the present time than for officers of the division, by precept and example, to inculcate in the minds of their men an intelligent knowledge of the subject of this bulletin, looking to their own self interest, and to spread among them a high conception of the underlying principle of military service—self denial."

More will be accomplished for temperance by General O'Ryan's attitude as the head of the National Guard than by all the Anti-Saloon Leagues and reform organizations run by men looking for big salaries and desirous that evil conditions may continue so that their jobs are safe. Political temperance, pious temperance and reform temperance have not had such good effect upon young men in relation to personal habits as have athletic and baseball managers, railroads and corporations. General O'Ryan is a real temperance crusader.—Watertown Standard.

The Buying Movement.

Stock market developments yesterday offered a conspicuous demonstration of the fact that the purchasing movement, so remarkably exemplified in the general tendencies of war stocks is now extending itself to railroads and various standard industrial securities.

What is done in Wall Street, is by no means a criterion of what is financially best for the country, nor of the real tendencies of the American public—indeed, it is often a criterion of what ought not to be, and of what, in the disposition and actions of the [illegible] majority, is not.

Nevertheless, this trend toward important and yet conservative investments is, we believe, a healthful sign of the times, even though its early manifestations are most acute in the great centers of speculation.

Investment in good standard stocks and bonds, while [illegible] outwardly [illegible] a specu[illegible] not [illegible] really [illegible] a popular [illegible] tion of groups or cliques of the inner circle, but as an expression of investors, who are not on speculation bent, but are seeking sound ways to utilize their money.

Therefore, The Times sees in the expansion of the buying movements a proof of confidence of the public in the business present and future of the country.

But the main point is, that speculators shall not be allowed to trifle with this confidence—in other words, that the buying [illegible] in stocks and bonds shall not be manipulated by and coterie, but [illegible] develop itself as a genuine expression of the popular faith in the situation.

The conditions are cheering, but we must be careful not to overdo them. It is time for poise, for a level head, and for a good strong hand on the bridle, even of enterprise which is forging ahead.

It is well for enterprise to march, to run—even to go at the gallop—but it must not run away with the driver.—Buffalo Times.

A MATTER OF INVESTMENT

With the coming of colder weather, comes the question of indoor amusements, of adapting ourselves to different conditions. Summertime offers many opportunities for get-together functions which must now be laid aside.

Fulton is rich in having wheels within wheels, in church, lodge and club life, but there are too many limitations—too many persons are kept beyond the portals of the doors. These persons comprise those who by reason of their youth are made ineligible for membership. They are as a rule between the girlhood and boyhood age of fifteen and twenty-one years—the formative period when environment of the right sort counts for so much in giving service to city, state and nation in the later years of life. It is during those years that poise is given for later trials, and it is during those years that everything should be done that can be done to provide clean, healthy, invigorating amusement—amusement that will accelerate the action of the red blood corpuscles and throw off the indisposition to take exercise.

Perhaps there are some friends of the girls and boys of this city who criticise the former just a little, and the latter, quite severely, for making certain places their headquarters during leisure hours, but will these same friends reason that, no matter how many ways there may be at present to amuse the young people of the city, there is lacking just one feature to provide for them a get-together place—a Y. M. C. A. or its equivalent?

A lot of money can be tied up in this or that church, in this or that parlor or diningroom, but for the greater part of the week the places remain in darkness, no lights shining from the windows to welcome the stragglers upon our streets. It may cost $5,000 to equip special rooms to be used for special purposes whose usefulness is limited to special occasions, but when it comes to raising money for one-fifth of that sum to be expended in making a get-together home in a community—a place where the rudiments of the community spirit may be imbibed as we play, we do not view with pleasure the sacrifice necessary to bring to a conclusion the issue.

One thousand dollars looks like a large sum of money to raise for the equipment of a get-together place for the young people of our city, although the place might cost less, yet no one would question the wisdom of putting five times that amount into different other projects that could not bring returns commensurate with the expenditure, yet of the two investments we believe that the latter item receives far more attention than the former, even though the one thousand dollars could be made to buy a powerful motor for the upbuilding of the community.

NEW JERSEY POLITICS

President Wilson of course knows that his adherence to the cause of woman suffrage will be of far greater influence than would that of another "acting on his private conviction as a citizen of New Jersey, called upon by the Legislature of the state to express his conviction at the polls." His example should have far reaching consequences; and its practical effect will unquestionably be shown in the attitude of many who aspire to stand in favor with the federal administration.

In Mr. Wilson's party in his own state an interesting situation exists. The Smith-Nugent faction of the Democratic party has been counted against votes for women. To James R. Nugent the letter of Cardinal Gibbons opposing equality at the polls was addressed. But Senator Smith and Mr. Nugent have lately exhibited a tenderness for Mr. Wilson, and the platform adopted by the State Convention on Tuesday pledged the party to labor for his renomination and re-election was supported as enthusiastically by the Essex men as by those who have faithfully worn the Wilson colors from the beginning.

Had the President regarded the impending friendship of Senator Smith and Mr. Nugent with misgiving, yesterday would have been an admirable day for him to emphasize his disregard for their theories of government; and Mr. Wilson is not slow to recognize the potentialities of a psychological moment.—New York Sun.

What Teachers Think

Prominent New York Educators Indorse Woman Suffrage

OCTOBER has come, and school has "taken up." Teacher looms large on the horizon. It is the hour of the educator. What he thinks on the questions of the day have a special timeliness. What is his opinion on the subject of woman suffrage, for instance?

A canvass of the leading educators of New York state conducted by the Empire State Campaign Committee discloses an interesting unanimity of conviction with regard to this, easily the leading question of the hour. As, for instance:

P. M. Hughes.

The superintendent of public instruction of Syracuse believes that "The rights of women to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness ought to be and in truth (if not yet in fact) are equal to those of men; that their rights are inherent and inalienable; that every individual should have all the privileges and powers accorded to every other individual for the protection and maintenance of such rights; that, as the ballot is the effective means to this end, women should have the right to vote."

Henry P. Emerson.

The superintendent of education of Buffalo says: "A superintendent of schools naturally thinks of woman suffrage in its relation to education. How would the suffrage influence teachers and teaching? We all know that American schools have a larger proportion of women teachers than the schools of any other country. Many people consider this a misfortune, because they feel that boys especially should be under masculine influence. Women, it is argued, are not familiar with the worldly, business, political side of life. The reason is that women do not, as a rule, possess the civic or political instinct. They have never had occasion to cultivate it. The right to vote would tend to make women teachers more efficient and more valuable, since it would compel them to cultivate powers now dormant through disuse."

Dr. Frederick H. Sykes.

Dr. Sykes resides in Yonkers, though he is president of the new Connecticut College For Women in New London, Conn. Suffrage is, according to Dr. Sykes, "an essential and inevitable part of the readjustment of life to the new conditions of society already so far advanced. Many reasons may be adduced in its favor, but one, it seems to me, has not been adequately presented, which promises great political good. Party platforms are devised to win votes. When the votes of women as well as of men are to be won there will appear at once in such platforms the causes in which women as well as men are interested. This means that questions that affect life values, as distinct from immediate economic values, will at once become practical politics, to the welfare of the state. Woman suffrage will mean therefore a larger humanity in the legislation and administration of the state.

"Democracy now means men and women. Legislation, which always lags after the fact, will have a chance in 1915 of catching up with our social development."

POLITICAL EDITORIALS

The Republican party should stand by its candidates in this campaign:

Because they are Republicans.

Because they are worthy men.

Because the approaching election is important not only in itself but in its sequels, and

Because in the long run the Republican party has justified itself as the party competent to administer public affairs.—Troy Times.

What the Republicans have accomplished in restoring the honor of the state through executive and legislative action at Albany since the inauguration of Governor Whitman, fully justifies approval and ratification by party vote at the polls next month.—Gloversville Leader-Republican.

The necessity for electing as many Republican assemblymen as possible this fall is apparent. A strong Republican majority needs to be returned in order that Tammany may be prevented from introducing an element of disorder into the workings of the machinery of the state government. The Republicans in every assembly district should rally earnestly to the support of their assembly nominees. Vote as many of them into office as possible.—Plattsburgh Press.

While Governor Whitman, aided by a Republican Legislature, is now doing away with unnecessary positions in the state service and cutting state expenses wherever possible, the administrations of his Democratic predecessors—Dix, Sulzer and Glynn—added new boards and bureaus without regard to the interests of the taxpayer, and appointed commissioners and other officials at yearly salaries which would make the average city dweller feel secure against old age.—Utica Herald-Dispatch.

Governor Whitman and a Republican Legislature have, during the first year, wiped out the indebtedness left by the Democrats, knocked out many unnecessary departments, thereby reducing the fixed charges of state government by hundreds of thousands of dollars a year and have restored business methods in Albany. Governor Whitman's pre-election promises for an honest, economic and efficient state government have been carried out as far as it was possible under the law. Without a Legislature to back up his good work for him and give him the support needed, his hands would have been tied and the taxpayers of the state would have suffered. A combination of the executive and legislative branches of the state government, working in harmony, is the only way to get results.—Yonkers Daily News.

What the American people want is to get back to economic principles that are sound, and to build an industrial system that will flourish in either peace or war. By a protective tariff policy, Germany built up her domestic industries until the nation became commercially independent. Today when shut off from most of the other great producing nations of the earth, she is demonstrating the wisdom of her tariff policy. The lesson will not be lost upon American people and we shall not depend upon war orders from abroad or at home for permanent prosperity.—Flushing Daily Times.

When the Senate Civil Service committee completes its work in running down the occupation and necessity of nearly 20,000 persons drawing pay from this state, it will be able to present a report which will amaze the taxpayers.—Watertown Standard.

SUFFERAGE AS A PRIVILEGE.

William G. Willcox, well known lawyer and member of the board of education of New York city, says:

"It matters but little whether suffrage be regarded as an inherent right or as a privilege granted by the state which may be extended or curtailed as public interest demands. Any privilege granted by the state must in justice apply to all citizens alike. There is little difference in abstract justice between depriving a citizen of an inherent right and denying him privileges which other citizens enjoy.

"Every other privilege granted by the state is shared by men and women alike. No one has an inherent right to use the streets or the water supply or the postoffice or the public schools. Such privileges may always be limited as public welfare requires, but it is universally conceded that every citizen of the state, man or woman, has the right to enjoy them on the same conditions as any other citizen. If suffrage is regarded as a privilege it is as illogical to deny women the right to share in it as to deny them the right to use the streets, parks, public libraries or any other privilege granted by the state."

ON THE FARMER'S SIDE

A Little Straight Talk to the Producer

You have heard a good deal about votes for women during the last year. You will hear a good deal more about it before Nov. 2, when the question of woman suffrage will be passed on at the polls.

Did you ever stop to think what votes for women will mean for farmers? Did you, for instance, ever stop to think that it will mean adding to the electorate a large number of voters who will be on your side in questions that you try to get settled fairly and squarely at Albany?

Women are the consumers of the country in the sense that, as purchasing agents for the home, they buy 80 per cent of all goods for final consumption. Farmers produce a large percentage of all that is consumed. An economic problem of the day is to get a straighter line of connection between consumer and producer, so that farm products may be directly available for the dinner table. A political problem of the day is to secure legislation that will operate toward this same end. Laws powerfully affect the cost of living. Legislation in which farmer and consumer are vitally concerned is constantly defeated at Albany. The reason is that the farmer stands alone.

If New York women were voters the farmer would be re-enforced by the votes of the class whose interests are most closely allied with his, the consuming class. Woman is in the best position to gauge the effect of legislation on that much desired straight line between consumer and producer. The farmer is in the way of double benefit through woman suffrage, benefit from the votes of the women who have the same community interests that he has, and benefit from the votes of all women, because in their capacity as buyers and consumers all women are particularly interested in the legislation that he is particularly interested in. He could count on New York city women and New York state women alike because of their common concern in food values and food prices.

YOU CAN'T AFFORD TO REFUSE IT

THE HELPLESS MOTHERS

This is a terrible picture. It may well strike fear to the heart of fathers and mothers. It shows the hand of Vice outstretched for youth. There is just one trouble with the picture. It is not terrible enough. Every year thousands of girls "disappear" in the clutch of this hand all over the land.

Every year fathers and mothers watch their sons and their daughters go out through the old home door into "the world." It is a world separate and apart from the old home influences. A fence has been deliberately put up between those influences and the world. "Thus far and no farther," comes the edict. "Concern yourselves only with home and family; don't worry your heads about what is happening out in the world. Train your children at home, you mothers. Teach them kindness and truth and gentleness, keep them innocent and sweet—then turn them over to me."

That, in effect, is what is back of the words every time the woman who asks for a vote is told that woman's place is in the home. "Out in the world" there are interests and powers that want no woman interfering in their nefarious practices with the children of women. At the proposal to give women a voice in government every organized iniquity in the land holds up its hands in horror, begins a sentimental drooling about woman keeping herself pure and unspotted from the world and secretly musters money, publicity and "pull" to fight the plan to the death.

Why?

Here is an answer. Ask yourself if it is not the right one.

Woman is mother, first, last and almost all the time. Her spirit of protection broods over the young. She wants them to be safe, not only in their own homes, but "out in the world" as well. As home mother she does what she can. As city mother she could do an added portion. She knows it. That is why she asks for the vote. Those who oppose her know it too. That is why they oppose her. Woman's mother-heart can be withstood—broken if need be; woman's tears can be scoffed at, woman's indirect influence can be overwhelmed, but woman's vote is a direct, practical, powerful factor that corrupt forces in government do not know how to combat.

Should it be combated?

Do not the men who have the interests of home and state honestly at heart want their forces strengthened in every possible way?

Can they honestly doubt that woman's voice at the polls would strengthen these forces?

Shall not woman's direct influence be brought to bear in order to help men make the world a better place for the children of men to live in?

Shall not the "home influence" be allowed to reach into the dark and terrible places of the world and make them decent abiding places for the sons and daughters who go forth from home into the teeming cities by the tens of thousands yearly?

Make a cross mark in the square opposite the word "Yes" on the woman suffrage amendment.

THE SELF CONDEMNED ANTI-SUFFRAGISTS.

By CARRIE CHAPMAN CATT.

Anti-suffragists are demanding the right of freedom from a duty. They acknowledge that voting is not a privilege, but a duty; that if it is conferred they must accept it as such, but they wish to be saved from their duty. Their posters in huge letters proclaim all over New York city this desire to escape the inconvenience of duty. They say "woman's right is the right to freedom from political duties."

Who gave her this right? Women are members of the community, the society, the family into which they were born. How can they claim immunity from duty in any one of these positions and not in the other two? As members of each they are responsible for the conditions of each.

There has been in every place and time a small fraction of the female population which has claimed woman's right to be free from all disagreeable duties, to be tricked out and fed at the cost of others. The trail of these women leads to every prison in the land where are the men who have cheated and lied and forged and embezzled to give them freedom from duty.

The group of men paralleling these women say that "Society owes them a living." They claim that the human being's right is the right of freedom from the duty of supporting himself. These men come to live on the bread line and the park bench.

There is also a group of men voters which has claimed that a gentleman's right is the right of freedom from the "mire of politics." Their freedom from political duties is responsible for "pork barrel politics" and "boss rule."

People who seek immunity from duty, while profiting from the fulfillment of others' devotion to duty, live on the community, whose burdens they refuse to share. They are the load which society carries on its back in its upward climb.

There is no such thing as the right of freedom from any duties, individual or social, domestic or political. By the antis' own poster they condemn themselves.

"VOTES FOR WOMEN"—IT'S EVEN IN VEIL BORDERS

Another feminine application of the demand for suffrage is seen in the alluring new veils which are being worn by advocates of the cause. These are described by the facile pen of a fashion writer as "perfectly adorable," "just too cute for anything" and "fetching, filmy creations in a fillet effect, with the pleading inscription woven into the border in white letters." It is said they are coquettish in the extreme.

Mrs. Marie Nelson Lee, a national and state suffrage worker, is wearing one. "I dare say it wont be long before they become commonplace," she said. "The suffragists think well of them. Miss Mary Garrett Hay, chairman of the Woman Suffrage party, thought the veils just too cute for anything, although she never wears a veil herself.

"However, we don't have to look through a veil to make votes for women seem close at hand."

Educating Jurymen In Law.

Not often does a judge turn a juryman out of his box—to the juryman's content, one may suspect. The relations are generally very cordial. Some time ago, when a juryman asked a question which settled a case, Mr. Justice Bucknill wrote to congratulate him, and said that a man who has served his country on a jury became a more useful citizen. The great Lord Mansfield, who had implicit faith in trial by jury, took such pains to educate them in commercial law at the Guildhall that for some time there was a body of gentlemen in the city known as "Lord Mansfield's jurymen."—London Chronicle.

Treats of Mine Safety.

The federal bureau of mines is investigating the question of explosion proof motors for use in mines where an electric spark or flash might ignite inflammable gases or dust. A technical paper—No. 101—just issued mentions the details of construction that the bureau considers essential for satisfactory service and describes tests of an explosion proof mining machine motor and accessories approved by the bureau.

SUFFRAGE AS A RIGHT.

J. J. Murphy, tenement house commissioner of New York city, has this to say with regard to woman suffrage:

"In a republic, the right of normal persons to vote is inherent. The body politic has a right to prescribe, as a matter of convenience or necessity, the rules which shall govern the casting and counting of the vote, but it has no right to exclude sane, adult, noncriminal persons from participation in the suffrage. That communities do as a matter of fact exclude normal persons from voting is only an evidence of their power to do so, and does not demonstrate the rightfulness of their action.

"Women, as persons amenable to law and answerable for their acts, should have the right of suffrage, so that they may be able to exert their due influence on government. Government of sane, adult, noncriminal persons without their participation in the framing of such government is tyranny and contrary to the fundamental ideals of the republic. The ballot is rather a means of defense against misrule than an affirmative instrument which shapes government. Women should not be denied this means of self protection, especially when so many of them are living lives outside the safeguards of the family."

CARING FOR THE WOMAN WORKER.

Industrial Welfare Commissions In Suffrage States Score During 1915.

The California Industrial Welfare Association reports to the Empire State Campaign Committee through Mrs. Katherine Farwell Edson, its woman member, the following facts:

"During the season 1914 an exhaustive investigation of the canning industry was made. Records were kept in every cannery in the state, numbering fifty-four, showing the hours of work, the amount received every day for every woman in the industry from the beginning of the season to its close. This is probably the most exhaustive investigation of the kind that has ever been made. We have now appointed a subcommittee of canners and employees, who are going to work out standards of conditions of labor, to be submitted to our commission."

Oregon's industrial welfare commission has just issued an order for the strictest regulation of women's hours in canneries that has yet been adopted in the United States, and Oregon is a suffrage state. Fruit and vegetable canneries are allowed to employ adult women overtime for not more than six weeks, between May 1 and December, not more than one hour daily and six hours weekly. All overtime in excess of the regular nine hours daily and fifty-four hours weekly must be paid for at not less than 25 cents an hour. The usual minimum rate for this class of work is about 15 cents an hour.

Baby on Her Arm, She Votes.

At the Mineola fair last week one woman insisted upon going through all the maneuvers of voting at the mimic voting booths with her baby in her arms, "just to show how easy it is," she said. She registered, marked her ticket and triumphantly deposited it with the baby crowing over her shoulder all the while. "Do you know what the baby is saying?" asked the mother—"'Come on in, voting is fine.'"

It was at the Mineola fair, too, that the boy scouts found a lost baby and promptly took it to the suffrage booth, "'cause we know you suffragists know about kids," as the spokesman put it.

The Polonzelo Arrow.

"An arrow studded with the most costly of stones, tipped at both ends with pure virgin gold and headed with the feathers of the rarest birds." Such is the description given of the "Polonzelo arrow," which in 1434 was presented to Sir John Dalcourt by a Spanish gentleman. This wonderful arrow was made in 1204 by an ancestor of the Spaniard's, and every stone and jewel with which it was set was said to represent a human life cut short through its instrumentality. The stones indicated the number of men to whom it had carried death, while the curiously fashioned gold and silver jewels represented the women who had fallen under its poisoned point.

Before and After Marking on Nov. 2. This Is For You, Mr. Voter!

This is the way the equal suffrage amendment question will look on the ballot when it is handed to you for your vote on Nov. 2:

YES	☐	AMENDMENT NO. 1. Shall the proposed amendment to section one of article two of the Constitution, conferring equal suffrage upon women, be approved?
NO	☐

This is the way more than a million New York women hope it will look after you have indicated your answer.

YES	☒	AMENDMENT NO. 1. Shall the proposed amendment to section one of article two of the Constitution, conferring equal suffrage upon women, be approved?
NO	☐

The amendment will be printed on a ticket that will carry one other amendment, "Amendment No. 2," and one proposition, "Proposition No. 1." The woman suffrage amendment comes first on this ticket.

The three things, Amendment No. 1, Amendment No. 2 and Proposition No. 1, are all that will be on this ticket. There will be an entirely separate sheet for the other questions.

These are the official instructions to voters about the right way to mark the ticket:

1. To vote "Yes" on any question make a cross X mark in the square [illegible] the word "Yes"
2. To vote "No" make a cross X mark in the square opposite the w[illegible]
3. Mark only with a pencil having black lead.
4. Any other mark, erasure or [illegible] on the ballot renders it void.
5. If you tear or deface or [illegible] mark this ballot return it an[illegible] other.

Houses in Japan.

Children have a good time in Japan. They are blessed by inheritance with a cheerful nature; they are dressed loosely, yet warmly; they are out of doors as much as possible, and inside their homes there is so little furniture they never stumble over it and are never warned against crawling up on the satin brocaded chairs or handling the bric-a-brac. The houses are always open to sun and air, even in cold weather. They are built dovetailed together, no nails being used, and are mounted on wooden pillars, so that when an earthquake occurs they will not tumble down, but merely shake and settle down again.

A WARNING.

After the third of November,
When the vote is counted and won,
Suffragists all, remember,
They will come to you one by one.
Those who were bitter and hateful,
Those who were comic and gay,
And they'll think you ought to be grateful
When they come to you and say:

"Oh, no, indeed,
I was never opposed.
You must be mixing me up with somebody else.
I own I did not do very much,
But I was always in favor
Of votes for women."

Suffragists, will you, I wonder,
Make an unfriendly reply?
Will you frown, threaten and thunder,
Tell them you know that they lie?
Will you be tactful and gracious,
Smoothing their errors away?
Will you be dumbly pugnacious
Or will you merely say:

"No, not at all.
You were always opposed and said so.
When I asked you for a contribution
You said you would rather give your money
To teaching guinea hens how to turkey trot.
You were never for suffrage
Until it happened."

PRESIDENT'S FIANCEE WAS SCHOOL GIRL FRIEND OF MRS. H. PUTMAN ALLEN

In connection with the romance enveloping the Nation's Executive, President Wilson, has been added a home-like touch which makes it of double interest to Fulton people. Mrs. H. P. Allen of Oneida st. and Mrs. Galt, the future first lady of the land, were college friends in their girlhood days.

In southwest Virginia was located the Martha Washington college for young women. In Wytherville, southwest Virginia, lived Miss Edith Bolling, a young woman of unusual grace and beauty. Because of her noble carriage she was named Pocohontas by her schoolmates.

Miss Nina Worden, now Mrs. Putnam Allen, at this time lived in Salem, southwest Virginia. In the little mountain town of Wytherville Miss Bolling was related to most of the families there. Miss Worden's relatives were likewise numerous in the same town, so a feeling of more than ordinary interest existed between Miss Bolling and the then Miss Worden.

Mrs. Allen when interviewed today corroborated the foregoing facts. In describing Mrs. Galt as she knew her she pictured her as a gloriously beautiful woman, of rare artistic and literary ability, and withal, the quiet dignity and regal bearing of a princess.

Mrs. Allen stated that she did not at first recognize in Mrs. Norman Galt, the president's fiancee, the "Pocohontas" of college days. Later, however, Mrs. Galt's maiden name together with her picture in the newspapers, brought a flood of recollections together with the pleasant surprise.

"Miss Bolling," said Mrs. Allen, "entered the college in my senior year. Soon after I came north and so our acquaintance, like those of every other college, drifted apart."

Mrs. Allen modestly refused to entertain the idea of herself as a White House guest when the suggestion was made, and closed the interview with the statement that she is very glad to have known the future Mrs. Wilson, first lady of the land.

Secretary Redfield's Latest Move to Boost Importations

Washington.—(Special Correspondence.)—Press-agenting the country at government expense for the purpose of encouraging the importation and sale of Swiss-made toys is the latest form of commercial activity to be undertaken by Secretary Redfield. A recent news article sent to the press of the country under government frank tells how the Swiss Legation "has advices from Berne that manufacturers are anxious to supply the Christmas toy trade of the United States," and boasts that "the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, of the Department of Commerce, has undertaken to assist in having orders placed." What will our toymakers think of this undertaking?

Ac cording to the Thirteenth Census of the United States there are 226 establishments with capital aggregating a little over $6,500,000 in this country engaged in making toys and games. There were 6,072 employes on the payroll and nearly $3,000,000 in wages and salaries paid out. It is made up of small factories scattered throughout the country, employing from 25 to 150 hands, and there are no combinations. Its greatest growth was during the period of 1899 to 1912, under Republican administration, which period marked an increase of 125 per cent., the value of the products in 1899 being $4,010,000, and in 1912 about $9,000,000. During this time there was a gradual growth from a seasonal to a perennial industry. "Our business has been built up under the present tariff rate," declared the Treasurer of a Bridgeport, Conn., toy factory to the Ways and Means Committee, in 1913. And the president of a New York concern asserted, "It could only have been done under the shield of a protective tariff."

Our principal competition comes from Germany, where the wage rate is from one-fourth to one-third that paid to the laborers of this country. As toymaking embraces such a diversity of articles no comparative wage scale is available. Despite the war, the importation of toys from Germany in 1915 amounted to $6,700,000, or considerably more than two-thirds the domestic production. The imitative Japanese are also becoming dangerous competitors, with a wage rate one week of which would not pay for one day of American labor. Wages form 75 per cent. of the cost of manufacture.

Whether by accident or design, the tariff rate on toys in the Democratic law was not changed from the Republican rate. It is barely possible that the forceful argument employed by the representatives of the toy industry was able to chisel some semblance of comprehension into the skulls of the framers of the Underwood tariff act, or possibly the appeal which toys make to childish minds induced them to continue the protection of the domestic industry. The rate is 35 per cent. However, the toymakers were indirect sufferers last year, as a result of the country-wide depression following on the heels of the Democratic tariff law. The men out of work in other industries could not buy toys for their children.

This effort of the Administration to boost the Swiss toy industry is the limit in foreign favoritism, and the toymakers of this country will be quick to voice their disapproval of what practically amounts to Government salesmanship of foreign made toys at the taxpayers' expense, and to the domestic manufacturers' undoing. The promise of the Democracy to enact no legislation which would injure legitimate industry was smashed to smithereens, but in this case they add insult to injury, and to the vicious legislation of the last Congress is added the activity of an administrative officer in forwarding the sales of a foreign competitor. It is a commentary on Democratic patriotism.

EAT APPLES 197 WAYS OCT. 19

Rochester.—Not only are you exhorted to eat apples raw and cooked in 197 ways, on national apple day, October 19, but if you follow certain lines of industry you may win a prize. For instance, if you conduct a store, not necessarily a grocery, in Rochester, and you display the best apples in Western New York, you may receive $10 in cash.

That is one of the prizes offered by the Rex Company, Greece manufacturers of spraying materials, of which Thomas Brown is manager. The company also will give a barrel of lime-sulphur solution to the person who raised the apples in the winning display, and a 100 pound keg of arsenate of lead to the man who raised the apples for the second best display.

The E. M. Upton Cold Storage Company of Rochester, of which H. B. Cash is manager, offers a cash prize of $10 for the best display of Western New York apples by any Rochester grocer, and a cash prize of $5 for the second best display.

Entries should be sent to Roland R. Woodward, Secretary of the Chamber of Commerce, by letter or card. John B. Frey, John Hall and R. G. Phillips will judge the exhibits. No store will be allowed more than one prize.

A silver cup, known as the national apple day trophy, will be awarded by the International Apple Shippers' Association to the city having a population of less than 500,000 that holds the best celebration on October 19th. Each city will submit its report to a board of judges, and the award will be made on or before November 15.

"An apple a day keeps the doctor away," will be the slogan for the day. Someone became so enthusiastic over national apple day that he indited the verses:

If you are feeling kind o' blue,
Eat an apple.
It will cheer you through and through
Eat an apple.
Soothe your liver over night.
Operation? Calm your fright.
Eat an apple.

THE FEELING IN FULTON

If the same good spirit existed in all lines of business as exists in the retail Drug Business, this little city would forge ahead by leaps and bounds.

The Kline-Wood Drug Co., hadn't been on the ground many hours before they were visited by every druggist in town, each had a welcome, each with an offer to be of any possible service, each giving every evidence of genuine good-fellowship.

Of course, competition will be keen; business is business, but it's great to have your competitors meet you squarely and on the level. And by the way, it has been whispered lately, here and there, that the very spirit which is needed for bigger things in Fulton, will soon dominate everything selfish and narrow.

PLANT FOREST TREES SOON

College of Forestry Asks People to at Once Take an Interest in Fall Planting.

Trees grow like weeds in New York and outside of the absolutely barren knobs of the Adirondacks and Catskills, there is hardly a bare spot in the state that will not produce a good tree. The College of Forestry at Syracuse is opposed to using land that has any value whatsoever for agricultural purposes, but the studies which the college has been making of forest conditions in the state for the past four years shows that there is really a vast amount of land scattered in small parcels throughout the state which must be in forest to give the best results. Nature starts the growth of vegetation in the spring and as a rule that is the best time of the year to plant trees, but it is also the busiest time and because of the difficulty of getting labor in the spring many people do not plant trees who would otherwise be doing more or less planting.

Nearly all of the pines and spruces which will grow in New York complete their season's growth in the summer and by the last of August have passed into their winter condition. From this time until the final freezing of the soil these species can be dug, transported and replanted with very little danger and give promise of success. It is well to finish planting several weeks before final freezing so the fall rains will pack the soil firmly around the roots, thus preventing deep freezing which is apt to heave the little trees out of the ground in the spring.

The European larch and the broad leaf trees such as ash, basswood and tulip are not as well suited to fall planting as are the evergreens. The growth of these trees is not completed until quite late in the fall and they should not therefore be removed from the ground until the leaves have fallen. This does not occur often until after the first frost so that the season for fall planting of these species is much more restricted. They can be planted, however, if unusual care is taken to see that the soil is firm about the roots and during the first winter fresh soil, in which there is no manure, is piled around the roots for protection against frost.

The New York State College of Forestry at Syracuse is maintaining in the State Forest Station at Syracuse an experiment nursery where over one million trees are produced annually. The college invites inspection of this forest nursery and of the experimental work being carried on in the station. It will be glad to give information at any time regarding the kinds of trees that are best suited to different soils, methods of planting, care of trees after planting, etc. It is surprisingly easy to start a thousand evergreens and until one has planted these they will not appreciate the pleasure of watching the development of a plantation of little trees. School children may be of distinct service to the state by planting a thousand trees on some bit of idle land near the school. The College of Forestry is ready to help such schools as wish to begin planting by aiding in the securing of the teres and in sending out a trained forester to supervise the work. Last spring nearly a dozen schools in the state planted a thousand or more trees each under the direction of the college.

LUCK

Is just another name for good, hard, persistent plugging. Luck is with the merchant who Advertises, not because he advertises, but because he keeps on advertising indefinitely --- Which Means Success.

YOUR SUCCESS

Means the success of your town. Now, honestly, are you doing what you can for your town? Are you "A Herald of Progress"? Do you realize that by doing what you can—which means as much or more than you are doing now, you will be helping yourself—Which Means Success.

If you cannot now be placed where you belong, it is time to right about face, read the words by Ella Wheeler Wilcox, and say to the publishers of your home newspapers—

"I'LL DO WHAT I CAN"

Who takes for his motto "I'll do what I can,"
Shall be better the world as he goes down life's hill;
The willing young heart makes the capable man.
And who does what he can, oft can do what he will,
There's strength in the impulse to help things along,
And forces undreamed of will come to the aid
Of one who, tho' weak, yet believes he is strong,
And offers himself to the task unafraid.

"I'll do what I can" is a challenge to fate,
And fate must succumb when it's put to the test;
A heart that is willing to labor and wait.
In its tussle with life ever comes out the best;
It puts the blue imps of depression to route
And makes many difficult problems seem plain,
It mounts over obstacles, dissipates doubt,
And unravels kinks in life's curious chain.

"I'll do what I can" keeps the progress machine
In good working order as centuries roll;
And civilization would perish, I ween,
Were not those words written on many a soul,
They fell the great forests, they furrow the soil,
They seek new inventions to benefit man,
They fear no exertion, make pastime of toil—
Oh, great is earth's debt to "I'll do what I can."

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

A Story of Feudal Times

By F. A. MITCHEL

During feudal times there was on the continent of Europe a kingdom called Apulia, which had for so many years been at war with its neighbor kingdoms that it was not possible for its sovereigns to intermarry with theirs. The consequence was that, since the Apulian kings were permitted by law to marry only those of royal blood, they intermarried among their own relatives.

There came a time when the royal blood had well nigh run out, and when King Caspar II., who had only one child, a daughter, to succeed him and looked about for a husband for her, he found not one man among his numerous relatives who was fitted for the position of the royal consort. He at once ordered the heralds to examine the royal family records with a view to hunting up some man of remote relationship who would serve the purpose.

The heralds went to a tower where the records of the early Apulian kings were kept and searched back to a time when the kingdom was a Roman province. To their surprise they found that a youth was living whose ancestor was a former king of Apulia. This king had been supplanted by his younger brother, the progenitor of King Caspar. The searchers immediately made known to the king that they had found the true heir to the throne, Caspar himself being a usurper. His majesty warned them under penalty of losing their heads to keep the secret and at once ordered his chamberlain to make inquiries as to the man whose royal pedigree had been unearthed.

He was named Rudolf Kantzler, the latter being the family name of the dynasty in possession of the Apulian throne. But the family names of kings are not in common use, and the young man did not know that he had the same name as his sovereign. Indeed, he did not even know that he was a relative of the king, much less that he was the legitimate sovereign.

Rudolf was a raiser of cabbages and other vegetables for the market. He was a worthy youth, but without education. His age was eighteen, and he had been brought up a clodhopper. Nevertheless the king resolved to marry him to the princess.

The Crown Princess Xenia was fifteen years old. When informed by her father of the situation she was very docile, and the king had great hopes of having no difficulty so far as she was concerned in arranging the marriage. He told her that he would bring Rudolf to the palace as a page, so that he might acquire at least a veneering of refinement, but that he must know nothing of the honor intended for him.

The princess listened to all that was said to her without saying a word in reply. She was altogether too young to consider the necessities of the case, and her mind was occupied in wondering what her future husband was like. She was aware that there is a great difference between a prince and a clodhopper, and a shade of anxiety crossed her young face. But that was all the expression of dissatisfaction that escaped her and was not noticed by her father.

One day when Rudolf was working among his cabbages—he worked the farm for his mother—a messenger wearing the royal livery rode up to him and told him that he had been appointed a page at the palace. Rudolf, astonished, leaned on his hoe and for a time seemed to have lost speech; then, suddenly turning again to his work, he said:

"No; I will not go to the palace to be a page. My place is here with my mother."

Such response had neither been anticipated nor provided for, so the messenger returned and reported it. Xenia was with her father at the time, and when he ordered the messenger to command Rudolf's presence at the palace she asked permission to go along that she might see her future husband. It occurred to the king that in the present case persuasion would be better than force and the face of his daughter might furnish the persuasion, so he consented.

When Xenia was driven to the farm Rudolf was standing at the gate. Xenia leaned out of the coach window and asked if he was Rudolf. When he said yes she was greatly pleased. He bore in face and figure evidence of his royal descent and, though he was dressed in a countryman's apparel, appeared to be a manly fellow, with a countenance denoting nobility of character.

"I have come from the king," said Xenia. "I am the crown princess. I wish you to be a page in my suit. You won't refuse me, will you?"

The boy, more wonder stricken than before, stood for a few moments speechless; then he said:

"If I go to the palace who will attend to my mother's cabbages? They will not thrive, and she will be without support."

An attendant whispered something in the princess' ear, and she said to the boy, "Your mother will receive a pension from my father, the king, that will enable her to live like a lady."

Rudolf seemed lost in thought. Then, fixing his eyes on the princess admiringly, he threw down a spade he held in his hand and said:

"I will go with you, but I must tell my mother."

The princess waited, and in due time the boy appeared at the door in his best suit, kissing his mother goodby. Then he came out to the coach and, to the surprise and consternation of the lackeys, opened the door, entered and sat down beside the princess. They were still more amazed at her suffering him to do so without a word. Then the two were driven to the palace.

When the coach drew up in the courtyard the king was looking out to catch a glimpse of his future son-in-law and successor. Rudolf alighted and handed out the princess.

"Surely," said the king, "the boy has descended from a line of sovereigns. There is something in his bearing, in the grace of his motions, that indicates his lineage."

The young couple entered the palace, and Xenia, smiling, led the youth to his father, saying:

"I asked him to come with me, papa, and he came because I asked him."

Rudolf put out his hand to the king as if he were his majesty's equal. Caspar was about to draw back with kingly dignity when it occurred to him that since the young man was the legitimate sovereign, while he himself was a subject, the plan he had in view would be better served by humoring him, and he took the proffered hand.

"I dare say, your majesty," said Rudolf, "that you are a good king since your daughter is such a lovely princess."

The king called his chamberlain and directed him to take the young man to the apartments that had been prepared for him and to see that he was attired in court costume. When Rudolf stepped forth in velvet and lace, with a rapier by his side, his manly beauty struck every one who saw him. All wondered that he seemed so much at home. Instead of going about gaping at everything he saw he seemed surprised at nothing. A courtier asked him how he felt, coming from a farm to a palace.

"How do I feel? I feel—somehow I feel—as if I were the king."

A chill ran through those who heard the reply, and he who had asked the question whispered to a companion:

"Let his majesty beware. If I mistake not this clodhopper has in him the elements of which kings are made and some day with that princely stride of his will walk to the throne and sit upon it."

Whether it was because the young man's bearing suited King Caspar's purpose or that an inheritance of kingly attributes coursed through Rudolf's veins, certain it is that the young man became a dominant factor at court.

It is not to be supposed that any man could step from cabbage raising to attendance upon royalty without in the beginning committing many blunders. But Rudolf soon acquired the reputation of one who despised conventionality, and when he erred through want of training he was able to give the appearance of one who knew better, but would not take the trouble to do better. The king gave him his choice of preferments, expecting that he would choose the profession most in favor with young men of the time—arms. But Rudolf asked to be educated for a diplomat, whereupon the king sent him as an attendant on an embassy to a neighboring government to conclude a treaty. When the embassy returned Rudolf had concluded the treaty, while the ambassador, who had been outwitted, returned in disgrace.

The rise of the clodhopper was rapid, the king having to bestow upon him one rank after another to keep pace with his personal acquirements. From the lowest grade of noble he filled every grade to that of duke. The king, not being yet ready to acknowledge his royal blood, could not make him a prince, but it was rumored that some further elevation was in store for him.

One day King Caspar fell ill. It was understood that his malady was serious, and the council had misgivings as to the succession. The Princess Xenia was but eighteen years old, and it was rumored that Duke Rudolf would on the king's death seize the government. The real danger was concealed. A neighboring sovereign, Otho, intrigued with certain disloyal Apulians upon the death of the king to annex their country to his kingdom.

The king's illness grew upon him so rapidly that he had no time to arrange for the succession. He died suddenly and King Otho's adherents attempted to seize the government. Duke Rudolf had been apprised of the intention and, putting himself at the head of the Apulian troops, nipped the insurrection in the bud. It was supposed by many that, having an army to support him, he would seize a government headed by a weak girl and make himself king. When quiet was restored and the conqueror rode to the palace, the princess' attendants, hearing that he was coming and fearing that he would make himself king, advised her to escape while there was yet time. Instead she went out to the main entrance and stood on the stone balcony. Rudolf rode up, dismounted and ran up the steps, greeting Xenia as queen.

"Long live the queen!"

Xenia threw her arms around him, then, turning to the people, cried:

"Long live the king!"

The secret that had been so long kept was promulgated, and the people went wild with delight, hailing Rudolf as king and Xenia as queen in the same breath.

The marriage and coronation took place on the same day, the bride and groom having been proclaimed as King Rudolf and Queen Xenia.

The Elevator Boy

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Many a young doctor or lawyer just starting his career has watched an elevator boy at work and said to himself:

"Ah, what a profession! No disappointments—no carking care—no burdens on the young back. Why didn't I adopt it?"

And yet the young gentleman who elevates the elevator has hidden sorrows that the public wots not of.

These sorrows begin with the engineer.

In a certain building not long ago I sized up the engineer the very first day as a man who would make me trouble if he could. I learned that two of the window cleaners thought him a single man and both were a little gone on him. Also that his wife brought his lunch in regularly every noon. The next day at the proper time I scooted up to the eighth floor and found the Widow McCarthy wiping up the hall, and I said to her:

"Have you got your lunch with you, Mrs. McCarthy?"

"Indade and I have," she replied.

"And why don't you go down to the basement and eat it in company with Engineer Flyn? I know he would appreciate your company."

"That's true, me boy, and I'll get me basket and go down, especially as that cold faced grass widdy who calls herself Mrs. O'Shane, though she's no right to it in the law, seems to have finished her floor and gone home."

I took her down and then scooted for the fifth floor and found Mrs. O'Shane and said to her:

"Why don't you take your lunch basket and go down and keep Mr. Flyn company?"

"Is it company he sighs for, me laddy? If so I'll go down and cheer him up with my presence," she replied.

"And you'll find a place to warm up some cold tea if you want to."

"Thank ye, but that is a beautiful idea, and mebbe the good hearted man will have a cup wid me. How long ago did Mrs. McCarthy disappear, Sammis?"

"Oh, I took her down some time ago."

"She calls herself the Widdy McCarty, Sammis, leavin' the 'h' out to put in her 'shugar,' I suppose, but is she a widdy, me boy? It's easy enough to say this and that, but where are the proofs? Has she ever shown anybody her husband's death notice as 'twas printed?"

"I never saw it, ma'am."

I dropped Mrs. O'Shane at the basement just as Mr. Flyn's wife came in with his lunch. There wasn't much said. The three women pitched into each other almost on sight, and they were pulling hair and banging into partitions and making the dust fly when I took a walk. Next day as I stopped at the sixth Mrs. McCarthy got sight of me and said:

"Sammis, I'm told that ye are an orphan boy all by yourself."

"Not strictly an orphan, only fatherless."

"So you've got a mother, have ye? Well, a poor fatherless boy can't be havin' too many mothers, and I'll also be a mother to ye."

"I hadn't better call you 'ma' when any one's around, had I, ma?"

"I was a-thinkin' about that, Sammis," she thoughtfully replied.

"No, I guess you hadn't. You see, it might lead to jealousy and more. Sammis, d'ye mind I went down to the basement to eat me lunch wid that spalpeen of an engineer the other day?"

"Seems as if I did. You thought Mr. Flyn would be a bit lonely, I believe. He didn't like to eat his lunch alone."

"Bad cess to his loneliness and his whole body! Sammis, me son, the man is a deceiver and ought to be dropped from the roof. He let on to me that he was a single man and dyin' fur some one to luv him. What d'ye think, Sammis? On the day I'm thinkin' of I had scarcely got out of the elevator and says 'good day' to him when she that calls herself Mrs. O'Shane cums after me, and right on her heels cums a woman wid a lunch basket—the engineer's own true and legal woife! Wasn't that a pretty mess, me son?"

"Did anything happen?"

"I'm not clear about it, Sammis, but I think somethin' did. I have a dim recollection of bein' banged on the chin, receivin' this blackness under me eye and of me heels flyin' away wid me and me bein' banged against the partitions, but I shall never be able to make it out to me satisfaction. All I'm sure of is that me head has been achin' ever since that hour, and every time I draw a breath I feel like hittin' that engineer over the head with me bucket."

"And we'll put up a job on him and get him bounced?"

"By and by, perhaps, but not now. We'll move slowly in this matter, Sammis, and meanwhile I'm lookin' for you to defend yer adopted mother's reputation should any gossip arise. Ye might deny that ye took me down that day. By the way, how's the mortgage on the home, Sammis?"

"I'm staggering under it yet, thank you."

"It's too bad, but keep up your courage. Here's a banniny to stay yer stummick till lunch time, and it's not the last ye'll git by a jugful. Quiet is the word, Sammis—easy and quiet and no gossip—and ye'll bless the day that Mrs. McCarthy adopted ye for her very own."

Mr. Flyn may think he's up to a dodge or two, but so is SAMMIS,
The Elevator Boy.

For Young Folks

Teddy Roosevelt 3d Is a Happy Outdoor Youngster.

© 1915, by American Press Association.

As his picture indicates, Teddy Roosevelt 3d is a wholesome and robust little lad. He is a great favorite of his famous grandfather and spends much of his time at the ex-president's home at Oyster Bay, N. Y. He is the son of Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., and is the third of his family to bear the well known name. The youngest Teddy is very fond of bathing and may frequently be seen sporting in the waves at Southampton, N. Y. It was at this resort that the camera man snapped Teddy 3d. He had just emerged from a ducking in the waves, but was good natured and willingly posed for his photograph. He is too young to swim as yet, but by this time next year, if he inherits the qualities of his grandfather, he will have acquired that accomplishment.

Proverb Puzzle.

In each of the following ten sayings a word of five letters is omitted. When these ten words are rightly guessed and placed one below another in the order here given the central letters reading downward will spell the name of a famous poet, who was born in February, 1807:

1. Idle — are always meddling.
2. A bird is — by its note and a man by his talk.
3. Make yourself all — and the flies will devour you.
4. A — is a fool's argument.
5. — a fool your finger and he will take your whole hand.
6. A small leak will sink a — ship.
7. A person's — ought to be his greatest secret.
8. He that shows his ill temper — his enemy where he may hit him.
9. A rascal — rich has lost all his kindred.
10. Do as most do and — will speak ill of thee.

A New Way to Play With the Sea.

The traditional way to play with the surf is to dive through the breakers. There is, however, another game that is still more riotous fun and gives the waves a fairer chance.

The bather wades out to the line where the breakers begin to curl and the water is about shoulder deep and stands facing out to sea with his eye on the coming wave. Just before the wave begins to lift to form the breaker the bather throws himself on his back and floats in that way—head toward the shore, feet toward the sea. If he has judged time and distance correctly the curling breaker will pick up the bather, feet first, turn him heels over head and leave him standing on his feet, ready for the next wave. If he misjudges the timing or the distance—well, that is the game—the wave scores.

It takes large breakers to turn a grown man, as large breakers as people often bathe in, but ordinary surf will do the trick for a boy.—Youth's Companion.

A Strange Word.

There is a word in the dictionary which you may read forward or backward without changing it one iota, either in meaning or letters. Write the word out in capitals and analyze it. The letters are now in procession. Mamma is in the lead, sister Ada is conspicuous in the center, while poor papa—the father of us all—is in the rear.

Again, if children reassemble the first part of this word they will be crazy, and if their boats go over the last part they will probably be drowned. What is this mysterious word?

For the Ideal Nursery

In no part of the home has there been a greater change in the furnishings than in the nursery. Formerly any old piece of furniture was thought good enough for the children's room. Only an extravagant or careless housekeeper would put good furniture in a nursery to be crawled over and perhaps soiled by muddy boots or grimy fingers.

The first change in this condition came when the cry for sanitation in the home swept through the land. After practically every other room in the house had been swept and garnished to the satisfaction of the sanitation experts the reform struck the nursery. The little people lost not only their worn sofas, ragged rugs and commonplace pictures, but practically everything in the shape of furniture excepting enameled iron cots and straight backed enameled chairs. Rugs were an abomination and pictures accumulated dust, parents were told.

And now again after every other room in the house has received the attention of architects and decorators the little people have come into their own. Parents as well as educators have come to realize the importance of environment upon the young as well as upon older persons. New nurseries and playrooms are just as beautiful and as individual as the rest of the house. This does not mean that in the new nursery the question of sanitation is overlooked, only that parents have come to realize that the aesthetic sense of the young child may be influenced by its surroundings without in any way lessening the hygienic quality of the rooms.

In the new nurseries the floors are always made so that they can be easily washed. Though hardwood floors are considered durable as well as sanitary and beautiful, many persons, parents, educators and decorators, prefer nursery linoleum, which is said to be sanitary and easily kept free from dust and which has the added advantage of being made with figures of Mother Goose and animals and birds scattered over its surface.

When a hardwood floor is preferred for a nursery rugs with all sorts of quaint and beautiful figures are to be had. When the child first begins to walk all rugs should be carefully held in place by thumb tacks to prevent the baby from slipping on them.

When coloring the walls it is well to remember that a delicate shade of yellow has a brightening effect and is not injurious to the child's eyes. Where the room is bright and cheerful naturally a delicate shade of green is the color favored.

There are many charming designs in wall paper made especially for nurseries. Among the all over patterns shown by one firm which makes a specialty of furnishing and decorating nurseries there is one with scenes from "Mother Goose" in delicate shades with touches of red on a pale buff background. There is another with Little Bo Peep and her lambkins on a delicate shade of green. Then there are others with fairies, with elves and all manner of interesting make believe people. One just suited for a boy's room has flamingoes and other wonderful birds in a tropical forest.

The point to remember about actual furniture is simplicity and durability, articles that can be easily scrubbed in case of contagions. Put nothing in a child's room that he cannot manage and master—chairs scaled to his size and shelves that he can reach—and allow plenty of boxes and cubbyholes, where his precious, favorite junk can be treasured and respected.

A New Headlight.

A novel electric flatiron has appeared on the market which is provided with a headlight. The latter consists of a small lamp of four candle power operated at six volts. The beams of this lamp are projected down upon the work directly in front of the point of the iron and enable the operator to see just what she is doing. The lamp is arranged to burn only when current is flowing through the iron, and for this reason it operates as a signal to show whether the current is turned on or off.

Cloak Union Protocol Ended.

The protocol between the Cloakmakers' union and the Cloak Manufacturers' Protective association of New York city has been abrogated. The protocol was drawn up in September, 1910, at the close of a bitter seven weeks' strike in which more than 50,000 garment workers were involved. It was the agreement that was commended by the federal department of labor for its provisions submitting all differences to arbitration. Conditions are now in the same state as before the signing of the famous "peace treaty."

FLOUNCES GIVE SKIRTS A WIDE EFFECT.

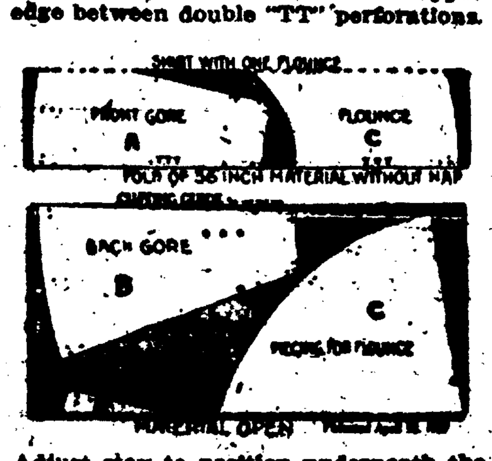
A modish skirt in soft silk crepe de Chine trimmed with a deep flounce which may be finished with a hemstitched hem or a band of fur.

Designers of fashionable clothes at last seem to be trying to combine style and economy. In the development of the new skirts the full effect, which is most essential, is gained by the use of flounces laid over a foundation so gored that there is much flare at the bottom and yet only sufficient fulness at the top to permit of a few gathers.

For soft, clinging materials there is no more popular model than the skirt shown here. In medium size it requires 4 yards of 40-inch material.

Provision is made for two flounces in case this style is preferred. If only one flounce is desired, however, the home dressmaker should use the whole upper flounce pattern.

The foundation is made first, the gores being joined as notched. Then close back seam from large "O" perforation to lower edge and finish edges above for placket. Gather the upper edge between double "TT" perforations.



Adjust stay to position underneath the upper edge of the skirt, center-fronts even and small "o" perforation at side seam. Next, bring back edge to center-back.

Now close center-back seam of flounce and finish for an opening. Adjust to position, center-fronts and back seams even. Stitch upper edge of flounce along crosslines of small perforations in gores.

If made of sheer material nothing would be more appropriate as a trimming for the skirt than bands of fur or satin. However, velvet bands are used with excellent effect, particularly upon sheer materials.

Satin and taffeta skirts are stitched about the bottom of both foundation and flounce with deep folds of serge. The idea has utilitarian value as well as style, for the serge keeps the silk from cutting out and lengthens the life of the skirt.

SETTLE YOUR HOME.

After Vacation Ends This Task Falls to the Housewife.

Coming home from a vacation is not relished by any worker, but it is particularly hard for the housewife, who must set her home in order immediately upon her return. And this is the [illegible] have spent the summer in the country and whose homes or apartments have been shut up during the hot weather.

A partially dismantled apartment is a most depressing sight to view upon one's homecoming and the prospect of all the work to be done to put the rooms in order will not add to the gayety of one's spirits. However, the work must be done and done quickly, so it must be accepted with the best grace possible.

If the housewife has been careful about closing up the house before her departure in the early part of summer, her task of reopening the rooms and setting them in order will be considerably lessened at this time of year. All that will be necessary will be to dust, strip off the coverings from furniture and pictures, put down the rugs after the floors have been oiled and hang up the curtains and outer coverings.

In opening up the house for winter occupation begin with the bedrooms, for these will be needed first. It is decidedly unhealthy to sleep even for one night in rooms that have been unaired for several weeks. So throw open the windows the moment you enter the house and let the fresh air clear out the musty odors. Now begin by taking down the bed and going over every crack and crevice carefully, wiping off every particle of dust and washing with gasoline if necessary. Do not use gasoline near fire or open light.

Next tackle the mattress. This should be thoroughly brushed, beaten and aired before being put back on the bed. The same treatment should be accorded the springs. While the bed is thus dismantled, the springs and mattresses having been sent to the roof for an airing if possible, wipe off the walls of the bedroom with a broom wrapped in flannel. This will do away with the chance of microbes remaining in the room from dust which may have collected on the walls.

Now the bed is ready to be made and the rest of the room set in order.

This work will take up probably an entire day, and as it is the most important and necessary work to be done after the housewife's return, she should rest content with her labors and leave the rest of the house for some future time.

It is unwise to try to accomplish too much after the return, for all the benefit of the vacation will be gone if the housewife becomes tired out while putting her house in order.

HOW THE LOVE POTION WORKED

Amusing Result of a Scientific Experiment.

"I tell you, doctor, we have no knowledge of the point where the imagination gives place to the germ or the germ gives place to the imagination."

"And I tell you, doctor, the imagination has nothing to do with it. The germ produces the disease."

"How do you account for the deaths that have occurred in cases where the subject supposes himself to have been poisoned, when he has not been poisoned?"

"I don't believe one has ever been substantiated."

"Do you admit that men and women have gone mad for love?"

"No. They have gone mad while in love. They would have eventually gone mad anyway."

"I will produce love by means of the imagination."

"Nonsense."

Dr. Finch, who made this daring proposition, sat thinking, while his companion, Dr. Hargrave, lighted a fresh cigar. Presently Finch said:

"Your Alice is now about fourteen, I believe. My Dick is fifteen. For my part, a match between them, when older, would be acceptable. How do you feel about it?"

"I should not object."

"Very well. We will give the children lessons in germs and their effects, then administer to each a dose, telling them that it is an infection of love, after which they shall be kept for a time in propinquity with each other."

"Agreed."

A week later each one of the children was given a dose of some sweet smelling liquid—the principal odor was of violet—and told that it would infect them with love. Then they were packed off together to a farm owned by Dr. Finch, where they were put under the care of the farmer and his wife. Alice, who took far more interest in the disease than Dick, had purloined the bottle from which her father had given her the infecting dose and proposed to experiment with it on her own account. Dick told her that he had been given a dose, and she was interested to know how the disease would first appear. But Dick found some farmer boys, who piloted him to the trout grounds and the swimming hole, and for the first two or three days Alice saw nothing of him. When he got back to the farmhouse he had forgotten all about the love germs.

Not so Alice. She watched eagerly for the first symptom of the infection, feeling her pulse and looking at her tongue a dozen times a day. In her letters home, which she was told to mail once a week, she said that she "didn't think the potion could have been strong enough, because she didn't feel any different from when she left home." Her father showed the letter to his friend Finch in triumph, but the confident Finch told him to wait. Soon after this a letter came from Dick to his father, in which he mentioned the fact that Alice had said that he needed more of the infecting dose, and she was cramming it into him.

A month passed, and the doctors were beginning to consider the experiment a failure, when a letter came from Alice which changed the situation.

"I've got the disease," she said, "and I feel so funny. I like it. Dick's got it too. I got it first, then Dick came down with it. I wonder which will get well first. It is the nicest disease I ever had. Nothing at all like that nasty old measles."

Dick wrote in a different vein. "Alice says that I'm infected," he said, "but I don't know. I don't feel exactly like she does, but I suppose she's right about it."

Drs. Finch and Hargrave met on the street soon after the arrival of these letters, and Finch crowed over his opponent, though he consoled him on the ground that their friendship would be continued by the union of their children.

The next day each received a telegram from the farmer to come at once. Fearing that their children had been thrown under a mowing machine, they met on the first train to start for the farm. Hiring a wagon at the station, they were driving down the road when they met Alice walking beside a red faced, freckled country gawk about twenty years old in a woolen shirt, no coat and his hair sticking through holes in his hat.

"The germs have worked, papa," she exclaimed. "I've given Hank a dose, and he's got it too. He says he's got it awful."

"Get in here," said the father angrily and evidently unmindful of the scientific features of the case. Alice obeyed the order, and Hank was left standing in the road. Dr. Finch leaned back in his seat, put his handkerchief to his face and roared with laughter. But when they reached the farmhouse the tables were turned. There sat Dick beside a homely young woman of eighteen in a calico dress and [illegible]

For the ever-acceptable and serviceable suit of blue serge, this would be a particularly good design. The jacket is one of the new snug-fitting models, fastening in single-breasted style right to the neck, where it is finished with a medium deep collar. The skirt shows the new silhouette with flat panel front and back and plaited sides. Pockets and buttons trim the coat and the entire costume, in average size, calls for 4 7-8 yards 54-inch material.

Pictorial Review Jacket No. 6351. Sizes, 32 to 44 in. bust and 16 to 20 years. Price, 15 cents. Skirt No. 6345. Sizes, 22 to 34 in. waist. Price, 15 cents.

MEN AVAILABLE FOR WAR.

Two and One-half Millions Ready in New York State.

Albany, N. Y.—There are 2,500,000 men in New York state between the ages of eighteen and forty-five, therefore, available for war duty, Secretary of State Hugo announced in one of his census bulletins.

The June enumeration shows, he says, that there were approximately 250 officers and 6,800 enlisted men at the army posts of the state, 60 officers and 1,300 men in New York's naval militia and 1,000 officers and 16,080 men in the national guard. Thousands of men besides these have had some military training, either in the regular army, national guard or in college or military academies.

Figures obtained from the adjutant general's office show little change in the strength of the national guard in fifty years. At present it stands: Officers, 1,000; enlisted men, 16,080; total, 17,080. In 1857 it was: Officers, 1,827; enlisted men, 14,608; total, 16,435.

The possible strength of the division under the present federal regulations is: Officers, 743; enlisted men, 21,930; total, 22,673.

To give more men at least the rudiments of a military training Lieutenant Colonel E. V. Howard of the adjutant general's office favors what he terms a "mild conscription." Every young man on reaching the age of eighteen years would be called to serve under the colors for three months during which time he would give thirty days of active service each year. A call to arms would find, then, thousands of men better fitted to serve their country.

United States dollars command a bigger premium abroad than ever before, but no one relishes the job of going over to collect it.

If the weather is to keep up such pranks we can establish all the year round resorts and maybe [illegible] going.

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

Bill Killefer, Philadelphia Nationals' Backstop.

William Killefer, first string catcher of the Philadelphia Nationals, is considered by experts to be one of the best backstops in the game. He is lightning fast and throws the ball to bases with splendid accuracy and great speed. Very few bases are stolen when Bill is on duty behind the plate. In holding up pitchers he is in a class by himself. With the bat also Mr. Killefer is very handy, being considered the best sacrifice hitter in the National league, and as a pinch hitter he is feared by managers and pitchers. Killefer is a pupil of Charley Dooin, who is now catching for McGraw's Giants.

Clabby to Fight Les Darcey.

According to a man who is in a position to know, Jimmy Clabby, the Milwaukee middleweight, is to receive a guarantee of $4,000 with a privilege of accepting 25 per cent of the gross receipts for his twenty round battle with Les Darcey, the champion of Australia, which is to be fought at Sydney, Australia, the middle of October.

Des Moines Wins Pennant.

Des Moines has won the 1915 pennant of the Western Baseball league. The new champions have headed the league since the middle of last June with the exception of one day in August, when Denver occupied first place.

"It Certainly Does 'Make Cooking Easy'"

Glenwoods are always Brim Full of New Wrinkles

The Glenwood Balanced Baking Damper is far ahead of any other—it is as positive as the turning of a railroad switch—open to start the fire, closed to bake—just this one damper for kindling or baking and best of all, it can't warp or stick.

The Glenwood Revolving Coal Grate is easy to shake at all times, and simply fine for removing clinkers. It is triangular in shape, with three different sides for wear.

The Glenwood Sectional Top is interchangeable—cross pieces can not warp—a wash boiler can be placed at the back as well as in front for quick heating, leaving the front holes free for cooking.

The Glenwood Shelf Under Oven Door is not stationary—it automatically raises and lowers as oven door is opened or closed. It is always level with oven bottom—a great convenience when basting meats or removing food.

The Ash Pan rests on a roller bearing frame—just open door and it rolls out at the slightest touch, neat and clean.

Glenwood Iron is smooth and perfect—the easiest of any to clean—a real delight to the most exacting housekeeper.

Von Mackensen Pushes Forward Along Line; Slight Resistance

London.—The rear guard fighting that will fill the official reports from the Balkan theatre until the main Serbian army elects to stand and give battle to the Austro-German force of invasion has begun from Belgrade to the Iron Gate. With the Germanic allies definitely established on Serb territory and the crossings of the Save and the Danube secured against interference, Field Marshal Von Mackensen is pushing forward along the Orient line both from Belgrade and Semendria with only light detachments to dispute his way. Belgrade has been occupied to the low hills back of the city.

There is no expectation here that a battle in force will be fought before another fortnight. The terrain over which the Germans are moving is the heart of the Serbian wheat country, slightly rolling, moderately watered and with a gradually increasing elevation that culminates from fifty to seventy miles from the Danube in the mountains where the principal defense will be attempted. The Morava Valley up to this point offers few natural obstacles and it is not regarded as within the possibilities that the Serb command would risk an engagement in circumstances where their inferiority in numbers cannot be supported by an advantageous terrain.

By the end of a fortnight, which will give to the Serbians time to hinder the Teutonic progress, the allied forces landed at Salonica should be organized for battle and in alignment with the main Serbian army north of Nish, covering the Belgrade-Sofia railroad and with wings supported by the mountain ranges on either side.

Reports from Nish yesterday said Austria detachments had been routed on the Drina, but since the same dispatches said the principal Austro-German blow was falling between Belgrade and Ram on the Danube little importance attaches to the frontier skirmishes on the west.

The Bulgarians, so far as is known, have not yet made an incursion into Serbian territory, and it is believed they will hold their hands until they know how matters go with the Austro-Germans. Some Balkan authorities, indeed, still believe the Bulgarians will not interfere with the movement northward of the Anglo-French expedition, for to do so would immediately bring the shells of the war ships into their ports on the Black and Aegean Seas, probably followed by the landing of Russian troops at aVrna and Burgas and of other allied troops at Dedeaghatch.

Greece and Roumania remain interested spectators, although the former has given assurances of her benevolent neutrality toward the Allies. Representatives of the Entente have furnished the Greek government with information concerning the agreement beetween Bulgaria and Germany, which, it is asserted, gives to the Bulgars a free hand to deal not only with Serbia, but with Greece as well, should the Central Powers win.

ENGLAND FEARS GERMAN INVASION OF EAST INDIA

London.—Colonel Repington, the London Times military expert, writes:

There either are or soon will be 250,000 to 300,000 Germans under General Mackensen concentrated against Serbia. Austrian troops on the Drina will co-operate by moving east. We should not doubt the ability of Serbia to deal with this invasion if it stood alone, but the addition of the Bulgarian army to Serbia's enemies is a fatal danger and comes from a fatal direction.

We cannot suppose that the Bulgarian offensive will be conducted with fewer than 300,000 men, and if the Turks take over Varna and the Black Sea front the number may be higher.

That Serbia will give a good account of herself we are sure, but unless from 300,000 to 400,000 allied troops come to her aid in time the chances of successful resistance are not great.

The quarter of a million men under Mackensen might have taken Rovno or Dvinsk or Riga, or passed the Russian center east of Minsk and then might have carried out a strong counter offensive against France.

For lack of them, German invasion of Russia has languished for the last three weeks. It is for us to take advantage of the moment to press our offensive in the West and for Russia to strive by every means to build up new armies and complete her equipment. It is on the French and Russian frontiers that this war will be decided, and more surely in our favor if we keep steadily before us the main issues of the war and refuse to be led away by the mirage of a secondary operation.

Even if Germany were installed at Constantinople and had all the Balkan states under her heel it would not profit her were we victorious in the main theatre, while if Germany's ambitions tempt her further east toward East Asia and India then the casus foederis under our treaty with Japan would come into force and a fresh enemy face the Germans.

CENSOR STOPS FOUR PARISIAN PAPERS

London.—Censorshop rigors, against which the British press and public have been complaining so bitterly, have extended to France. Four daily papers of Paris, the Rappel, the Radical, the Guerre Sociale and L'Oeuvre, have been ordered supended.

The first three must not publish for two days, while the fourth is suspended indefinitely. M. Louis Leroux, a journalist, has been tried by court martial for spreading alarming reports. In defending him Jacques Bonzon declared:

"The censor is an undeniable person with nineteen tentacles, without, apparently, a single head."

Sir Frederick Milner, in compla[illegible] of the British censor to the Lo[illegible] Times, writes:

"I have always supposed the [illegible] ness of the censor was to defea[illegible] enemy. It appears, however, to b[illegible] duty to shield officials at home [illegible] fail to do their duty. I hope to [illegible] this abuse taken up in Parlia[illegible] At any rate, he may muzzle the [illegible], but he cannot muzzle me."

Game Wardens Faced Enraged Man's Shot Gun; Disarmed Him

The vigilance shown by Game Warden Travis of Cleveland and his assistants, Collins of Fulton and Moriarity of Oswego, in the suppression of violations of the game laws receives universal commendation. That the men in the discharge of their duties are in constant danger of losing their lives is shown by an occurrence yesterday when Travis and Moriarity came upon an Italian in the outskirts of Oswego who had in his possession a pheasant, shot out of season. The game-keepers approached the man to take him into custody, and upon recognizing the intention of the two officers, the Italian aimed a loaded automatic repeating shotgun at them. The two officers pounced upon the Italian and brushed the gun aside before he could carry out his design. The prisoner works in a laundry in Oswego and was released on bail given by his employer. He will be arraigned in police court in Oswego today.

That there are few violations of the game laws in Oswego county is certain, as practically every huntsman who reads the daily papers knows of the close watch being kept by the game wardens, also the penalties incurred by violators of the game laws.

A fine of $96 was paid by an Italian residing on the West Side in this city, who was arrested Saturday by Game Warden Collins. The man confessed judgment and was released upon payment of the fine. The game warden asserted that an extreme penalty of $[illegible]00 could have been exacted in this case if it had been prosecuted. The man arrested was involved in the recent arrests for unlawful fishing in the river bed at the time the water was withdrawn from the stream. Game Warden Collins served summons on more than fifty persons at that time, all of whom pleaded guilty and were released upon payment of a fine.

MONSTER BALLOTS TO PLEAD SUFFRAGE CAUSE THIS MONTH

New York.—That he who stands on the curb may early read how to mark his ballot for suffrage the organizers of the big parade of the unfranchised arranged yesterday to display scores of gigantic ballots like the official sign of citizenship privileges. These greatly enlarged copies will be generally distributed through the line of the marchers on October 23, when it is expected by those in charge that not fewer than 25,000 women will be in line. There will be no doubt left in the minds of men about where to put their cross.

Numerous banners telling of President Wilson's favorable attitude toward the cause also will be placed in the parade, which is to have thousands of banners, and all of them presenting facts, not promises, the committee says. The banners will tell the history of the suffrage movement in the world.

More than $1,000 already has been spent on new banners and the same sum will be represented in other banners which have been used in previous parades. Most of them will be in the Empire State Campaign Committee's colors, blue, gold and white, but one banner, setting forth New York status, will have a touch of black.

The Women's Political Union, which will have a place near the end of the line, is to have its marshals on bicycles. Eight splendid white horses, which are to draw the float being designed under the direction of Mrs. John W. Alexander, chairman of the decorations committee, are to have a bath in blueing to make them even whiter. Commissioner Katherine B. Davis, of the Department of Correction, will head a delegation of more than two hundred city employes.

Ten thousand balloons bearing the slogan of the suffragists will be sent up from various parts of the city tomorrow. The idea in letting fly skyward numerous yellow and blue toys with the words, "Votes for Women," is bound to remind the voters that election day and the decision on the suffrage amendment are close at hand. The first lot of balloons will be sent up at 12 o'clock from a score of automobile, which will carry one thousand balloons to Wall street. Suffragists will tie the blue and yellow toy to their windows and use them in other ways.

On the balloon committee are Mrs. James Lees Laidlow, Mrs. A. Clay Bartlett, Mrs. Mabel Keep, Miss Portia Willis, Mrs. Florence Brown Cotham, Miss Rose Bower and Mrs. Edna Perkins.

HONEYMOON BUYING BY PRESIDENT AND MRS. GALT POINT TO EARLY WEDDING

Washington.—Trousseax and honeymoon plans occupied the attention of President Wilson and his bride-elect, Mrs. Norman Galt, to considerable extent today.

Semi-official statements were made that the ceremony will occur "within sixty and not less than thirty days." There are some who still believe, however, that it will take place within a few days. These latter found support for their theory in a shopping trip made by President Wilson this morning, when he purchased several personal articles, including a traveling bag and a steamer trunk. The latter revived the story that the moneymoon is to be passed on the Mayflower. The general opinion remains, however, that Pass Christian, Mississippi, will be chosen. Mrs. Galt was also shopping today.

There is a persistent rumor that the wedding is to be on Friday—the President's avowed "lucky" day.

"I am too busy preparing my trousseau. Every day counts for me now and even entertaining that I would certainly enjoy, must, therefore, wait until later."

This, to some, sounds like an early marriage.

Mrs. Galt heard the President's speech today from the box of Mrs. William Cumming Story, President General of the D. A. R. She was accompanied by Miss Helen Woodrow Bones, the Misses Smith and her mother, Mrs. W. P. Bolling. She was dressed in a smart suit of black taffeta, with vestee and cuffs of Georgette crepe. With this she wore a black velvet picture hat.

Mrs. Galt paid close attention. On completing his speech the President gave a swift upward glance at her box. She answered it with a blush and a charming smile. In commenting to friends, Mrs. Galt said:

"What an inspiring sight. American women are so patriotic. And patriotism is a wholesome occupation for anyone. I have greatly enjoyed the afternoon."

ITALY [illegible]S FROM TA[illegible]T IN BALKAN CA[illegible]N; TOO WEAK

Paris.—It was learned today that Italy has decided not to participate in the Balkan expedition.

The general staff of the Italian army is of the opinion it cannot spare a contingent to aid the allies in the Orient. All the men now mobilized, it is claimed, will be needed for the winter campaign in the Alps.

French military critics reply with the assertion that Italy is facing more than 300,000 Austrians with an army of at least 1,000,000 men and with the winter near, when there can be no fighting in the Alps, she is in a far better position to send an expeditionary force against Turkey or Bulgaria than any other of the allies.

Maurice Barres warns Italy if Austria and Germany crush Serbia Italy's ambition to become Queen of the Adriatic will certainly vanish and she will have failed of her main purpose in attacking Austria.

Italy's anomalous position in the quadruple Entente is the subject of much constrained comment here. It is pointed out that she could not even sink a German submarine if one was encountered in the Adriatic, as she has not declared war against Germany.

The opinion in France that the continuance of such a state of affairs is inconceivable, as the plainest situation of the war is that Germany and Austria are one, with the Kaiser as the supreme head.

While this is Italy's position regarding Germany, there is the unequally anomalous situation with respect to Turkey and Bulgaria. She actually declared war against Turkey without striking a blow and took common action with France, England and Russia, severing diplomatic relations with Bulgaria.

London Papers Denounce Lord Northcliff's Attacks

London.—The whole press of England represented by the great London newspapers, such as the Daily Telegraph, the Daily Chronicle and the Daily News, insist that if France and England have to land a force of half a million at Salonica, Serbia must be saved.

The gravity of the situation, with the Austro-Germans already in possession of Belgrade and their monster guns scattering death and destruction among King Peter's army and people is recognized, and it is, no doubt, because the situation is so black in the Near East that many of the responsible newspapers of Great Britain are joining in the demand that Lord Northcliffe's firebrand campaign, designed to oust Sir Edward Grey and upset the government, must be crushed by the powers that be.

After recalling the Daily Mail's slanders against the Ambassador and the staff of the British Embassy at Constantinople, including the downright lie that neither the Ambassador nor the members of the staff understood the Turkish language or the Turkish people, the Daily News calls for action, adding: "The fall of Sir Edward Grey would be more disastrous to the British nation than a great defeat in battle," and ends its article by insisting that the criminal attempts by Lord Northcliffe to make any government impossible unless it is one which will take orders from his disordered mind be immediately suppressed.

Mr. Asquith, the Premier, or Sir Edward Grey is expected to make a comprehensive statement of the Balkan situation in the House of Commons today, and if the threat of the Northcliffe press that the Foreign Secretary will be attacked on the floor of the House is confirmed the malicious and unpatriotic motives which have inspired the Northcliffe campaign against Lord Kitchener, Sir Edward Grey and Mr. Asquith will be exposed.

British Stop German Rush 40 Yards From Objective

London.—A furious German attack against the recently occupied British positions north of Loos was repulsed with great losses, and further efforts by the Kaiser's forces to regain the now famous Hohenzollern redoubt met the same fate, according to a message from Sir John French, British commander in chief, madep ublic last night.

Yesterday afternoon fights in the air took place, in nine of which our airmen were successful. One hostile aeroplane was driven to the ground inside the enemy's lines and was almost certainly destroyed. This morning another enemy machine was brought down in our lines. We lost one aeroplane.

The Corps of the Guard, Germany's most noted militry organization, was recalled from the Russian front to take part in the fighting in Champagne, according to a review of the events of last week made public yesterday afternoon by the War Office. This summary of the operations declares the French offensive, with the subsequent loss to the Germans of men and territory, has seriously affected the morale of the Kaiser's troops.

The taking of 25,000 German prisoners and the capturing of 246 pieces of abandoned artillery indicate, furthermore, the extent of the German disorder and are proof of the superiority in these operations of the troops of the Allies over the enemy.

JOHN PERCHWAY FOUND DEAD IN BED BY HIS MOTHER

News of the sudden death of John Perchway, manager of the M. J. McDonald New York Shop, reached the business men of the street as they appeared at store and office this morning, bringing to them one of the greatest surprises of recent months. While it has been generally known for several weeks that Mr. Perchway's health was not good, he having been absent from business for several days of last week, it was not thought that his condition remained of a serious nature.

Mr. Perchway was in his twenty-fourth year and a son of Mr. and Mrs. John Perchway of 261 North 5th st., with whom he lived. He spent yesterday at the McDonald store and complained frequently of feeling unwell. He completed the tasks of the day, returned to his home for dinner, but his condition did not improve and Dr. Cusack was called and treatment given. About 6:30 this morning the young man's mother went to his bedroom to arouse him, but life had left the son's body which was still warm, leaving open for the belief that death came only a short time before the mother's visit to the room.

Mr. Perchway's life has been spent in Fulton where he held the esteem and confidence of everybody with whom he came into contact. Each one of his former employers has nothing but the warmest words of praise for the young man. His first position in the world of business was as errand boy at the Waldhorn Fair store. This position Mr. Perchway occupied immediately after leaving the Fulton public schools. His late position with the O. Henderson company, in Oneida st., surrounded him with hosts of friends. There his personality attracted a large clientle. Prior to entering the employ of the Henderson company, Mr. Perchway acquitted himself in the employ of J. C. O'Brien and M. Kain & company. Very early in the present year he was engaged by the M. J. McDonald company of Oswego and New York as manager of the local store belonging to that firm and he remained in that position until the time of his death. His most recent employer, Mr. McDonald, has nothing but the most glowing words to bestow on the young man, whom he found ever willing, honest, pleasing alike to fellow employe and the public at large.

Mr. Perchway was a lifelong member of the Church of the Immaculate Conception and a singer of some ability in the choir of that church. In fraternal circles he was a member of the Order of Elks and the Knights of Columbus.

Surviving him are his mother, father, two brothers, Ovid A. and Mahlon; two sisters, Mrs. Josie Ingersoll and Mrs. Rosa LaBeef.

At the hour of going to press no definite funeral arrangements had been made.

New York.—"Yes, I shall vote for woman suffrage," said Governor Whitman as he started for Gettysburg yesterday. "I have personally favored woman's suffrage for a long time."

Opinions

Union Veterans in Congress.

The passing of the years is brought forcibly to mind by the announcement in the news that the G. A. R. is represented in Congress today by eight men who wore the blue during the civil war—five senators and three members of the House—the senators being du Pont, Nelson, Goff, Warren and Works, and the members of the House being Ebenezer J. Hill, Isaac R. Sherwood and D. A. Hollingsworth.

It was not many sessions ago that Union veterans were numerous in Congress. Many men were helped into Congress by their war record, and such a record was a valuable political asset. The soldier vote was a dominating factor in some districts and a potent factor in many. Yet at the season of the fiftieth anniversary encampment of the Grand Army the number of members of Congress who saw service in the Union armies in the civil war has fallen to eight.—Washington Star.

Shiftless Cause Loss

The postmaster at Chicago is responsible for the statement that 43 per cent. of all the mail handled in that office is improperly addressed, and that the work of finding out the correct addresses and making the necessary changes costs the government $85,000 a month, or $1,000,000 a year. It is a staggering statement, but it is not probable that the postmaster would have made it had he not been prepared to back up his assertions with the proof of their accuracy.

Chicago may be more illiterate than other cities of the country, and the average taken the country over may not be as high as this. On the other hand, it may even be higher. Whatever it is, the fact stands out very clearly that a vast sum of money is spent every year by the Postoffice Department in correcting addresses for careless or ignorant people, or in completing the careless and shiftless work of thousands of people who give no sort of attention to the manner in which they address a piece of mail.

Here is a new channel in which the conservationists might work. A mint full of money might be saved each year, and centuries of time might be conserved if we could only teach each other not to be careless about writing addresses on mail or in signing letters. It is a deplorable waste and the government would be justified in entering upon a crusade with the object in view to bring about a better condition in the address upon letters.—Utica Observer.

Returning Sanity in Wall Street

During the last two business days there has been in Wall Street comparative dullness in over-exploited stocks of manufacturing companies vaguely reported to be making enormous profits on "war contracts" and increased activity and strength of the sounder "industrials" and dividend-paying railway shares.

This is evidence of returning sanity in Wall Street—which means that portion of the public which buys or sells securities. The cold duche administered in the form of last week's crash in "war stocks" has lowered the feverish temperature of the patient and a return to normal state of health may now be hoped for.

All the basic elements of general prosperity and of improvement in the value of good securities are present and investors who feared to buy while speculators were being driven insane by manipulated movements in "war stocks" may now be expected to buy sound securities.—N. Y. Herald.

BUILDING AND LOAN SOCIETIES

"Thrift," said Mr. Ben Johnson," is better than an annuity. "But in order to become thrifty there must be extended proper management. Various ways are suggested by our bankers, yet in spite of the facilities afforded the people of Fulton to save money, too many dollars earned in this city are taken elsewhere to be invested in the stocks of building and loan associations whose officials have no interest in common with the upbuilding of this community. There is nothing new in the building and loan association idea in itself; the theory is as old as the hills.

In many instances it may be found cheaper in some localities to rent a house than it is to own one, but nevertheless, there is a feature in favor of buying a home through the agency of a building and loan association that places the idea above other methods, which in substance is as follows:

The experience of wise observers is that a young man and a wife who are starting out to make their way in the world are unwise to pay rent. As soon as they can get $200 or $300 together with which to make a first payment, they ought to buy a home. The young people may know all about this, but very many of their friends do not know what steps they should take to secure homes, and at this point membership in a building and loan association becomes useful. The association steps in to advise and caution the buyer against an imprudent purchase. He may be told by the officers of the association that he ought to buy a home because city property is almost always a good investment; because it is cheaper to own a home than to pay rent. Then there comes a bigger and better proposition—the sense of proprietorship which a home gives adds to the happiness of life.

Inquiry reveals the fact that Fulton, with its diversified opportunities, is not in a true sense a city of homes. There are too many families who have spent several times the money for rent that a home would have cost them. A town full of home owners is worth twice as much as a town full of home renters.

Another point for the building and loan association is that it says to the young man, Buy a home; earn the landlord's profit for yourself. Once you get into a home you will find it as easy to pay for it as to pay rent. Help the man or men who want to start in Fulton a building and loan association. It will be to your interest to do so, and besides, nothing could be more conducive to a healthy growth of yourself and your town than a society of this kind founded upon mutual lines.

OPPORTUNITY

Opportunity does not "knock." Opportunity is not a "knocker." They have ever removed the old-time knocker from the front door. You push now to get in.

Opportunity is but a date on the calendar to tell you when to wake up.

Opportunity is not made by time nor molded by place. Opportunity is created by man.

The same time and the same place that spells success for you may mean failure for the other fellow.

"Opportunities!" thundered Alexander. "Why, I make opportunities."

Did the world hand Lincoln an opportunity? Did time or place make the man?

Presidents' chairs are occupied by brakemen; American colleges are crowded with waiters; our factories are filled with the princes and princesses of America.

The hour-hand in American history points to working time. Most of us have been "knocking off" early—living in hopes of having a more favorable opportunity to accomplish something big.

Opportunity! Why, man alive, you will find on the flag of this country forty-eight stars, and every one of them signifies an opportunity.—Silent Partner Magazine.

Dressing Up as a Program

Leslie's Weekly seizes upon the inauguration of a dress-up campaign in this city as the text for a little sermon on the importance of dress-up campaign in many different directions. It says, among other things: "We need to dress up in our Federal government. We have too many demagogues taking the places of statesmen and making a pitiful exhibition of legislative incapacity. We need to dress up our crippled railroads. How shall they dress up when their affairs are regulated by inexperienced public officials responsible to no one but themselves?" This is carrying a modest suggestion considerably further than its authors probably ever dreamed of carrying it, but we have the satisfaction of knowing that the suggestion originated in Rochester, and there is no objection to other communities extending it to meet their needs or the needs of the country at large. Rochester is the logical starting point for the dress-up idea, too, for it is always among the best dressed of American cities.—Rochester Chronicle Democrat.

Which Votes—Population or Territory?

By CARRIE CHAPMAN CATT

A SUFFRAGE slogan much used has been: "Women vote in nearly half the territory of the United States. Why not in New York?" Our opponents make the reply, "Population votes, not territory."

Which is right?

Take the eleven states Wyoming, Colorado, Utah, Idaho, Washington, California, Oregon, Arizona, Kansas, Nebraska, Montana. These are complete woman suffrage states, where women vote in every election in which men are entitled to vote. Add the state of Illinois, where women may vote for president, for all municipal officers and for many state officers, but not for all. The population of these twelve states in 1910 was 13,828,060. Each one of these states has two senators, twenty-four votes in all in the United States senate. Now take twelve other states—Maine, Vermont, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Ohio, Indiana, Michigan. The population is 36,146,743. Men only vote in these states. They have the same number of senators as the suffrage states. In other words, 36,146,743 of population cast twenty-four votes in the United States senate in these eastern states, whereas 13,828,060 in the western states cast an equal number of votes.

Is this population or territory voting? Little Nevada has only 81,875 people, but it has as many votes in the United States senate as New York with its 9,113,614. Which votes—territory or population?

What does the United States senate vote about? The president, with the consent and approval of the senate, has complete control over all diplomatic relations with foreign countries. The senate ratifies every treaty with a foreign government. It ratifies appointments of all ambassadors, consuls and special emissaries to foreign countries. It ratifies the appointment of the judges of the supreme court and other high officials. No treaty can be ratified without the consent of two-thirds majority of the senate. The senate consists of ninety-six senators. In the sixty-four votes which constitute a two-thirds majority twenty-four votes cast by the western senators, who are elected by the votes of men and women jointly, is decidedly a controlling number. So it happens that half the territory of the United States, with its 13,000,000 of population, has precisely the same influence over our foreign policies as is exercised by the 36,000,000 of people in the east.

The population of the western states is increasing enormously. The population per square mile has about doubled itself between the years 1890 and 1912 in five states where women vote—Oregon, Montana, Colorado, Arizona and Nevada. It increased threefold in Wyoming and more than threefold in Washington and Idaho in the same period. Within ten years Washington and Idaho increased their populations 120.4 per cent and 101.3 per cent respectively, whereas the population of Iowa at the same time has decreased 3 per cent. For every couple, man and woman, in this rapidly filling western territory there are now two votes. For every couple, man and woman, in the unenfranchised East there is but one.

In the presidential election of 1916, instead of a voting strength of less than 5,000,000, equal suffrage states will produce an electorate of 8,354,956. This is more than four times the present voting strength of all New England taken together. It is more than one and a half the total electorate of the thirteen states in the solid south. The suffrage presidential electorate in woman suffrage territory is stronger by 1,412,760 than that of the four suffrage campaign states, Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania and New Jersey.

A hundred years ago a doubting world sneered at manhood suffrage in the young American republic because its population was small, but those who had the vision to see knew that manhood suffrage had come to stay; that population would grow and the republic become a power among the nations of earth. So those who have eyes to see know that woman suffrage has come to stay and will sweep over the United States; realizing soon the boasted claim that ours is a government of the PEOPLE.

Area does vote, and the population is coming.

MISS WILSON APPROVES OF COMMUNITY CENTERS

Buffalo.—Miss Margaret Wilson arrived here today for her concert tonight. When Miss Wilson was told that it had been rumored that Mrs. Galt would come with her to Buffalo, she responded:

"Oh, I wish that she could have come. Mrs. Galt is not only a most charming and delightful woman and a dear, dear friend, but she is also a great sympathetic soul, interested in every big worth-while enterprise which, like the community center movement, means the advancement of the common welfare in America. She is a splendid woman and I am very happy about it."

Miss Wilson asked about the most recent development of the community center idea in Buffalo and then expressed her understanding of the Buffalo situation in these words:

"I have learned with the greatest pleasure of the beginning that has been made of the use of the schoolhouses as community centers in this city, of the fact that the beautiful new Hutchinson and the South Side schools have been constructed with a view to serving as great splendid club houses, and I have heard of the use that is made of some of the buildings as branch libraries, and I have rejoiced in the musical evenings that have been enjoyed and that are to be enjoyed the coming season in these centers where everybody feels at home. But, now Buffalo has adopted a new charter; the city has given up the old common council of aldermen in the city hall; don't you think that it would be a good time to begin the common council of citizens in the school houses? And, now that the city has been awakened to its moral conditions, is it not the time to make a constructive answer to the problem of leisure activity by opening all of the school houses of Buffalo as centers of organized and wholesome recreation for all the people?"

WARN CITIES OF TYPHOID SEASON

Declared 200,000 Will Be Stricken With Disease.

FLOURISHES IN THE AUTUMN

[illegible] That Death Toll Will Reach [illegible]—Fifty Per Cent of Victims Will Be Between Ages of Fifteen and Thirty-five Years—Cleanliness Urged as a Preventive.

Washington.—During the year probably 200,000 people in the United States will contract typhoid fever, says a statement issued by the public health service. The average period of invalidism will be more than a month for every case, so that the economic loss, even if recovery does ensue, can be reckoned upon this basis, including the care and attention required.

Of those who contract the disease probably 18,000 will die.

Fifty per cent of these will be between the ages of fifteen and thirty-five years, the very time of life when the loss is most frightful. Moreover, this is an annual toll and represents the minimum fatality which we have attained.

No sooner is the computation of the 18,000 completed than another series is begun, and so on interminably. True, there is some diminution in the total number, the death rate since 1900 having been diminished by half, while most of our cities show a progressive reduction, but it still remains much higher than that of countries which we are apt to consider less civilized than our own.

Another typhoid season is again at hand. The weather, presence of flies, contamination of food products and the increased liability of infection through changes of residence make it once more necessary for health bodies to sound a warning note. This is becoming an annual custom, but the health officer should not modify his tones on that account. He is indeed a prophet, and the voice of the prophet should be heard.

Typhoid fever is a disease of filths. It can only be contracted by taking into the system the waste products of one previously ill of the disease. These waste products are conveyed from one individual to another usually by means of a third object, such as water, flies or milk.

Even if disease itself were never contracted in this manner we should revolt with abhorrence at the idea of such uncleanliness. For every case of the infection developing some one, either the municipality or the individual, has been careless, and public opinion will soon regard such carelessness as criminal.

For thirty years the causative organism has been known and studied. For nearly twenty years science has been in possession of most delicate blood tests for the recognition of the disease. Knowledge of the dissemination of the disease is consequently exact and definite.

Not content with accomplishments along these lines, the medical profession has even devised methods by which the public may live under insanitary conditions with perfect impunity, so far as this particular disease is concerned. Persons may take into their systems the filth which produces disease and death and yet remain free from harmful effects if the preventive treatment has been received.

In spite of these efforts the frightful mortality continues. A large proportion of the population is ignoring the principles which have been so well established. Further steps toward the prevention of typhoid must be the result of more general enlightenment of the mass of the people.

The avoidance of the infection rests primarily upon community action. The proper protection of water supplies, the eradication of filth and all its accompaniments, the regulation of dairies and the safeguarding of milk are all problems which only communities as a whole can settle. Nevertheless this does not absolve the individual citizen from responsibility, and he can do much for his own protection.

The eradication of filth is in part the duty of every citizen, and each should see that his own surroundings are in a satisfactory condition. He should guard against carelessness in the maintenance and preparation of food and withhold his patronage from those who disregard the rules of cleanliness, remembering that the foods which are most subject to contamination are milk and its products, oysters and vegetables.

TWO TEETH, $7.50 PER.

Judge Fines Man For Knocking Them Out.

Salina, Kan. — According to Judge Dan R. Wagstaff of the Salina police court, a tooth is worth $7.50 in a woman's head, and any one who dislodges one of them must pay that amount.

Anna Conrad caused the arrest of James Barnes on a charge of assault, and when she showed the judge the vacant space in her teeth where two had been removed the judge forthwith assessed a fine of $15 against Barnes, $7.50 per tooth.

Anna objected to playing the part of Fantine unless she received the money, but the judge ordered that the $15 go into the city treasury.

NEW USE FOR MOTORCAR.

Fitted Up as Bathrooms For the European Soldiers at the Front.

War has shown a number of uses for the motor vehicle little dreamed of in times of peace. The latest development in connection with mechanical transport as a motor bathroom built for the St. John Ambulance association of London. Large canvases to form two tent bathrooms are rolled up under shelves on each side of the body and tent poles and other accessories are carried on the roof. The size of these bathrooms is about 8 by 10 feet, and there are six baths each.

In the car are two circulating boilers, which supply hot water at about two gallons a minute to taps from which the water is taken to the baths by means of a hose pipe. The boilers are heated by paraffin vapor supplied under pressure, and the paraffin is stored in a fifty gallon tank, which can be refilled by means of a hand pump and hose. Inside the car are store cupboards and shelves, with a large fumigating cupboard capable of holding twenty suits of clothes. The latter are cleaned and disinfected by vapor rising from a tank containing water and chemicals.

The motor bathrooms can be carried on any twenty to thirty horsepower chassis and not a very long wheel base is required.

"Breddren, de time am heah fo' de selection ob yo' pastoh for anudder yeah. All dose favorin' me fo' yo' pastoh will please say 'Aye.'"

The old preacher had made himself rather unpopular and there was no response.

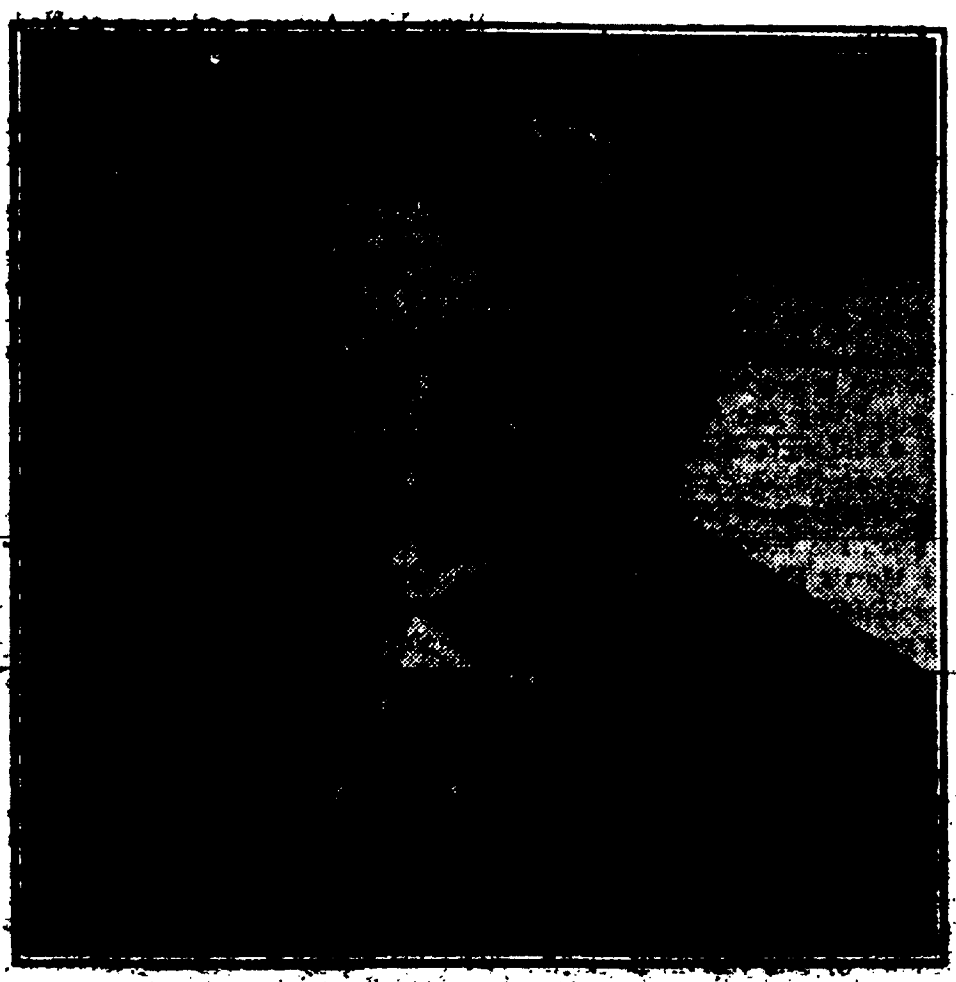
CUTHBERT W. POUND,

Associate Judge of the Court of Appeals



JUDGE CUTHBERT W. POUND.

WITH the opening of the October term of the court of appeals Justice Cuthbert W. Pound of Lockport took his seat in that body, having been designated by Governor Whitman as an associate judge of the court, to succeed Judge Nathan L. Miller, who retired during the summer.

Judge Pound's designation is a striking example of wise selection. Many years' experience as practitioner, teacher and judge have made him learned in the law and its practice. In literature, economics and history his scholarship is broad and profound.

Judge Pound received his schooling at the Lockport Union school and at Cornell university. In 1886 he was admitted to the New York state bar, and from 1888 to 1895 he practiced law with his brother under the firm name of John E. & Cuthbert W. Pound. During that time he served three years as city attorney of Lockport. During the years 1894 and 1895 he was a member of the New York state senate, representing the Twenty-ninth district, which comprised the counties of Niagara, Orleans, Genessee, Wyoming and Livingston. From 1895 to 1904 he was a professor of law in Cornell university and while there made a name for himself as an authority on constitutional and statute law.

In 1900, while a member of the law faculty at Cornell, Judge Pound was appointed to the New York state civil service commission by Governor Roosevelt. He was reappointed by Governor Odell and served as president of the commission from 1903 to 1905, when he resigned to become counsel to Governor Frank W. Higgins. In 1906 he was appointed a justice of the supreme court in the Eighth judicial district to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Justice Henry A. Childs. In the fall of that year he was nominated by the Republican, Democratic and Independence League parties and was elected to the supreme court for a full term of fourteen years.

In addition to his scholarship and learning in the law, there are in the makeup of Judge Pound a broad humanness, a keen understanding of things as they are and a delicious sense of humor. These qualities and attainments bring him close to the ideal of a judge of our court of last resort. Judge Pound is just past fifty and is of an age and physical vigor which indicate full maturity, while promising many years of good work to come.

LUMBER FROM WEST VIA BARGE CANAL.

The utilization of the barge canal to bring lumber from the vast forests of the Pacific coast to the chain of industrial and commercial centers across the state of New York is destined to take place within the next two or three years, according to Professor Nelson C. Brown of the forestry school of Syracuse university.

"The forests in New York from which wood pulp paper is made will soon be exhausted. Within two or three years we will be totally dependent on the west for our wood pulp supply." This observation was made upon his return from the west, having just completed a journey of over 12,000 miles. Linking the barge canal with the movement of western lumber, he said:

"There are vast forests on the Pacific coast. Three brothers who live in Cloquet, Minn., own two of these and are fully awake to their possibilities for the manufacture of paper.

"These men are interested in the opening of the barge canal. When it is completed they will be able to ship lumber directly to Syracuse and other points in New York state by water through the Pacific, the Panama canal, up the Atlantic coast to New York, then up the Hudson and the barge canal to its destination.

"The all water route from the Pacific coast, with the short cut through the Panama canal, and then the barge canal traversing the entire state of New York will lower the freight rates and result in the bringing of vast quantities of western lumber here to Syracuse and to other parts of the state."

Professor Brown's tour was made as a representative of the College of Forestry.

WILL ENABLE STATE TO COMPLETE CANAL.

If I vote "Yes" on the canal referendum and it should be approved, what will be the result?

(a) The state will issue its bonds and raise the necessary money to complete the construction work and to meet all the obligations of the state which have arisen from land damages, riparian rights, railroad bridges and other extraordinary expenses unforeseen at the time the original estimates were made in 1903.

(b) The construction work yet to be done on the barge canal will be proceeded with, and the improvement will be completed and opened to commerce within two years.

(c) The payments will be spread over a long period up to fifty years, and the state and all property within it will be receiving the great benefits from the canal and will therefore be better able to meet the payments before they fall due during the fifty years to come.

About time to spring a list of "favorite sons" for 1916 so that they can retire to the woods while their prospects and merits are in the public eye.

ENVIRONMENT.

We are raised or lowered by our associations. Manners, temper, intellect and morals are all influenced by our surroundings, and those who choose friends of an inferior taste, whether of mind, manners or morals, fall to the level of their choice.

AN OLD BOXWOOD BORDER

There Are Some Survivals of Beautiful Garden Ornaments Still to Be Found.

Time was when the boxwood border was considered the very top notch of frontyard garden ornamentation. And it was thought to be very beautiful when trimmed into fantastic shapes or clipped evenly in rectangular outline. Take almost any of the old time novels, and in them will appear a description of the boxwood borders running a perfectly straight line from the colonial porch to the front gate. Boxwood hall was a favorite name for many an old time home.

The privet hedge has largely usurped the place of the boxwood border, says the Newark (N. J.) News. The latter was such a slow grower. Years after it was set it seemed hardly larger than when first planted. But it didn't send out impudent shoots in every direction; it grew slowly, sedately and in deliberately chosen directions. It was never in a hurry to be big. Boys may cut whips from an untrimmed privet hedge, but no one ever took such liberties with the dignified old boxwood bush. It did not promote corporal punishment.

There were two things about the boxwood border that none who are acquainted with it will ever forget; its dark green foliage, winter and summer, and its persistently unpleasant odor. The latter isn't like that of birch, sassafras, sandalwood, willow, butternut or cedar. It is more like that of the simplocarpus fetidus—the skunk cabbage. But the box bush stands up as stiff and dignified as if it were disseminating the perfumes of Araby the blest.

Now and then some very fine specimens of boxwood are found in this country, and wherever they are they point out a place having a history running back a century or two. These bushes have not been clipped or otherwise mutilated since our grandfathers' days, and have grown into great trees—that is, great for boxwood. Just such a bush was recently sighted near Mount Holly by a Long Island millionaire, and he paid a small fortune to have it removed to his estate. It was 12 feet high, more than 15 feet in diameter and, with a great clump of clay attached to its ramified roots, weighed ten tons. It may live in its new home, but as a rule, these grand old box bushes resent removals after they are a hundred years old.

A fine group of box bushes adorns the old Elias Boudinot mansion on East Jersey street, Elizabeth, where both Washington and Lafayette were entertained in the old days. Four large bushes are still flourishing on the Stoudinger property, 353 Broad street, corner of Clay, in Newark. The house was built in 1832, and the box must have been planted later, but each of the four specimens is at least ten feet high and as many in diameter. Large sums have been offered for them time and again, but have been refused. Doubtless there are many other fine specimens of the old-time favorite box, but a large and shapely tree is still a valuable and cherished heritage.

Tricks of the Law.

Judge Audenreid of Philadelphia has reversed an award of $5,500 to Edward B. Stocker, who was struck by a freight car, crushing his leg so badly it had to be amputated.

Stocker's mistake, the judge asserted, was in filing his suit under the federal liability law. It was not proved, the court says, that either the engine or the freight car that hit him was engaged in interstate commerce; therefore the claim should have been filed under the laws of Pennsylvania.

NOTES OF LABOR.

Machinists of Yonkers, N. Y., demand 40 cents an hour and an eight hour day.

The United Textile Workers of America will convene at New York city on Oct. 18.

The annual convention of the American Federation of Labor will meet at San Francisco Nov. 8.

James P. Holland of the Stationary Firemen's union is the new president of the New York State Federation of Labor.

Bridgeport (Conn.) street cleaners have made application to the American Federation of Labor organizers to be organized and taken into the federation.

BOARDS OF TRADE BACK CANAL PLAN

Party Lines Set Aside in Urging Approval of Canal Referendum.

The state committee on canal referendum, directing the campaign to secure the approval of the electors of the state at the coming election of the barge canal referendum bill authorizing the issue of $27,000,000 for the completion of the barge canals and the payment of all costs involved, was formed as the result of a conference in New York city on June 23 last, called by the chamber of commerce of the state of New York.

The men who attended this conference and formed the state committee on canal referendum comprise the leaders of commercial, industrial, mercantile, financial, educational, professional and other activities of the state irrespective of political affiliations.

Seth Low, former president of Columbia university, former mayor of New York and president of the New York chamber of commerce, is chairman of the state committee on canal referendum.

Eugenius H. Outerbridge of the New York chamber of commerce is treasurer. Welding Ring of the New York chamber of commerce, large merchandise exporter, is chairman of the executive committee.

Frank S. Gardiner of the New York board of trade and transportation is the secretary of the state committee. Frank Brainard, also of the New York board of trade and transportation is chairman of the state committee's finance committee.

The chairman of the subexecutive committee, directly in touch with the working out of the state wide campaign, is R. A. C. Smith, commissioner of docks of New York city.

Dr. Jacob Gould Schurman, president of Cornell university, is one of the members of the state committee. Other prominent members include: A. Barton Hepburn, Samuel W. Fairchild and Isaac N. Seligman of the New York chamber of commerce; James Ward Warner, E. R. Carhart, W. H. Douglas, John P. Truesdell and Albert Kinkel of the New York Produce Exchange; William H. Gibson, New York board of trade and transportation; William Fellowes Morgan, Herman A. Metz and others of the New York Merchants' association; President Herbert A. Meldrum, Henry W. Hill, C. Lee Abell and Howard J. Smith of the Buffalo chamber of commerce; George Clinton, Sr., chairman of the executive committee of the New York State W[illegible] association; General Franc[illegible] Frank B. Baird and W[illegible] ers, representing powe[illegible] and extensive industrial in[illegible] falo; George W. Todd of the Rochester chamber of commerce; also James T. Hutchings and Roland B. Woodward, of the same organization, and Frank S. Elsworth of Rochester.

The Syracuse chamber of commerce is represented on the committee by J. B. Clancy, A. W. Hudson, Henry C. Allen and Lachlan Macleay.

John D. Kernan and F. H. Hazard represent the Utica chamber of commerce; Edward N. McKinney and Jacob Y. Read, the Albany chamber of commerce; F. B. Shepard and P. W. Cullinan, the Oswego chamber of commerce; Frank L. Moore, C. C. Burns and George H. Cobb, the Watertown chamber of commerce.

These men are united in the conviction that the canal must be completed without further delay; that the remaining costs for the canal work should be raised by bond issue, spreading the cost over a period of fifty years rather than have the costs become a matter to be raised in a single season by direct taxation.

Punishment in Persia.

Among the Persians the usual mode of punishment is the bastinado, from which men of the highest rank are not exempt. It is inflicted with very great severity, frequently so as to render the sufferer almost a cripple for life. The victim is thrown upon his face, and each foot is passed through a loop of strong cord attached to a pole, which is raised horizontally by men, who, twisting it around, tighten the ropes and render the feet immovable. Two executioners then strike the soles alternately with switches of the pomegranate tree well steeped in water to render them supple. The punishment frequently lasts for an hour or until the unfortunate victim faints from pain.

Women Should Never be Careless

Careless, equivocating and procrastinating women as well as men are never easy in mind or appear at their best.

You know women who put off everything, including the purchase of proper raiment, and appear badly handicapped. Some of them dread the selection and fitting of clothing, which is all wrong, for Shanahan's, 323 So. Salina St., Syracuse, N. Y., will relieve them of embarrassment, make a great change for the better in their appearance, and make them feel that life is worth living.

Shanahan's immense stock of women's outer garments is unequaled in Syracuse—in style, fashionable materials and colors, and every purchaser makes a substantial saving.

Shanahan's are also showing a big, select line of furs, purchased last spring, when they were the lowest in twenty years, and you are invited to come and share in the big saving. Adv [illegible]

MORRIS PLAN CO. MAY COME

Syracuse Men Plan to Organize Co-operative Society Which Would Work in Conjunction With B. & L. Society.

The hope is felt in Syracuse among persons interested in the good things of a community that a Morris Plan company may be formed there. At any rate at a dinner to be given at the Century Club tomorrow evening the matter of organizing an association will be discussed. Several of the most prominent men of the city will be present.

It is likely that with the organization of a Morris Plan company in Syracuse added encouragement may be extended a number of Fulton men to form a branch of the plan in this city. The idea has been discussed by men who would have Fulton on the map with other cities in respect to savings institutions, although the plan may be modified or worked in combination with a building and loan association, which would were the plans on foot to be adopted provide for this city a strong combination of forces.

In brief, the Morris Plan is this:

The Morris Plan has for its object the two-fold purpose of lending money to persons of moderate means at reasonable rates of interest and of providing a safe and sound investment for small funds.

The success of the plan is attested by its rapid growth. It is now operating in twenty-seven cities and companies are being organized in five others.

The companies operating prior to September of this year in the aggregate have employed approximately $2,500,000 of capital and have made more than $10,000,000 of loans to about 83,000 borrowers. The Morris Plan is a banking system operated under the banking laws of the state and lends money on no other tangible security than the note of the borrower indorsed by two others who may be working men like himself.

Loans are made on the basis of the character of the applicant and his indorsers with due consideration to the character of each. The rate of interest on loans is 6 per cent., with an additional fee for investigation at a rate of $1 for each $50 borrowed, but no charge exceeds $5.

Details of the plan to be presented to Syracuse people will be made known tomorrow night by Clarence E. West. The call for the meeting is signed by Alfred W. Hudson, president of the First National Bank; Arthur W. Loasby, president of the Trust and Deposit company of Onondaga; Thomas W. Meacham, president of the New Process Gear Corporation, and C. Hamilton Sanford, president of the National Bank of Syracuse.

BROTHERHOOD CLASSES HAD A BULLY GOOD TIME

There is some disappointment today in the ranks of the Brotherhood classes of the First and State Street M. E. churches. It does not exist in the minds and hearts of the men who went to Minetto last night, but it does lie with those who were not numbered among the 65 members of the two classes who went by trolley and auto to enjoy the lavish hospitality of the Brotherhood class belonging to the Rev. Mr. Sheffield's Methodist church at that place. The Minetto pastor was toastmaster at the dinner table, and the Rev. Mr. Barrett, the Rev. Mr. Miller, Edward Joslin, George Carner and Judge Wilson responded to the toasts. The Brotherhood members who made the trip are loud in their congratulations of the way they were treated by the Minetto brothren.

DR. KEENEY MAY BE NAMED BISHOP NEXT SPRING

During the closing hours of the sessions of the Central New York Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church at Ithaca it was generally understood that the Rev. Dr. F. T. Keeney, pastor of the First M. E. church of Syracuse, is slated for election to the House of Bishops at the Central Conference to be held at Saratoga Springs next May.

No resolutions or recommendations to this effect were passed at the Ithaca conference, but it is commonly known among the clergymen that Dr. Keeney will be a candidate for the bishopric. It is further said that he has the moral support of the Central New York ministers.

Dr. Keeney has been pastor of the First M. E. church in Syracuse since 1904, when he succeeded the late Rev. Dr. C. N. Sims, builder of the present church and former chancellor of Syracuse University. Doctor Keeney has been preaching thirty years. His pastorates, before he came to Syracuse were at Cincinatus, Tully, Cazenovia, Penn Yan, Auburn and twice at Hedding church, Elmira.

COLUMBUS DAY EXERCISES NOT TO BE POSTPONED

The Knights of Columbus will meet this evening at 8:15 and with a literary and musical program will quietly observe the day.

On account of the special arrangements made and also owing to the fact that the affair is participated in by members of the L. C. B. A. and the R. C. B. A., a postponement at so late an hour did not seem possible.

At a late hour today a decision was reached to hold the entertainment in the basement of the Church of the Immaculate Conception.

FARMERS BUYING DIAMONDS NOW

Going to Wendell's? That was the question asked by the persons who met on trolley cars, last Saturday, when all were bound for Oswego. Nearly everybody knew of the Wendell auction sale, principally of diamonds; and nearly everybody had in mind that one dollar spent now for diamonds goes much farther than five dollars later, or at the Christmas time. The logical result was that farmers young and farmers old, their wives and their sweethearts, all wanted to seize the opportunity of a lifetime to buy diamonds under favorable conditions. But the Wendell auction sale of diamonds does not stop with the buying done by farmers of this vicinity, as the firm reports that trade is drawn from all over Oswego county; that the experience of people from here is repeated by people living elsewhere, and the result is always the same—$1 spent now goes farther than $5 spent at a later date. BRIDE ELECT'S DINNER PARTY

Mr. and Mrs. Paddock Gave Formal Dinner in Honor of Bridal Party---American Beauty Roses Used.

This evening at 8 o'clock at the home of her parents in S. 4th st., Miss Imogene Paddock will become the bride of Mr. Frank Clark Ash of Syracuse.

Last evening Mr. and Mrs. Paddock gave a formal dinner at their home to members of the bridal party. American Beauty roses decorated the dining-room and one of the blooms was placed at the place of each guest.

Seated with Mr. and Mrs. Paddock were, besides Miss Paddock and Mr. Ash, Miss Amie Staub, of Knoxville, Tenn., who will be the maid of honor; Miss Frances Charles of Evanston, Ill., and Miss Margherita Schneider of Freemont, Neb., who will be bridesmaids; Donald Capen, best man, and Fred A. Plumm and Frank Phelps, ushers. The dinner was served by Mrs. Fred Krebs, caterer, of Skaneateles.

Mrs. Paddock's gown was a lavender silk poplin dinner gown, Miss Paddock wore a gown of American beauty pan velvet with silver trimming. Miss Stahl wore a sequine robe of apricot color. Miss Charles and Miss Schneider wore gowns of black spangle and pan velvet in gold trimming.

Miss Paddock presented her attendants round gold pins surrounded by pearls, in white satin bags of the same material as the bridal gown. The tiny bars were found at the women's places at the table. At the men's places were buds for buttonhole bouquets and the gift of the bridegroom to his attendants, silver card cases.

GARDNER—BEEBE

A quiet wedding occurred Saturday afternoon last, when Mr. S. F. Gardner of Schnectady and Mrs. Cora H. Beebe of this city were married at the home of Mr. O. W. Beebe, 214 Oneida st. The Rev. Perry Wilcox officiated.

Mr. Gardner is well known in Schenectady, where he is a trusted employe of the American Locomotive Works, and Mrs. Beebe is prominent in the Women's Christian Temperance Union in this county. She is besides an authoress of reputation.

Mr. and Mrs. Gardner will be at home in Schenectady after Nov. 10.

WASHABLE GOODS LEAD THIS AUTUMN IN NEW YORK

New York.—Autumn weddings bring out every one's newest and smartest attire, and fashionable trousseaux embody the latest and most fetching sartorial ideas.

A new washable satin, which launders perfectly in the richest tints as well as in white, is being used for bridal sets, and handsome negligees. A lingerie set of six pieces, including a fascinating boudoir cap, is daintily trimmed with frills of silk lace, which have small rose buds appliqued at intervals. Narrow white ribbon ties are used on all the pieces.

Negligees and Tea-Gowns

Negligees and tea-gowns are an important part of the trousseax and comprise garments as varied in cut, material and use, as the practical corduroy bath gowns, and creations of chiffon, lace and satin, that are used informally for dinner and odd evenings at home. In fact, many of these gowns are more elaborate than the modish frocks especially designed for formal afternoon wear, and are apt to be many times more becoming. One of blue chiffon cloth has a long sacque like overpart of white net, embroidered with a wide border of silver lace, having pink Watteau roses appliqued at intervals. A narrow band of dark fur outlines the square neck, and the blue petticoat is finished with tucks. A pink gown of net over satin, the edges of the net draperies bound with heavy satin cords, is hard to distinguish from a regulation dancing frock except that it is much longer.

Silk and Organdie

Very dainty and attractive are some of the little indoor frocks in the combination of taffeta silk and organdie which is the last Parisian idea. Hems of the thin white cotton finish the bottom of the skirt and edge the draperies, and the waist is often of the organdie with panels and bretelle overlays of the silk. Such gowns are worn for bridge and other afternoon diversions and for informal dances.

Fashionable Sleeves.

Perhaps the most striking novelties one notes are in collar and sleeve designs. Long elbow cuffs on gauntlet lines are notable, and assume many forms. Overlapping cuffs of all widths are used while cuffs with fur edges or built all of fur, appear quite as frequently on garments of chiffon or crepe as on outer wraps of cloth or velvet.

Many of the smartest sleeves are in Bishop style, their thin fullness starting from a dropped shoulder cap, and at the wrist drawn in to a trim cuff of silk, satin or velvet, to harmonize with the dress material. Whatever flare the fashionable sleeve possesses is found usually at the elbow, while tight trimness at the wrist is an almost universal note.

Chin Chin Collars and Others.

No doubt the chin chin collar that muffles the throat quite to the extinction of the line below the chin, will be an overdone fad before the season ends, but it is new and smart now and has points that appeal to the older women as well as the up-to-date girl. Such collars give style to the long top-coats that are increasingly in demand when one-piece frocks are leaders as they are this year.

Lilly collars of chiffon and crepe that quite hide the ears in some instances, and may muffle the chin or be cut away in front, are a style point seen in the finishings of smart frocks and waists.

Newest Blouses.

Washable blouses of tinted mulles finished with dainty scallops of hand embroidery, are among the most desirable additions to the wardrobe, rivalling garments of chiffon and Georgette crepe in cost and elegance. Almost all the thinner waists come without linings and depend quite as much on the design and trimming of the brassiere worn beneath them, as did the summer bodices. Outer coats are so warmly lined and temperature indoors so universally high, that nearly all waists are designed more for ornament than protection. Where the demand is for something more practical, there are no end of smart models of plaid silks, and silk crepe that harmonize with coat and skirt suits. Also waists of chiffon cloth and silks in the wide "Awning" stripes styles so popular last season.

VERONA CLARKE.

Throwing Men Overboard.

In ancient Scotland the barbarous custom existed which cost Jonah so much inconvenience. When a ship became unmanageable it was usual to cast lots for the purpose of discovering who was responsible for the trouble, and the man upon whom the lot fell was condemned. SING SING RULE TO BE PROBED

Doings of Mutual Welfare and Law Violations to Be Taken Up—Big Witnesses

New York.—District Attorney Frederick E. Weeks, of Westchester Co., announces that the Grand Jury would begin early next week an investigation of alleged violations of the law in Sing Sing Prison charged against the rule of Warden Thomas Mott Osborne's Mutual Welfare League.

"Judge" William Willett, who only yesterday was transferred from Sing Sing to Comstock because of the murderous attack on him last week, will be one of the chief witnesses. Others will be W. J. Cummngs, convicted of falsifying the accounts of the old Carnegie Trust company, and "Curley" Joe Cassidy, former political boss of Queens.

Evidence to be Used.

Willett, as chief court officer of the Welfare League, kept a close track of conditions at Sing Sing and is said to have carried with him a satchel filled with notes and documents which will be available to the investigating authorities.

Powerful influences are declared to have been exercised to prevent an investigation at Sing Sing which will in any way compromise the Osborne administration. To prevent the success of such an undertaking documentary evidence directly relating to the felony charge against twenty-one men mentioned in the information to be given the Grand Jury is said to have been lost.

At the last meeting of the Prison Commission in Albany a week ago the majority of the body favored a thorough investigation of Sing Sing. A motion to that end was opposed by Richard Hurd unless it applied to all prisons within the state. Mr. Hurd is said to have announced to the other members of the commission his approval of the course followed by Warden Osborne. The result was a heated controversy, which ended with the appointment of Dr. Rudolph F. Diedling to make a personal investigation of Sing Sing.

Dr. Diedling went to the prison on Friday of last week and announced later that he had been treated with scant courtesy by Mr. Osborne. He was not permitted to examine convicts unless the Warden was present. Richard Hurd spent the greater part of yesterday in Sing Sing, and, it is said, was shown all through the prison. He remained as the guest of Mr. Osborne until late last night.

Dr. Diedling's Statement.

Dr. Diedling in a statement made public yesterday excoriated the "pernicious activity" of prison reform sosieties and their agents, whom he declared to be "veritable menaces to society."

A copy will be forwarded to Governor Whitman and to State Superintendent of Prisons John B. Riley.

Dr. Diedling's statement follows:

"Conditions in general in the prisons of this state have grown worse instead of better during my twenty-year acquaintance with them, and are even now deteriorating steadily.

"The fundamental cause of much of the trouble is an improper understanding of the true relationship that should exist between the criminal and organized society, between crime and its punishment.

"It is equally as certain that a large part of this misunderstanding is brought about by the pernicious activity of the so-called professional reformers, who, by some strange mental or moral perversion seem always to be arrayed on the side of the evildoer, and against the lawabiding citizen.

Not Sent to Play Banjos.

"No matter what prison reformers may think or say to the contrary, prisoners are not sent to prison to play banjos or guitars, nor to attend moving picture shows, or to give social functions, or to show their prowess on the athletic field, but to labor and obey in atonement for their crimes.

"They are inspired largely by vanity and self-seeking, and who as dearly love the applause of the lecture platform, the first place for their pictures on the front page of the morning newspapers, and the display of the high sounding titles with which they bedeck themselves, as their prototypes the scribes of old, did the salutations in the marketplace, the first seats at tables and the use of the purple and fine linen with which they adorned their corrupt bodies."

Inasmuch as Dr. Diedling is believed to refer particularly throughout his statement as to conditions at Sing Sing, Warden Osborne, who is visiting at Auburn, was asked if he had any reply to make.

His rejoiner was that Elihu Cunningham Church, his assistant, had already made sufficient answer, and that for himself he would not dignify Dr. Dielding's criticism by making a formal reply.

FIGHT FOR TIMBER LANDS BEGINS TODAY

Syracuse.—The $500,000 action of the Columbia Trust Company of New York against the Battle Island Paper Company will be called for trial in Chicoutimi, Canada, today.

The action is brought by the New York concern as representatives of the bondholders of the Battle Island Company and is opposed by the Canadian interests having claims against the company. The Columbia company is trying to gain possession of the Canadian timber holdings of the Battle Island Company, consisting of several thousand acres in the province of Quebec.

Several months ago the bondholders received an offer of about $300,000 for the land from Chicago interests, but the sale was blocked by the objections of the Canadian creditors, who filed liens against the property. Then the present action was brought. If the Columbia Company is successful it is highly probable that the land will be sold and the money apportioned among the bondholders.

About a year ago Judge Ray granted an order allowing the sale of the bonds at the rate of twenty-five cents on the dollar. The original holders of the bonds will be greatly benefited if the action in Canada results favorably to them.

Printer's Blunder Misled Authors.

A recent novel supplied a word perplexing to the lexicographer. The story was laid in the twelfth century, and in a description of a monastery there was frequent mention of a "contrabona," which readers presumed to be an unfamiliar feature of Romanesque architecture. It was eventually discovered that the author, in "reading up" his subject, had been misled by a description of certain towers, of which the "central one" was specified. The printer had omitted the space between the two words, and the novelist had rushed to [illegible] [illegible] by other [illegible] of [illegible].—London Observer.

LUCK

Is just another name for good, hard, persistent plugging. Luck is with the merchant who Advertises, not because he advertises, but because he keeps on advertising indefinitely --- Which Means Success.

YOUR SUCCESS

Means the success of your town. Now, honestly, are you doing what you can for your town? Are you "A Herald of Progress"? Do you realize that by doing what you can—which means as much or more than you are doing now, you will be helping yourself—Which Means Success.

If you cannot now be placed where you belong, it is time to right about face, read the words by Ella Wheeler Wilcox, and say to the publishers of your home newspapers—

"I'LL DO WHAT I CAN"

Who takes for his motto "I'll do what I can,"
Shall be better the world as he goes down life's hill;
The willing young heart makes the capable man
And who does what he can, oft can do what he will,
There's strength in the impulse to help things along,
And forces undreamed of will come to the aid
Of one who, tho' weak, yet believes he is strong,
And offers himself to the task unafraid.

"I'll do what I can" is a challenge to fate,
And fate must succumb when it's put to the test;
A heart that is willing to labor and wait.
In its tussle with life ever comes out the best;
It puts the blue imps of depression to route
And makes many difficult problems seem plain,
It mounts over obstacles, dissipates doubt,
And unravels kinks in life's curious chain.

"I'll do what I can" keeps the progress machine
In good working order as centuries roll;
And civilization would perish, I ween,
Were not those words written on many a soul,
They fell the great forests, they furrow the soil,
They seek new inventions to benefit man,
They fear no exertion, make pastime of toil—
Oh, great is earth's debt to "I'll do what I can."

How His Elimination Was Accomplished

By WILLARD BLAKEMAN

Away back in the fifties when the town of Deadshot began to think of taking on the hue of civilization the question was how to make a beginning. Men had gone elsewhere for wives, who had consented to marry them and go to Deadshot without being aware of what kind of place it was. Families had sprung up about these couples, and it is generally conceded that a place containing women and children requires different management from one in which there are only men and the only law is gun law. Nevertheless the shooting went on, and in time there were a number of women left widows and children made fatherless.

For some time there was talk of stopping the gun play, but nothing was done till three little children, whose mother had died a natural death, were deprived of their father by an unnatural one. This came home to the citizens of Deadshot, inasmuch as they felt obliged to provide for the children. The grumblings were loud and long, and the desire to stop the gun play received a new impetus. A knot of men were standing on the only street in the town discussing the matter when Andrew Hunker, grinding his quid with a pair of jimber jaws, said:

"Gents, so long as we was all men together the gun was a first rate article for our differences, bein' much more effective and less expensive than by a court of law. But with wimmen and children among us it's different. It's onjust that a woman should be deprived of her husband and his support because he's suspected of holdin' two aces o' clubs when there's only one in a regulation pack. And when a widower with children is put out o' business the care of his children falls on the town.

"Now, I reccymend that we have an orphan asylum in Deadshot, to be paid for by them as gits the better of sich as differs with 'em. Supposin' we start a fund for the purpose in this way: Any man as bores a hole in another in Deadshot pays a thousand dollars for the privilege. When the fust thousand turns up we'll begin the buildin' o' the asylum, and every thousand comin' in after that goes to carryin' on the good work."

"That's all very well," remarked Cy Atkins, "but who's goin' to levy on the man that bores the hole?"

Mr. Hunker ground his quid a trifle harder and slower and continued:

"I take it for granted that the sentiment o' this yere town has turned agin hole borin', particularly in the bodies of fathers of kids. I offer myself as one to enforce the penalty, and I haven't any doubt that I kin git all the assistance I need."

This clinched the argument, and the same evening a copy of the decree, signed by a self constituted committee, was posted throughout the town. Mr. Hunker's name, written in a style to remind one of John Hancock's on the Declaration of American Independence, led the rest, and those who were disposed to sneer at the document, on seeing his signature, desisted. The women approved, seeing in the edict a promise of being able to keep their husbands.

For several days after the posting of the notice the town of Deadshot was like the 5th of July. Not a pistol cracked. Some of the men were seen going about without their revolvers at their hips, indicating that they would rather get shot than be held for the thousand dollar penalty. But by and by the notices, moistened by the rain, did not look so formidable, and there were signs that they were forgotten or at least had lost their terror.

One morning two shots in quick succession rang out in a cabin where two men were playing cards. A third shot followed a few seconds later. The signers of the edict gathered at the scene of controversy and found Ben Rogers on the floor stone dead with two bullet holes in him. Jim Murphy was unhurt.

Mr. Hunker stepped up to Murphy and demanded his arms. Murphy, who still held his revolver, looked inquiringly into his face, then at six men backing him, all having cocked weapons in their hands, and surrendered.

The body being examined, it was found to contain two holes. The committee, after due consideration, decided that Murphy must pay $1,000 a hole.

The decision staggered the citizens of Deadshot. Some declared that Murphy, having fired in self defense, was not liable to the fine. Others declared that $2,000 for two holes, especially when one would have killed the man receiving it, was exorbitant. The committee gave out that the price of boring holes in human flesh was rising and they were thinking of making it 50 per cent higher. They had nothing to do with any other consideration than enforcing the payment due from hole borers at so much a hole.

Murphy was a gambler, and, since he never played to lose, he had plenty of funds with which to pay his fine. He added $500 as a voluntary subscription, making the nest egg for the orphan asylum $2,500. A hundred dollars was expended for a lot and material was bought for the building.

After this more men left their guns at home, and Deadshot was showing signs of much peacefulness when a new element of trouble came into the town in the person of a man from the south whose real name was not known, but who passed as Arkansaw Bill. He gave evidence of being a desperado. He knew nothing of the firmness of the committee in carrying out the edict against hole boring, and he held a law against gun play in contempt. He announced that any man who was disposed to interfere with him would get holed, and since hole boring was a right he did not intend to pay for exercising it.

Arkansaw Bill at once proceeded to make a nuisance of himself. He insisted on being admitted to games of chance, cheated and when taken to task instead of shooting his accuser invited him to put a hole in him. Bill was doubtless ready to defend himself. What he wanted was to take advantage of his enemy's indisposition to pay $1,000 for shooting him to put the orphan asylum edict into disrepute. He insulted the women, choosing those who had no men whose duty it was to protect them.

It is very hard to make a law that will not on occasion work disadvantageously. Any man attempting to put Arkansaw Bill out of the way must pay $1,000 for the privilege, and for every additional hole that was necessary to do the job he must pay an additional thousand. And this was not the worst of it. Arkansaw Bill was known to be a marvelously quick shot, and any man tackling him was likely to get holed instead of holing him.

A meeting of the committee was called to decide upon some way of getting rid of Arkansaw Bill. It was moved that in case any one put a hole in him the fine should be remitted. The motion was carried, but since any one bent on putting a hole in the desperado was liable to get a hole in himself the remission of the fine did not especially improve matters. No one seemed inclined to tackle him. Andrew Hunker proposed a simultaneous attack upon the enemy, agreeing to fire the first shot. But his proposition did not meet with favor; one or more lives of good citizens were liable to be paid for that of a villain. It was considered advisable that some stratagem should be devised by which he could be eliminated without fine.

In the first place no one was sufficiently inventive to produce such a stratagem, and in the second the consensus of opinion was in favor of a fair fight even if it was desirable to eliminate one of the combatants. It was finally proposed by Mr. Hunker that each man tackle Arkansaw Bill until some one of them downed him. This proposition meeting with favor, Mr. Hunker offered himself as the first victim. It is to the credit of the others that they declined to accept his offer, averring that lots should be drawn to determine who should be first, second, third, and so on till the six members of the committee each had a place in the proceedings.

Six numbers were written on as many bits of paper, from one to six inclusive, and placed in a hat. Then the men successively put a hand in the hat and drew a number. He who drew No. 1 was Abe Billings, a man with a wife and four children. Hunker begged to be permitted to change numbers with him, but Billings would not consent; and the meeting, each man having promised secrecy, broke up. Billings was to choose his own time for doing the job and was not required to give any notice to any one. In case he was killed in the attempt he was to make, the man who had drawn No. 2 was to make another, and so on till Arkansaw Bill or the six men should be eliminated.

Twenty-four hours passed, and both Abe and Bill still lived. During the second night after the lots had been drawn several shots in quick succession were heard coming from the direction of the quarters occupied by the desperado. Every man of the committee believed that Bill or Abe—perhaps both—had bitten the dust. Every one of them got out of bed and hurried to the scene of the fray. Abe's cabin was lighted. His children were running about in their nightgowns, but neither their father nor mother was visible.

One by one the committee as it passed Abe's quarters asked the children what had happened, but getting no coherent response hurried on toward Arkansaw Bill's cabin. They met Mrs. Billings coming away. Asked what had occasioned the firing, for reply she turned and led them to Bill's house. There in the doorway lay a body. Some one struck a match, held it to the dead man's face and lighted up Bill's ashen features.

"Who did it?" asked Hunker.

"I did it," replied Mrs. Billings calmly. "I called him to the door and shot him."

"Where's Abe?"

Again for reply she turned and led them this time to her own home. Going to a door that opened to the cellar she unlocked it and Abe came forth as much wonder stricken as the others.

"What have you been up to?" he asked his wife angrily.

"I've saved you from being murdered."

Then all saw that she had rid the place of its incubus without danger to herself or any one else. Each and every man grasped her hand and exonerated her from blame.

The orphan asylum was never built, for it was not needed. The lot and the material that had been purchased were used for a church, which helped amazingly in the civilization of the town. Deadshot has long since become one of the most thriving and cultured cities in the west. It is no longer called Deadshot. The name has been changed in honor of the woman who rendered the asylum unnecessary.

NOTABLES IN THE LIMELIGHT

Archduke of Austria, Who May Be King of Poland.

Since the final partition of Poland in 1795 between Russia, Austria and Prussia that one time kingdom of central Europe has been a nation only in name. Long before that time, however, it had begun to decline. In the partition Russia got as her share more than three-fourths of the original kingdom, which in the third quarter of the sixteenth century was the most powerful in central Europe, with an area of 280,000 square miles and a population of 35,000,000.

Since the fall of Warsaw there have been rumors that Poland is again to be a kingdom, and it is said that the Archduke Charles Stephen of Austria will be proclaimed king.

The archduke, a cousin of the Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria, was born at Gross-Seelowitz on Sept. 5, 1860, the son of the Archduke Charles Ferdinand. He married Maria Theresa in 1886 in Vienna, and they have six children, the eldest son being Archduke Charles Albert, who is an artillery officer in the Austrian army.

Archduke Charles Stephen holds the rank of an admiral in the German navy and is honorary colonel of the Eighth regiment of infantry. He is a knight of the Order of the Golden Fleece and holds the Golden Cross of Honor of the Order of Malta. He is a knight of the Order of the Elephant and of the Order of the Black Eagle.

Federal Trade Commission.

The new federal trade commission, which is now going from city to city conferring with business men in relation to the trade of the nation, was created by act of congress on Sept. 26, 1914. Like the interstate commerce commission, which has jurisdiction over the railroads, it is an independent body and is accountable to congress and not to any member of the cabinet. The commissioners are appointed by the president for a term of seven years, at an annual salary of $10,000. Their expenses are paid while traveling. Joseph E. Davies of Wisconsin is chairman of the commission, and Edward N. Hurley of Illinois is vice chairman. The functions of the trade commission are to investigate the organization, conduct and management of any corporation, joint stock company or corporate combination (except common carriers) engaged in commerce among the several states and with foreign nations and to gather such information and data as will enable the president of the United States to make recommendation to congress for legislation for the regulation of such commerce.

EDWARD N. HURLEY.

Edward N. Hurley, vice chairman of the commission, is fifty-one years old and is the only member not a college graduate. He was a locomotive fireman and an engineer on the Burlington railroad and then traveling salesman. As the originator of the pneumatic tool industry in the United States and Europe he made a fortune, and, retiring from business, established a country home at Wheaton, Ill., and engaged in farming and stock breeding. When made a member of the commission he was president of the Illinois Manufacturers' association, a machine company and a national bank.

A SMART FROCK.

Navy Serge For the High School Girl.

This attractive variation from the middy suit is developed in navy serge. The unusual yoke effect buttons on either side, and from the waist the fullness hangs in straight lines down the skirt's length. The neck is finished with a white pique collar and a velvet ribbon tie. Large pearl buttons and a double white kid belt add smart finishes.

DRESS YOUR CHARACTER.

How to Look Becoming Rather Than Ultra.

Dress your character, not your figure, is the advice of a famous actress, and rather surprising this advice seems at first hearing. But think it over well and the excellence of the idea will appeal to you. Every woman has a certain individuality of her own—a temperament, if you will—that makes her a little or perhaps a good deal different from all other women. It is the individuality, this temperament, that women should dress up to, according to the actress, in order to make the personality more marked and convincing.

But an instinctive carrying out of this advice with no heed to the promptings of reason may result in disaster. For example, there is always the woman who weighs 200 pounds or thereabouts, but whose personality is distinctly kittenish. Is she to dress her character or her figure? There is also the very little woman who ought to belong to the cuddly, appealing class, who yearns to be impressive and stately. If she insists upon wearing the garments of the grenadier woman she may spoil her chances of being fascinatingly charming.

But between these two extremes there is a very happy medium, and in this idea of dressing up to one's type there is also a very valuable suggestion. The importance of reflecting personal individuality in costume is appreciated by many women who design their own clothes and hand the designs to tailor, dressmaker and milliner to reproduce in practical guise. The actress in her part is always dressed in conformity with the character she is portraying, but her costumes—and there is an important point—are made to suit her figure lines while expressing a special sort of personality. Therefore if the delightful flounces of the 1830 period suit your type exactly, but are a bit trying to your too solid figure, adopt the flounces, but see to it that they are as flat and so arranged that the lines of the silhouette are right.

Children's Dresses.

The peasant influence is very strong in children's dresses. The various lacings, the many kinds of guimpes and the bolero jackets verify this statement. Braid trimmings, novelty buttons, pockets and collars are used to give a military effect.

Waist lines of children's dresses are just as fickle as are the waist lines of grownups' frocks. High waisted effects are used mostly in party frocks. Normal waist lines and low belted effects are reserved for more practical dresses.

Skirts of children's dresses are given fullness by means of plaits, shirring or a circular cut.

The reliable blue serge dress will of course be popular for school dresses. Plaid silk promises to be a favorite trimming for dresses of this material. Combinations of navy blue and army blue are very popular and blue and red are also looked upon with favor.

Black and white checks and plaids are made up in a variety of styles for practical dresses. Sometimes the entire dress is of the plaid, but more often it is used in combination with plain color.

DEFEAT MEANS DELAY AND DIRECT TAXATION.

If I vote "Against" the canal referendum and it is defeated, what will be the result?

The work of completing the canal will be stopped, and it could not be used for commerce until the legislature should make appropriations from the state treasury to be raised by direct taxation. This would delay the use of the canal for a number of years.

The obligations of the state already incurred, a large part of the $27,000,000 would have to be met by appropriations and direct taxation within a short time as awards from time to time should be made to pay the claims against the state already presented.

The ultimate cost by this method would be largely increased. Until completed the state would fail to get any benefit from its investments already made, while the interest upon the bonds already issued would continue to accrue.

The great commerce to and from the Pacific coast and New York, the interior states and the great lakes via the Panama canal would be lost to New York until the barge canal is completed, if not forever.

SEEK NAMES OF RETIRED MEN.

Navy Wants to Register All Available Supernumerary Officers.

As a part of the program of preparedness for war, the navy department has instituted, through the bureau of navigation, an inquiry regarding the commissioned personnel on the naval retired list to ascertain how many retired officers would be available in time of need either to take duty on warships or in navy yards and stations. The inquiry includes the retired officers of the Marine corps as well as of the navy.

Hereafter the bureau of navigation will keep two lists of officers available for duty in time of war. On one list will appear the names of those of the active list, and on the other the names of those who have been retired. It is understood that this classification does not apply to those officers who have been retired for age. The inquiry goes out to officers who have retired voluntarily, who have been "plucked," or who have been retired for some physical disability which might not stand in the way of performing some special line of duty required somewhere in the naval establishment in time of hostilities.

deep crown of silk eponge, has a velvet brim and a band of moire ribbon jauntily held at both sides by a novel satin button. This hat is especially smart for the business woman.

Again Petticoats.

The smart petticoat for wear with sport skirts is of kersey silk in vivid stripes. These petticoats have a good flare at the ankle, but at the hip they are attached to a smoothly fitting yoke, and the edge is finished simply with a deep hem, no ruffles or flounces breaking the smooth, trim line. For golf and all other out of door sports they are ideal, since their silk texture is so beautifully light and the flare at the foot prevents their clinging about the limbs in active exercise. Tailored skirts call for more elaborate petticoats, and those of pussy willow taffeta, with scant ruffles put on with cording, are the most distinctive sort. All petticoats measure two and a half to three yards at the edge now, and some of the more elaborate dancing petticoats of lace own to five and even six yards of width.

A Party Bag.

Have you ever gone to a party and faced the problem of where to put your handkerchief? Party dresses as a rule are not provided with pockets. A girdle is a dangerous hiding place for a handkerchief if one desires to keep the handkerchief. A pretty finish to such a costume, as well as a serviceable finishing feature, is one of those dainty little bags just large enough to hold a glove, handkerchief and vanity box. They are done in silk and figured satin and shirred on a ribbon which hangs on the wrist.

ODD SLEEVES FOR NEW WAISTS.

This waist is practical as well as smart, for, although illustrated with fancy sleeves and embroidered trimming, it may be made up with a surplice front, shoulder straps and pockets.

If the new separate waists are interesting, the sleeves which they exploit are equally so. The very long, semi-fitting sleeve is exceedingly modish and considerable ingenuity has been expended upon its trimming and finish at the wrist. As the sleeves fit close over the wrists, they are slit at the back, and the slits may be piped with contrasting material, run through with embroidered bands or filled in with lace. In either instance a row of fancy buttons usually appears above the slit.

The waist shown here is attractively designed in gray chiffon cloth trimmed with very dark red and silver embroidery. The waist may also be made with a surplice closing front which may be rolled back to form revers. Following all ultra-modish designs, the collar is convertible. Provision is also made for straps to extend over the shoulders and cross at the back so that they button on to the belt or skirt in suspender effect. The straps stop at the pockets in front, however.

In medium size the waist requires 3½ yards of 44-inch material, with ⅝ yard belting 2 inches wide for the stay. It is cut from a fold of the material, the back and collar being laid directly on the lengthwise fold. The first section of the pattern to be put into position, however, is the front, which is laid on a lengthwise thread of the cloth, with the underfacing opposite, in case the surplice effect is to be used instead of the embroidered front. There is a turn-over cuff to give variety to the sleeve, and this is placed opposite the back. To the right comes the peplum, followed by the pocket. Along the selvage edge the strap is laid, and opposite this, toward the fold, the sleeve, on a lengthwise thread of material.

Many smart sleeves have a line of fur about the edge, with a piping of silk in contrasting color showing beyond the fur.

WAR HAS SPREAD CHOLERA.

Greater Prevalence Abroad Affects Quarantine Restrictions Here.

Washington. — The United States public health service has collected all available information regarding health conditions in foreign ports in order that needless restrictions shall not be imposed upon vessels and that active measures may be taken when necessary. In a review of the world distribution of cholera, yellow fever, plague and typhus fever, just issued by the United States public health service, it is pointed out that in the fiscal year ended June 30, 1915, cholera was present in Austria-Hungary, Ceylon, China, Egypt, Dutch East Indies, India, the Philippine Islands, Russia, the Straits Settlements, the Balkan territory, Germany and Indo-China.

The amount of cholera reported in Russia during the six months ended Dec. 25, 1914, and the absence this year of reports from that country, save from Petrograd during the six months following, indicate that the disease has been more or less widely prevalent there. In the six months ended June 25, 1915, cholera was reported to be present in the prison camps in Germany in twenty-three localities, in Silesia, and in Brandenburg, Posen and Zirka, in Germany. In all probability these cases were traceable to the seat of war in the east. The new infection in the Balkan territory may have originated from the constant infection of Austria-Hungary or from Turkey, where cholera was reported prevalent during 1914 and 1915.

To Remove Cotter Pins.

While removing cotter pins is generally considered more or less of an easy matter, repair men can learn something new, says Blacksmith and Wheelwright. One of the best methods of getting an ordinary pin out of its hole is to grasp it in the jaws of a pair of pliers and use a hammer to pound the pliers. This is a very effective way and is used by nearly all good repair men.

Another method is to use a drift pin or large nail. Put this through the hole of a cotter and strike it with the hammer. Sometimes the pin may be removed with the drift or nail, using the latter as a lever.

Removing Putty Stains.

Putty purchased from a dealer is usually in a soft and oily state, and the amateur glazier soon finds his hands, as well as the tools, plentifully smeared after the job is finished. Removing this from the hands with the putty knife or a stick is very tedious, but if a bunch of fine excelsior is used the putty will be removed quickly and thoroughly.

A Hint For Motorists.

The motorists should give special care to seeing that the mud guard beneath the engine and gearing is kept free of volatile oil, for the reason that at any time a little gasoline might get in with it and start a fire.

HIS EXHIBIT FREE.

Minneapolis Youth Shows Miniature Railroad Device at Fair.

Minneapolis, Minn.—For the first time in the history of the state fair the management has given free exhibition space to an exhibitor in order to have him show his product on the ground. Walter F. Hines, a boy who lives at 2543 Jefferson street, N. E., Minneapolis, is the exhibitor.

Hines has made a miniature locomotive engine, and in the back yard of his parents' home he has a track that runs around the edges of the yard. It is completely equipped with semaphores and block signals.

"I have always loved to make things with my hands," Hines said. "People think it would be a lot of work to make it, when, as a matter of fact, I had more fun making it than I have had since it was completed, playing with it."

JEFF'S TESTIMONY

By SARAH ATWATER

Willard Trevor, a young man in Alabama, on opening his morning mail read a letter which astonished him. It contained a notification that he had been sued for breach of promise. His father had recently died and left him the care of several children, the sons and daughters of a second wife. Trevor had secured the services of a woman to take care of the children, but being dissatisfied with her had discharged her. A lawyer had written that Martha Broadhead, the complainant, would listen to an offer with a view to compromising the suit.

At the moment Trevor was reading this letter his body servant, Jeff, named for the future president of the Southern Confederacy, came into the room with his master's boots that he had shined.

"Jeff," said Trevor. "What do you suppose Miss Broadhead has done? She's sued me for breach of promise."

"Yes, sah."

"She wishes to extort money. She will attempt to prove that I made love to her while she was here in charge of the children. I'm going to call upon you to tell the court that, though you were in the house all the time she was here, if I had been sweet on her you would have noticed it and that you never saw any courting going on between us."

"Yes, sah."

When Jeff was called to the stand by Trevor's counsel he testified as his master had indicated and was about to step down from the witness box when Miss Broadhead's counsel called upon him to remain for cross examination.

"Jeff," he said patronizingly and intending to ingratiate himself with the witness before attempting to get any information out of him that would injure his master's case, "you find Mr. Trevor a very good master, don't you?"

"Berry good mastah, sah."

"You say that you are a house servant?"

"Yes, sah."

"And that you never saw your master sitting in the parlor or on the gallery with Miss Broadhead?"

"No, sah. I didn't nebber see mars' sotten in de parlor or on de gallery with Missy Broadhead, but I see him on de gallery oncet talkin' with Missy Broadhead."

"You saw Mr. Trevor on the gallery talking with Miss Broadhead, eh! Well, what was he saying to her?"

"He tole Miss Broadhead ef ebber he cotched her slappin' one ob de chillun ag'in he gib her de walkin' papers."

The spectators tittered, and the judge called them to order. The attorney colored a bit, then proceeded.

"How was your master in the habit of spending his evenings?"

"Sometimes he went out to call on de neighbors, and sometimes he sot in de library readin'."

"And how did Miss Broadhead spend her evenings?"

"Missy Broadhead she put de chillun to bed."

"About what time did she get the children to sleep?"

"Dunno, sah. I nebber see her up but oncet."

"What was she doing then?"

"Missy Broadhead went to de library where Mars' Willard was sottin' readin' a book."

"Well, what happened between them?"

"Missy Broadhead says, says she: 'I'm gwine to run ovah to Missy Cuthbert's fo' a few minutes. If any ob de chillun wakes up I'll be back in time so you won't be beddered.' And mars' says, 'Dat all right; don't hurry yo'self.' I was gwine to Missy Cuthbert's myself to see her cullud gal, Peggy, so I followed Missy Broadhead as fa' as de crossroad, and she turned on de crossroad. Since she wasn't gwine to Missy Cuthbert's I jist think I'd see whar she war gwine, so I follered her down de road, and she met de oberseer."

This was evidence that the attorney had not bargained for. He would have stopped the testimony, but he knew that the defendant's counsel would call it forth anyway, so he felt obliged to let Jeff go on. The darky resumed:

"De oberseer tuk Missy Broadhead in he arms, and I heard a smack lak de report ob a pistol."

After the laugh that this evidence elicited had subsided Jeff continued:

"Den dey walked togedder on de road, talkin. I bein' black as de night, de white folks couldn't see me, but I could see de white folks, and, climbin' ober de fence, I traveled in de field alongside ob 'em. I heard Missy Broadhead say dat mars' hab a heap o' money an' he'd rudder pay than go into cou't. Den de oberseer he say, 'Yo' hain't got nottin' fo' to hire a lawyer.' And Missy Broadhead says, says she, 'I nebber thought o' dat.' And de oberseer he says, says he, 'I furnish da money fo' de lawyer and fo' de cou't.' And Missy Broadhead, she says, says she, 'If yo' do dat I gib yo' half.'"

Naturally every one in the courtroom listened to this evidence with wrapt attention except the plaintiff and her counsel. When Jeff had finished the judge dismissed the case, and the defendant threw his arms around Jeff and hugged him. Plaintiff's counsel gave notice that he would appeal the case on the ground that a slave's testimony was not admissible, but the appearance of guilt in the plaintiff at his testimony indicated that she would not press her complaint further, and she never did.

Trevor offered Jeff his freedom, but Jeff had been born and lived on the plantation sixty years and said his master might as well "pull up a tree by de roots and throw it into de road."

TODAY'S FASHION NOTE

The continued use of flounces and frills is one of the surprises of the season, and this charming frock in pink chiffon over taffeta owes much of its charm to the arrangement and finish of the double frills on the skirt. Darker pink satin is used to edge the flounces and form the girdle bodice. The guimpe is of misty tulle. In medium size the dress requires 4 1-2 yards 40-inch chiffon, with 4 yards 36-inch taffeta for foundation and bodice, and 1 1-2 yards tulle.

The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

MORE SUMMER DESSERTS.

FRUIT WHIP.—One cupful of sugar, one cupful of soft fruit, white of one egg, all put into a good sized mixing bowl and beaten with an egg whip for thirty minutes. Drain the fruit if canned. Peaches, apricots and berries of all kinds are excellent. You will be surprised at the creamy taste and nice appearance of this whip when served on cake or pumpkin pie. This amount will serve six.

Nut Cream.—Cover two full tablespoonfuls of gelatin with half a cupful of milk. Whip up half a pint of cream and add the dissolved gelatin to it. Beat in half a cupful of sugar, the beaten white of an egg and a cupful of chopped walnut meats. Flavor with vanilla. Whip until stiff. Mold in small cups or in a large mold. Turn out when very cold and serve with whipped cream.

Apple Slump.—One quart of apples, one cupful of flour, one teaspoonful of baking powder, one-half teaspoonful of salt, one-half cupful of milk and one-half cupful of sugar.

Wash, pare and core the apples, put into saucepan, which has a close fitting lid, with one cupful of boiling water and boil ten minutes. Sprinkle with sugar and cover with the dough. Put on the lid and boil twenty minutes without lifting the lid. Serve with sugar and milk. Dust with cinnamon if you like.

Dough.—Sift the flour, salt and baking powder into a bowl, add the milk and mix well. Take a teaspoonful of dough into floured hands, roll into balls, put over the apples and boil.

Fruit Punch.—Serve from a bowl hollowed from a cake of ice. A good recipe is: One quart of pineapple, cut in small pieces; one dozen lemons, sugar to taste, one pint of grape juice, one quart of cherries and four pints of mineral water. Lemonade served from a bowl hollowed from a cake of ice is as good to the eye as the beverage is to the palate.

Fruit in its season is not only food, but medicine, and it is mistaken economy to do without it. The acids of the fruits are used to clean the mouth, stomach and intestines. They kill the germs that have found their way to the living canal; they cool the blood; they aid the liver cells to do their work. For this reason they should be used freely in some form or other during their season.

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

Tris Speaker, Outfielder of Boston Red Sox.

Tris Speaker, who plays centerfield for the Boston Americans, is considered one of the greatest outer gardeners on the diamond today. He is a wonderful fielder, an accurate thrower and slugs the ball hard and often. Tris is said to receive the highest salary ever paid a ball player. In March, 1914, he signed a two years' contract with the Red Sox calling for a salary, it was alleged, of $18,000 per year. Five years ago the Boston Americans drafted Speaker from the bushes and turned him over to the Little Rock (Ark.) club, and the following year he was in the Boston lineup. He made good from the start and was a big help in winning the world's pennant from the New York Giants in 1912.

When Players Slow Down.

Talk with any wise old baseball manager or player and he will tell you that the slower a player becomes the more the player knows about inside baseball and the more he plays the inside game.

While he has all his speed the player breezes through carelessly. His physical fitness carries him through with lots to spare. When he feels himself slipping he herds by himself, figures everything to three or four decimal places and actually begins to learn the game. They do say that Mathewson, Coombs and Rucker, all Greater New York hurlers, are in this class. The slower they become physically the faster their top piece revolves.

If all this is true just stop to imagine what Matty, the "iron man" and Nap might have done when at the top of their physical speed if they only had the wile and knowledge of inside tactics they've acquired on the physical down grade. And what team would ever get a hit off Grover Cleveland Alexander of the Phillies if Alec, now at the top of his physical speed, could add to his stock in trade the mastery of the inside stuff which supposedly comes only on the inevitable retreat before the invincible enemy, age?

Following Mack's Lead.

Last winter when Connie Mack started to break up his "million dollar baseball machine" other managers were inclined to laugh at him. They figured that he was undertaking an impossible job in trying to build up another winner such as he was tearing down.

However, as time passes other pilots are beginning to realize that it is not always an easy matter to go along with a team of champions and that sometimes radical measures are necessary to bring ball players to their senses. Regardless of whether they can rebuild their teams or not, several managers are right now following in Connie Mack's footsteps. They are cutting off high salaried men who were not delivering the goods. And the chances are that Connie, who had a few months' start on all of them, will get back to the pinnacle of success in advance of any of those who have emulated him.

Explodes Osler Theory.

A remarkable case of athletic longevity occurred recently in Dublin, Ireland, where a man at the age of forty-five performed better than he did at the age of twenty-five. The athlete is Inspector Denis Carey of the Dublin metropolitan police, and he is said to have solved the mystery of perpetual youth. Carey threw the sixteen pound hammer the fine distance of 156 feet [illegible] inches, and the throw is more than twenty feet farther than the figures which earned him the English championship twenty-two years ago. Carey won several championships over the hurdles twenty-five years ago, and he is still able to do a good performance over the sticks.

Mamaux Signs Long Contract.

Pitcher Albert Mamaux of the Pirates recently affixed his signature to a document which binds him to the Pittsburgh National league club for 1916, 1917 and 1918. This is the first time in years that any player has been asked to sign a three year contract with the Pirates. In this manner a well deserved compliment is paid the sensational young flinger. The salary figures were not given out. It is known, however, that Mamaux will receive something in excess of $5,000 for next season and maybe [illegible] that for [illegible]

HIGH MEETS AUBURN NEXT

Light Practice Last Night and Today Serves to Put Men in Good Condition.

Light practice was indulged in last night by the High school players; punting, passing and throwing the ball occupying practically all of the period.

The fact that no game was played Saturday should make it possible for the team to be in first-class condition when it meets Auburn on the Athletic field gridiron next Saturday. Auburn has a good team this year and consistent hard work is necessary by the local team to be able to make a good showing against the prison city boys. The feeling current in the school is not to keep the scoring machine of Auburn down but to score a win.

Today being a holiday at the school the coach will be lenient with the members of the squad and will give them light practice. It is the opinion of the entire student body that Baldwinsville would have been defeated had the game been played. The game was postponed at the last minute by order of the Baldwinsville management, a telegram announcing the fact being received shortly before noon. The telegram stated that two men were on the injured list, two out of town, etc. Coach Merrill wired back, "The game must be played," to which he received the answer, "It can't be played." If it had not been for the rain a pickup team from this city would have been gotten together to play the High school boys.

RECEIPTS OF 1ST SERIES, $2000

Thirty Years Ago the Browns and White Stockings Played a Seven Game Series Before Small Crowds.

Let us hark back for thirty years, to mid-October of 1885, and see what a world's series of that period looks like. The competing clubs are the famous Chicago White Stockings, champions of the National League, and the almost equally notorious St. Louis Browns, pennant winners of the old American Association, then a major circuit. "Cap" Ansen, then in his playing prime, is the pilot of the White Stockings, and the late A. G. Spalding is the president and owner of the club. The Browns are the property of Chris von der Ahe, the quaint and eccentric German saloonkeeper, crazy like a fox, who has given the Mound City one of the greatest ball clubs the game has ever seen. Here, then, were clubs owned and managed by men who have become classic figures, and made up of players whose fame has survived to the present generation of fans. Added to this, there was the natural rivalry between Chicago and St. Louis. On top of that the series of seven games was closely contested from first to last, and ended in a tie, each club winning three, while the seventh other was a hoss and hoss.

Under such circumstances, you would think that the box office would be mobbed by the fans eager to see the games, and that the small and crude accommodations of those days would have been insufficient to hold more than a small part of the clamorous bugs. Not so, however. The total receipts for the seven games aggregated less than $2,000. And yet the magnates today grumble about lack of patronage!

The first game was played in Chicago, and resulted in a 5 to 5 tie. The second, in St. Louis, was forfeited to Chicago. The Browns then hit their stride and in the two succeeding games at St. Louis won by scores of 7 to 4 and 3 to 2. Owing to the lack of interest in the cities involved in the series, it was decided to play the fifth game in Pitttsburgh, but the Smoky City fans manifested but slight interest in the proceedings, Chicago winning the argument 9 to 2. The clubs then moved over to Cincinnati, where the White Stockings were again the victors by a 9 to 2 score. The final game was played in Chicago, and was captured by St. Louis, 13 to 4.

What would not the fans of today give to see such clubs fighting for the world's bunting? "Cap" Ansen at first for Chicago, with the great Clarkson in the box, McCormick for his assistant; Flint behind the bat, Pfeffer at second, Williamson at third, Burns at short, and Dalrymple, Gore, Kelly and "Billy" Sunday in the outer garden. As for the Browns, Bob Carruthers and Dave Foutz did the box work. Comiskey, playing first base, was the pilot of the club, and with Artie Latham, Robinson and Gleason made up a wonderful infield. O'Neil, who afterward hung up a world's record batting average of .492 with Welch and Nichol comprised the outfield, and Bushong was behind the bat.

And they drew $2,000 from seven games in four cities!

REGULAR FAN HAS SOME FAT CHANCE

In the wrangle over world's series seats, which annually works up the public, Mr. Everybody Fan is the GOAT. Between the ticket scalper, the National Commission, politicians with influence, stockholders of the clubs, publicity "paper" and preferred patrons, the pay-as-you-enter grandstand occupant has no chance. With the aid of a periscope he might be able to peek over the fence—that's as close as he usually gets.

The customary condition prevails at Philadelphia, this year, only more so, Mr. Fan's chance has as much embonpoint as a starved devil's darning needle. To begin with, there are only 21,000 seats. And before the Dear Old Public is reached, there must be deducted from this:

1,500 reservations for the National Commission.

1,200 seats for the Philadelphia Press.

100 seats each for 22 stockholders of the Philadelphia Club.

Several thousand seats that reach the ticket sellers by the underground system, whatever that is.

Graft tickets for the town politicians and others.

Preferred patrons to the number of hundreds.

Probably this list doesn't cover all the demands that must be satisfied ere the distribution to the regular fans, who pay day in and day out is reached. Perhaps 9,000 seats in all will be available at Philadelphia, and of these, 7,000 are the variety for which the purchasers must stand in interminable time in line.

Welcome, Hair Lifters

In this crisis the out-of-town visitor stands around with a sad look on his brow and welcomes the sight of a ticket scalper. This lad is willing to pay $40 for $9 worth of seats and thinks he's lucky to get the good chance to do so.

In fact, considering the circumstances, the ticket scalper is a species of god-send. He makes it possible for one who is willing to pay the price to get a look at the world's series.

But for him, many persons who will this year witness the games, would have made a fruitless journey of hundreds of miles.

BAN DISAPPOINTED; FEDS MUCH ALIVE

The Federal League, which disappointed Ban Johnson sorely by not becoming a part of the mortuary records of July 4th, as per Ban's prediction, is far from being dead, or even sick. This fact was made evident at the wind-up of the season in Chicago, where, according to an apparently authentic news report, the Rebels were paid for 34,461 admissions With passes the crowd was estimated at close to 38,000.

The seating capacity of the park is reported to be 21,000, which means that the 38,000 must have been squeezed in with the aid of a hay baler.

However, it is evident that a capacity crowd was present, which proves the "very much alive" statement as to the Feds.

BULGARIA OPENS WAR ON SERBIA; ATTACKS MADE

London.—Bulgaria opened war against Serbia on Monday, the Serbian legation announced today. At the same time the legation gave out an official dispatch from Nish stating that the Bulgars' attacks are being made along the Vlasina river. All the attacks have thus far been repulsed, it adds.

Hard fighting is in progress about the town of Vlasina, sixty miles southeast of Nish and only fifteen miles east of the Nish-Saloniki railway, which is the only railroad that can be used for the transportation of the Anglo-French expedition northward.

CHICAGO MAN ENJOINS ANGLO-FRENCH LOAN

Chicago.—Alleging that The Mutual Life Insurance company of New York contemplates investing $10,000,000 of its trust funds in the Anglo-French loan of $500,000,000, Olga H. S. Walsh of Chicago, holder of a $2,000 insurance policy in the Mutual, filed suit for an injunction in the Federal Court here today.

The complaint, which was filed by Mrs. Walsh in person, sets forth that among the thousands of policy-holders in the Mutual Life Insurance Company are many persons of various nationalities, and that the investment of the trust funds of these policy holders in the Anglo-French loan would tend to produce antagonisms among the policy holders which might lead to disrupting the company and thereby depreciate the value of her interest in the company.

HENRY FORD TO POSE FOR EDISON FILMS

Detroit.—Henry Ford, with Thomas A. Edison as his guest, leaves in his private car next week for the San Francisco Fair. Ford-Edison Day will be celebrated October 22.

Edison has ordered a movie company here to film a story of Ford's life, for which the auto magnate is to pose. The story is in melodramatic form.

GOETHALS DOESN'T FORSEE CANAL'S OPENING DAY

Panama.—General Goethals said today it was impossible to set any date for re-opening the Panama Canal.

He said the movement of earth into the Canal, was so rapid the dredging beet was unable to make any gain against it.

EGGS SELL FOR 45 CENTS AT SYRACUSE MARKET

Syracuse.—There was an advance of three cents in the price of eggs today at the North Side market. They were selling for 45 cents a dozen. This is the highest price that eggs have been quoted on the market since last winter. Further advances are predicted by farmers soon. The price this morning ranged down to 40 cents.

Tommy knew that mother had got a special cake for tea and, with an eye to getting his share, asked pleadingly:

"Mummy, have I been a good boy this afternoon?"

"M-m-es," replied mother rather slowly, her mind going back to a little incident of the day when Tommy had not shone.

FARRAR'S CARMEN TOO BAD FOR THE CENSORS

Philadelphia.—Miss Geraldine Farrar has shocked the Pennsylvania Board of Motion Picture Censors by the way she played the title role in "Carmen" before the motion picture camera, and the film was introduced in the Court of Common Pleas here today as evidence in her own behalf. The censors objected to Miss Farrar's acting in duel scene, where her breast was bared, and found the Lasky Feature Play Company's Photoplay too shocking to be seen by the public of the Keystone State.

Five thousand feet of film in the box were brought before Judges Ferguson and Davis today in the appeal from the censors' decision to eliminate sections of "Carmen." The crowd in the court room awaited an order for the exhibition of the film, as had been done when the decision of the censors was overruled in the case of Lasky Production of "The Secret Orchard," with Blanche Sweet as the star. But Miss Farrar remained concealed, although the judges probably will see the picture on Wednesday before giving a decision.

Andreas Dippel, opera impressario, testified that he had seen the film in October 1, when 2,500 persons applauded it in Boston. Arthur S. Friend, general counsel of the Lasky company, said that the film version as presented in Boston and other cities, and as submitted to Pennsylvania, had the approval in every foot of its length of Miss Farrar herself.

GRAND DUKE NICHOLAS MAY COMMAND FORCES SENT TO THE BALKANS

London—London was considerably stirred yesterday by the statement of the French Premier, Mr. Viviani, that "tomorrow Russian troops will be fighting by the side of our," in the Balkans.

All the newspapers this morning, heartily indorsing the speech of Mr. Viviani, express delight at the news that Russia is prepared to land an army to assist Serbia. The Daily Telegraph's contention that the force sent to aid the galant little Balkan kingdom by France, England and Russia should be strong enough to overwhelm and crush the treacherous Bulgarians and rout the Austro-Germans is the keynote of all the editorials, which hold that it would be criminal folly to send an inadequate force.

The Daily Telegraph expresses the belief that while the reinforcement of the Serbians will be of a potential character, the Allies on the eastern and western fronts are now fully supplied with munitions and must continue their offensive against the Central Powers until the victory is won.

The belief is general here that, despite King Constantine's attitude, Greece, which is still mobilizing with all haste, will uphold the policy of Mr. Venizelos and speedily join the war on the side of the Quadruple Entente.

It is known, of course, that an Anglo-French force is being landed at Salonica, but there has been much speculation regarding the point at which Russian troops will enter the Balkan conflict and in what manner they will be transported.

One report current last night was that the recent mysterious transfer of Grand Duke Nicholas was about to be solved and that the Balkan muddle was being anticipated when he was transferred to the command of the Caucasus. This report now has the Grand Duke in command of the Russian Balkan army, which, it is believed in military circles here, would make the Bulgarian people less willing to fight against Russia, there being a deep vereration among the Bulgarian peasants for the Emperor of Russio and his family.

Serbia Attacked on Two Sides

Serbia is now being attacked from the north and the east. The Austro-Germans, after their capture of Belgrade and Semendria, are advancing southward, while the Bulgarians have sent forces to endeavor to interrupt communications north and south of Nish, the war-time capital of Serbia, and attack the Serbs on the flank if they the drirven back by the German Field Marshal von Mackensen.

The situation is admitted to be very serious, not only for Serbia, but for the whole Allied cause. It is asserted that the Serbians are inflicting very heavy losses both on the Austro-Germans and Bulgarians, but with their army of about a quarter of a million men they are believed to have little chance of making any prolonged resistance against three or four hundred thousand Austro-Germans and probably two hundred thousand Bulgars. They already are arranging for the transfer of the capital to Monastir, in the extreme southwestern corner of the kingdom.

Greece apparently has decided to ignore the treaty under which she is supported to go to the assistance of her Serbian ally in case of an attack. The Premier, Mr. Zaimis, having said when officially notified of the Bulgarian attack that Greece "remains in a position of armed neutrality."

The followers of the quadruple entente, however, have decided to take energetic action. As soon as the news of the Bulgarian attack on Serbia was received in London the Bulgarian Minister was handed his passports.

It is understood that Italy has decided not to co-operate with the Allies in the Balkans, the Italian government being of the opinion that troops cannot be spared for any campaign other than that in the Trentino and around Trieste.

Now that Austria and Germany have entered on their Balkan enterprise, which is interpreted as the first step toward an endeavor to obtain a German empire in the Near East, there can be no drawing back, but the Allies hope that, with a vigorous offensive both on the east and the west, they will be able at least to prevent the sending of any large reinforcements to Field Marshal von Mackensen.

The French in both the Champagne and Artois regions of France are continuing their offensive but not on the scale of the recent attacks. The British, after their success in repelling the big German attack, are preparing for another move, but at what point only the commanding generals know. Now that they have started,

This Is Important Year to Your State

It is to the interest of every man in Oswego County be registered so that he may vote on Election Day, November 2nd. In the cities, Fulton and Oswego, Friday and Saturday are the last two days of registration—the last days on which it is possible to get your name on the lists of registration and be permitted to vote. In the country districts the last day of registration is Saturday. The law states that men who voted last year may have their names carried over to this year on the registration lists and thus be permitted to vote. But has YOUR name been carried over? Isn't it best for you to personally take time Saturday to see that your name has been carried over, and that it has been put down in black and white on the registration lists so that you may vote just as will your more fortunate neighbor who has had his name carried over? It is claimed that in one election district of the town of Hannibal, alone, forty men who voted last year, will not be able to do so this year, unless they register Saturday. The reason for not carrying over their names is not apparent, but they and all other men should make certain that they are registered Saturday. The law requires personal registration in the cities of Fulton and Oswego. This year of all years because of the constitutional amendments and their consideration by the people it is important that a large vote—the largest in the history of the county and the state be recorded.

MACCABEES PROPOSE TAX FOR BENEFIT OF ILL AND DISABLED MEMBERS

After the regular meeting of the Maccabees last night, more than 100 members of the lodge were entertained in the club rooms. Messrs. Dickinson, Snow, Boutin, and others rendered a number of musical selections. Refreshments were served by a committee consisting of Messrs. Dayton Reed, Will Joyce, William Van Sanford, Warren Gardner and F. S. Spangle.

Great Master-at-Arms E. J. Hope of Syracuse made an address along the line of boosting the lodge. He stated that the Maccabees was one of the strongest orders of its kind in existence.

W. E. Spangle, Deputy Great Commander, of Syracuse, and father of F. S. Spangle, local attorney, in his talk dwelt upon the plan now being formulated throughout the country of taxing each member of the Maccabees a fee which is to go toward a fund for the benefit of sick and disabled members. The plan is being worked out in every city in the country. Provision is to be made also for the building of a large tuberculosis sanitarium to be used jointly by all divisions.

The rapid progress of the Maccabees in Fulton was outlined in a talk given by Deputy Great Commanler Carrier, of Syracuse. A short oration was also delivered by Warren S. Gardner, district superintendent of schools.

Guests from Oswego, Syracuse, and other nearby towns were present and expressed themselves as highly pleased with the entertainment. The goodfellowship existing among the members received favorable comment from the visitors.

Paddock Home a Bower of Beauty In Honor of Daughter's Wedding

Last evening at 8 o'clock at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. Lester Paddock in South Fourth street, surrounded by a profusion of flowers and autumnal foliage, Miss Mae Imogene Paddock, became the bride of Mr. Frank Clark Ash of Syracuse.

The color scheme used throughout was that of the pastelle colors. The inclosed veranda was decorated in autumnal foliage and the hall in green with baskets of pink cactus dahlias. The spacious living room, where the ceremony was performed, was also banked in green studded with the cactus dahlias.

On the stroke of eight, the bridal party formed at the foot of the stairs, Miss Maude Clark of Syracuse, harpist, played the wedding march from Mendelssohn and the party entered and took their places before an altar like arrangement at the front of the room. The bride in the charm of her young beauty presented a lovely picture. She wore a handsome creme white satin gown with Limerick lace trimmings and tulle sleeves. The long train fell from the waist, and the full length bridal veil of tulle was caught with orange blossoms. A shower bouquet of lilies of the valley and gardenias together with a rare lace handkerchief carried by the mother when she became a bride, added the finishing note to the costume.

Mr. H. Lester Paddock gave his daughter in marriage, and the Rev. F. T. Keeney of Syracuse, a friend of the family, performed the ceremony. The bride and groom knelt upon a low bench at the improvised altar, upon which was arranged a white satin cushion embroidered in orange blossoms and a golden crown—the work of a close friend of the bride. On each side of the bench were high candelabra with lighted candles, back of which was a bank of green with hanging baskets of pink dahlias. The double ring service was used.

The maid of honor, Miss Amy Staub of Knoxville, Tenn., wore a frock of pastelle pink silk with silver garniture, and she carried tiny orchids tied with silver ribbons. The bridesmaids, Miss Florence Charles of Evanston, Ill., who wore pastelle yellow silk with silver garniture and silver slippers, and Miss Margherita Schneider of Fremont, Neb., who wore pastelle lavender with silver garniture and silver slippers, presented a pretty picture. Both frocks were made alike in hoop skirt effects and both maids carried bouquets of mignonette roses.

The ribbon girls, the little Misses Elizabeth Weeks and Doro-

MAYOR FOX SAYS THAT PARTY HARMONY SHOULD OBTAIN AT ALL TIMES

The entire Republican city organization, including candidates for office in the coming election, met last night in Myron Strachan's office and discussed plans for the campaign.

Mayor Fox, as well as several of the candidates talked on the necessity of maintaining harmony within the organization, stating that it was just as necessary for a citizen to show his loyalty towards his party when a city election is concerned as it would be in the case of a state or presidential election.

The importance of getting all voters who have thus far failed to register to do so the coming Friday and Saturday was discussed at the meeting.

Next Monday night the committe will meet again.

Platform for a New Citizens' Party

We beg leave to suggest the following as the entire and adequate declaration of principles by a party of American citizens including Democrats, Republicans, Prohibitionists, Progressives, and every other sect in good and regular standing:

"Prosperity first and politics afterward."

This has especial reference to the adjustment of the tariff to new conditions brought about by the great war in Europe.

The nation's opportunity is as obvious as the sun in the morning sky.

Are the partisan leaders, and particularly the leaders of the party now in power at Washington, going to sacrifice the sunshine for the sake of personal pride of opinion or the dim echoes of past declarations, or canned creed of any kind?

Bad for America if such is the case, Mr. Wilson, Mr. Underwood and others!

Bad for America if such is the case, Mr. Mann, Mr. Lodge and others!

What a chance to wipe the slate clean of preconceived notions and conventional formulae regarding the legitimate use of tariff taxation for the promotion of American industries infant or otherwise!

"Politics afterward and prosperity first."—N. Y. Sun.

John D. Jr. Sees the Light

In April, 1914, when civil war raged in Colorado over the issue of collective bargaining with miners through unions, John D. Rockfeller Jr. testified: "It's a great principle. It's a national issue (to uphold the local agents of theo wners). We propose to support the officers in their course, which is in support of the workingmen themselves and their right to work for whom they please and how they please."

The Rockefeller holdings in the closely unionized railroads were many times as great as in Colorado mines, yet Mr. Rockefeller did not talk about spending his father's "last cent" to uphold on railroads the "great principle" that men should "work for whom they please and how they please."That principle did not in fact exist. Collective bargaining became a necessity when employers began dealing with men by the thousand instead of by one or two. It has advantages and disadvantages, but it has come to stay.

Conceding at last that in a region where men were being murdered and women smothered in tent cities the industry might need the owner's eye. Mr. Rockefeller went to Colorado. He met leading miners, men much like himself, and talked things over. He saw a light. He now has a plan to propose, a "republic of labor" which involves the very method of collective bargaining which months ago a great principle bade him oppose. If the miners like as well as their delegates seem to do the suggestion of a private labor union confined to the employes of one company, that is their affair.

Only—in any case—it would have been better for his own record and for the honor of Colorado if Mr. Rockefeller had gone on his job two years ago.—N. Y. World.

WE'RE HERE TODAY

Simultaneously with the announcement of the passing of one of Fulton's bright young business men, Mr. John Perchway, come the expression "How unexpected," and "Ah, well, we pass this way but once."

When Truth's realization is rushed upon us suddenly how plainly our lack in the spirit of the helping hand, the warm smile and the cheering words loom up before us. The teachings of the Dark Ages taught man to hang over his desk a printed card, "I've troubles of my own, don't mention yours." Today civilization hangs in the window another placard which reads, "Can I help, if so speil on."

This age is too teaching mortals the respect of another's opinions. We have learned that opposite as another's ideas may be from our own stubbornly framed ones, there may be "something in it after all."

Genuis is termed the capacity to take another's point of view even more than the capacity for taking pains. Put yourself in his place." That is an exercise for every power of insight, acumen, discernment, sympathetic imagination and actual unselfishness that there is in one. When we have learned this we will have learned well, and the kindly smile, the cheering word and the helping hand will be but natural expressions of a well ordered mind.

GETTING THE ORDER

Out in Pittsburgh the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company has a commercial-training department, under the management of T. H. Bailey Whipple. I have never had the advantage of a personal acquaintance with Mr. Whipple, but he could not be with the Westinghouse people without a real reason for results.

Anything said here will make no difference with the permanency of position of Mr. Whipple, but what this man says on salesmanship, in an article before me, may make a lot of difference with you.

His analysis of the subject of salesmanship, and his answers to the question why men fail in selling, are all in well-framed language. Notwithstanding this usual handicap, they are chock-full of common sense and practical ideas—a rare combination.

Mr. Whipple's points are well taken and short, more suggestive than exhaustive; and for this reason he again distinguishes himself as a real helper. Without the impudencce, he asks you if your pitch of enthusiasm is low; if you lack tact; if your aggressiveness is a little short; if your judgment is out of balance; if you know the psychological minute-hand from the hour-hand, that is always fifty-nine minutes behindhand. And he does all this in a punchy style, without leaving that feeling of a superior brand of knowledge so objectionable to most readers.

Then he asks if you are able to tell the hair-line—the balance between dignified independence and persuasive persistency, the relation between familarity of friendship and valid business motives.

He concludes his clever commercial article by asking another question without the words: Do you get the order, or do you just get a promise?—Silent Partner Magazine.

THINKS WELL OF BROOKS

The Evening Times is in receipt of the following strong recommendation, but of which this paper is in no way responsible. It is the opinion of an admirer of Mr. Brooks and is as follows:

Taxpayers take noticce and vote for James H. Brooks, for mayor. His election will mean money in the taxpayer's pocket. He is a man well qualified for the position and, if chosen, I believe he will give us a good, clean administration and will not be bulldozed by any person or persons. He will use his own judgment and devote his entire time to the office.

THE BUSINESS OF LIFE.

Our business is to make the most of this great and beautiful experiment of living, to leave behind us flowers for beauty and fruit for use, to make our life a harmony, our ending a serenity and our awaking an eternal joy.—Hobbs.

HAS 'EM THINKING.

St. Albans Freak Has Established a Record as Climber.

St. Albans, Vt.—W. L. Plumley of North Clarendon has a freak dog whose specialty is climbing. The highest climb he ever made was thirty-two feet. Veterinarians and others who have examined the dog's feet are at a loss to understand how he grips a tree trunk in climbing.

His nails are like those of the ordinary dog, though possibly a trifle more pointed, and the fleshy pads of his feet are perhaps a little broader.

So accustomed to height is the dog that he sleeps in tree branches twenty feet above the ground. He is three years old and part pug and part bull.

Tart Repartee.

Of Sir William Harcourt, Disraeli once said in his affectedly cynical way, "He has the three essential qualifications of success in politics—a fine person, a loud voice and no principles."

To this when it was repeated to him Harcourt rejoined, "Leaving out the first two qualifications, it might almost be applied to 'Dizzy' himself."

Keeping Ham Moist.

Ham may be kept from getting hard and dry on the outside thus: Take some of the fat part and fry it out. Let it get hard; then spread it on the cut end of the ham half an inch thick. This excludes air. Hang in a cool place. Before slicing the ham scrape off this fat and spread it on afterward, as before.

The Tailor Who Paid Too Much

By HERBERT KAUFMAN

Author of "Do Something! Be Something!"

I WAS buying a cigar last week when a man dropped into the shop and after making a purchase told the proprietor that he had started a clothes shop around the corner and quoted him prices, with the assurance of best garments and terms.

After he left the cigar man turned to me and said:

"Enterprising fellow, that, he'll get along."

"But he won't," I replied, "and, furthermore, I'll wager you that he hasn't the sort of clothes shop that will enable him to."

"What made you think that?" queried the man behind the counter.

"His theories are wrong," I explained; "he's relying upon word of mouth publicity to build up his business and he can't interview enough individuals to compete with a merchant who has sense enough to say the same things he told you, to a thousand men, while he is telling it to one. Besides, his method of advertising is too expensive. Suppose he sees a hundred persons every day. First of all, he is robbing his business of its necessary direction and besides, he is spending too much to reach every man he solicits."

"I don't quite follow you."

"Well, as the proprietor of a clothes shop his own time is so valuable that I am very conservative in my estimate when I put the cost of his soliciting at five cents a head.

"Now, if he were really able and clever he would discover that he can talk to thousands of people at a tenth of a cent per individual. There is not a newspaper in town the advertising rate of which is $1.00 per thousand circulation, for a space big enough in which to display what he said to you."

"I never looked at it that way," said the cigar man.

It's only "the man who hasn't looked at it that way," who hesitates for an instant over the advisability and profitableness of newspaper publicity.

Newspaper advertising is the cheapest channel of communication ever established by man. A thousand letters with one-cent stamps, will easily cost fifteen dollars and not one envelope in ten will be opened because the very postage is an invitation to the waste-basket.

If there were anything cheaper rest assured that the greatest merchants in America would not spend individual sums ranging up to half a million dollars a year and over, upon this form of attracting trade.

European War Does Not Curtail Music

By Gustav A. Judd, Berlin, Germany

In some parts of the country the European war has injured almost every industry and profession, and music has suffered just as other lines, but generally war makes little difference to music. The war, of course, has taken away many musicians, but there are bands and orchestras abundant in all the cities of Europe. It is not only in the trenches where music stirs, but in the cities it has done more to stir patriotism than anything else. Everybody knows that. The people cannot get along without music. That is why I am an optimist.

The United States after the war doubtless will be the great music center of the world. It is true that we have to turn to the old world for our greatest musicians, particularly pianists, but Americans are learning, and in time some great pianists will be developed. There are some great musical organizations in this country. London has no such orchestra as the one in Boston, and probably the only one that surpasses it is in Berlin.

There was a time when the musician affected long hair, as if to prove his ability, but that time has passed. A musician must have temperament, of course, but temperament does not cause insanity or eccentricity, necessarily. The musician must be intellectual. It takes three or four generations to make a great instrumentalist.

Those who criticize the most when the weather is disagreeable have little praise to offer when a day calling for joy and thanksgiving bursts forth from heaven.

CANALS WILL PAY OWN WAY

State Is Obligated to Pay Whole Amount and if Not Provided by Bond Issue Must Be Raised by Direct Tax.

Why is it necessary to provide so large a sum as $27,000,000, in addition to the $101,000,000 already provided and expended?

Although the most careful estimates were made by a board consisting of the most competent engineers in the country, in order to provide for every possible contingency and expenditure, the sum of $101,000,000 has proved to be inadequate. But the actual cost of the work of construction has been within the original estimate of such engineers.

The shortage has arisen mainly from decisions of the courts which placed upon the state obligations which could not be foreseen or estimated. These include awards for land damages amounting to over $11,000,000. For this item the most expert information in 1903 provided only $3,000,000. They include the cost of railroad bridges, which in 1903 the act provided should be paid by the railroad, but the court has decided that the state must bear this cost of over $8,000,000 more.

They also include large amounts for riparian rights on the canals, for which no estimate was included because such riparian rights were believed to depend upon revocable permits, but the courts have held that the state must make compensation for such privileges which have been revoked, and also for water rights. They also include the additional cost of locks which were lengthened [illegible] twenty-eight feet to forty-five feet at an additional cost of $2,500,000.

The economy and fidelity with which the whole work has been conducted are illustrated by the fact that of the $200,000 appropriated for the original surveys and estimates of cost in 1900 only $154,000 was expended and $46,000 reverted to the general fund of the state.

It must be also borne in mind that the Erie canal paid into the state treasury over $43,000,000 profit over and above the cost of its original construction and including its improvement, operation, maintenance and repairs down to 1883, when tolls were abolished.

Failed to Catch the Tune.

A professor in an old Pennsylvania college was conducting a review in Latin. Of a sleepy looking youth he asked the question, "What construction is that at the top of page 12?"

"I don't know," was the prompt reply.

"Why not?" thundered the professor. "I have been harping on that construction all term."

"I know you have, professor," was the soft reply, "but I haven't caught the tune yet."

FIFTEEN YEAR HUNT TO END.

Captain C. E. Farrand's Widow to Be Declared Legally Dead.

Denver.—Mrs. May Spencer Farrand, second wife of the late Captain Charles E. Farrand, U. S. A., retired, who mysteriously disappeared fifteen years ago, may soon be declared legally dead in order that the captain's estate may be settled. The only heir the attorneys for the estate have been able to find is Mrs. Louise A. Ryder of New York city, daughter of Captain Farrand by his first marriage.

A nation wide but futile search has been made for Mrs. Farrand for fifteen years by war department officials, federal secret service men and attorneys, since she left Arvada, a Denver suburb, shortly after her husband's death. Neither relatives nor friends have since heard from her.

"Unless Mrs. Farrand is found in a few weeks, Public Administrator Woodward said, "she will have to be declared legally dead, and the captain's fortune will go to the only heir we have been able to locate, but if she is found half of the fortune will go to her."

Developer of Pitchers.

If nothing else is absolutely proved by this year of baseball at least one thing will be established as almost undeniable in any quarter—Wilbert Robinson is the greatest developer and handler of pitchers in the game today if not the greatest of all time. The Brooklyn manager now has a pitching staff for his Dodgers that outclasses any other in the National league and that compares at least even up with the powerful hurling corps of the Red Sox and White Sox, which represent the class of the American circuit in this line. At the beginning of the current season the Dodgers' pitching strength was the most problematical element to be found anywhere in the field of sixteen clubs that faced the barrier. Robby has developed them into stars.

Bender Hopes to Come Back.

"Chief" Bender, the Athletics' ex-star pitcher, who has been released by the Baltimore Federals, declares that he has plenty of good pitching left in him and that he will come back.

Whether he will play again this season Bender does not know, but it is likely that he will rest until next spring. Bender refuses to "alibi" his release from the Baltimore Federal league team, but admits he had a poor year.

"I have never tried to alibi a defeat or a failure of any sort, and I won't start now. I had a bad season with a bad ball team, but don't think that I am through. I still have several years of good pitching left in me, and I will be back."

Gardner, Champion Golfer.

The amateur golf championship of the United States went to the west again, after several years' stay in the east, when Robert A. Gardner of the Hinsdale (Ill.) Country club, a former Yale golfer and world's champion pole vaulter, defeated John G. Anderson of the Siwanoy Country club of Mount Vernon, N. Y., in the final match at Detroit, Mich. The margin of victory was 5 up and 4 to play. Gardner achieved national recognition as a golfer in 1909, when he won the amateur championship from Chandler Egan of Chicago at Wheaton, Ill.

Mrs. John Stanton, Middleville, N. Y., says that during the past winter her little girl used a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy and that it cured her of bronchitis. "Prior to her taking this medicine she coughed dreadfully for two weeks, and I was unable to give her anything to relieve her until I began giving her Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. A few doses of it checked the cough, and since taking one bottle of it she has been perfectly well." thy Crouse of Syracuse, cousins of the bride, wore white net dresses and carried bouquets in paper casings.

The ribbon bearers, Charles Tooke of Skaneateles and Forrest G. Weeks, Jr., of Syracuse, also cousins of the bride, wore white knickerbockers with navy blue Norfolks.

The ushers Messrs Fred A. Plumb and Frank Phelps of Syracuse wore button hole bouquets of lilies of the volley. The groom and the bride's father wore white gardenias. Mr. Donald Capin of Syracuse acted as best man.

The bride's mother, Mrs. H. Lester Paddock, wore a handsome gown, en train, of silver blue with silver and gold brocade, and carried lavender and yellow orchids.

Mrs. John Ash, the groom's mother, wore a gown of orchid pink, entrain, and carried yellow ward rosebuds.

Binning's orchestra of Syracuse played the wedding march from Lohengrin at the conclusion of the ceremony.

The dining room was decorated with yellow chrysanthemums, and the bridal party's table was arranged in the breakfast room which was decorated with green foliage and white cactus dahlias. A huge wedding cake, heart shaped, in the centre of which was a bouquet of white bride's roses, occupied the center of the table.

The third floor was attractive with autumn foliage and where later in the evening trap drums furnished music for dancing. In one corner of the room the costly gifts were displayed and among them was a deed of a house and lot, the future home of the bride and groom, in Highland street together with a complete list of furnishings.

Mr. and Mrs. Ash after returning from an extended trip will be at home on November 15. Mr. Ash, who is a graduate of Syracuse University, College of Applied Science, and formerly connected with the Syracuse Crucible Steel Works will take up his duties as secretary of the Oswego Falls Pulp and Paper Co., of this city.

FARMERS, LOOK OUT FOR THE SWINDLERS

Newspapers are warning farmers in Central New York to beware of a clever gang of swindlers who have Get Rich Quick Wallingford stopped many miles. They operate a skin game which is original and which for that reason is successful where it has been tried.

The farmers who have had experience the gang, which consists of three men, appear at the home of a farmer in a fine big touring car, looking the picture of real genuine money.

One of the bunch introduces himself as a real estate broker and the others as western millionaires bent on purchasing some eastern farms. The place in question is inspected and proves to be just the one they wanted. The farmer grins and names his price which is a good high one, but this fact does not worry the millionaires, who simply say, "alright what is a thousand or so anyway?" and produce their check books and draw a check on a bank West of the Mississippi. The deed is written and signed by the farmer and handed the purchaser but here the broker steps in.

He announces that he wants his commission on the sale at once and if not he will not let the sale go through. He has debts to pay and all of the other things which would cause a man to want money. The farmer begins to fear that perhaps he will not be able to sell the farm but then he sees a way clear and proposes to give the broker his personal check for the amount. This proves satisfactory and the trio drive away still smoking their big cigars. The farmer gloats over his bargain and turns in his check at the bank but what is his surprise to receive word in a day or two that it is no good and he is out the amount of the broker's commission.

50 VETS LEFT OF WEBB'S BRIGADE

Governor Whitman Visably Affected As He Speaks to Remnant of Brigade at Gettysbuig.

Gettysburg, Pa.—Fifty veterans of General Alexander Stewart Webb's brigade, all of those remaining who were physically fit to attend, were present on the Gettysburg battle field yesterday to witness the unveiling of New York State's monument to their commander.

Governor Whitman, who addressed the New York and Pennsylvania veterans present, was visibly affected by the scene, as was Colonel Andrew Cowan, who commanded the First New York Independent Battery of Artillery and fought at General Webb's side.

On the spot where his brigade and the Pennsylvania veterans successfully turned back General Pickett's charge the heroic bronze statue stands on its pedestal. One hundred yards to the west is the "Bloody Angle," deemed by historians the turning point of the rebellion.

Colonel Lewis R. Stegman, after speaking of General Webb from the viewpoint of a comrade, introduced Governor Whitman, who, in his address, said:—

"Thousands of young men, even many in middle life in New York, will hardly recognize in the stern, set face and heroic figure, clad in the uniform of a major general, his right hand firmly clasping the sword hilt, the dignified kindly, scholarly instructor who for so many years was the president of the College of the City of New York, who with his splendid qualities of mind and heart impressed his wonderful personality upon a great number of our citizens, graduates of that institution, in whose lives and in whose hearts he lives and ever will live.

"General Webb was the son of a soldier and the grandson of a soldier. His grandfather was wounded in the battle of Bunker Hill. Against a savage foe on our then Western frontier his father defended the flag and the liberty, the civilization and the enlightment which the flag embodies and represents.

"Gettysburg has offered for the emulation of succeeding generations many a shining example of all that is highest and best in American manhood. Among them all there is no name more worthy of remembrance than that of the man whose loyalty and patroitism never wavered during all the darkest hours of the nation's life, whose steadfast and untiring devotion to duty as a soldier and a citizen ceased only with his death, the man whom the State of New York is proud to own as her son, in whose honor today she gives this statue to Gettysburg and to the nation."

Other speakers were General Horatio C. King, of New York; General James W. Latta, of Pennsylvania; Colonel Andrew Cowan, of New York and Dr. J. G. R. Miller of Philadelphia.

The monument was designed by J. Massey Hind, of New York. The statue, eight feet high, is of bronze, with a granite pedestal ten feet high.

EDUCATIONAL WORK HELPS IN INTELLIGENT CARE OF TEETH

Importance of Healthy Conditions More Generally Realized—Home Treatment Imperative

As a result of educational efforts along the line of dental clinics in the larger cities, surprisingly gratifying results are being achieved in promoting general health and preserving the teeth of men, women and children, according to Dr. John Benz, president of the Benz Manufacturing Company, producers of Dr. Benz Tooth Paste.

Dr. Benz has done much to aid in this educational campaign, realizing as he does that the welfare of mankind depends in large measure upon the condition of the teeth, which require greater consideration and care than often are given to them.

"Food masticated with poor teeth and tainted by infected gums becomes impregnated with bacteria, which frequently are the cause of stomach trouble and all kinds of ailments. The mouth presents conditions highly favorable to the development and rapid multiplication of dangerous germs, flourishing in the debris of different kinds of food, collecting in about the teeth, unless carefully removed.

"The teeth being largely composed of lime, any acid long remaining in contact with them, erodes the surface, finally softening and destroying the structure. One of the most injurious agents is candy or other sweets, used to excess. These in fermenting generate acid, usually of a destructive nature.

"Much can be done for the teeth by regular treatment at home with a preparation such as that manufactured by our company. It is essential, however, that a dentist be visited at least once in six months. Too often people defer these visits until driven to them by pain; and then in many cases, conditions are such that remedial measures are impossible."

Dr. Benz Tooth-Paste is a scientific preparation, embodying the latest discoveries in dental science. It removes tartar, prevents decay, hardens the gums and makes the teeth pearly white. It is germicidal and antiseptic, and leaves a delightful flavor in the mouth. Once used, none other will satisfy.

PAPER COMPANY WINS ITS CASE

Opinion Filed in U. S. District Court Awards Claim Against the Hunter Arms Company.

Judge Ray sitting in Utica has allowed the claim of the Hunter Brothers Paper company against the Hunter Arms, company. The opinion has been filed in Utica and the claim amounts to $59,000 and interest from July 15, 1913. The suit was brought by the late Arvin Rice as trustee and he was represented by E. J. Mizen of Oswego. Two Norwich attorneys represented the Hunter Arms company.

The situation is about as follows:

The dispute over the claim grew out of the bonds of the Hunter Brothers Paper company. Bonds to the amount of $82,000 were sold with which to erect a paper mill. The money was handed over to the Hunter Arms company whose directors were the same as those in the Hunter Brothers Paper Company. They decided not to build the mill at that time and then made a loan of the money to the Battle Island Paper company, which was partially owned by the Hunters, and of which Thomas Hunter was president. The transactions were fully known to all three companies, says Judge Ray, and there was no intentional fraud on the holders of the bonds. The transactions were largely a matter of bookkeeping, which Judge Ray holds was not sufficient to free the Hunter Arms company from its responsibility.

"There can be no question," says the opinion, "the intent and purpose of those managing, controlling and conducting the business and financial affairs of these three corporations were to release the Hunter Arms company from its liability to the Hunter Brothers Paper company to the extent of $75,000 create an indebtedness of the Battle Island Paper company to the Hunter Brothers Paper company in the amount and reduce the indebtedness of the said Battle Island Paper company to the Hunter Arms company in the said amount."

FULTON HAS TWO HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO UNION MEN

The State Industrial Commission bulletin just issued shows that this city is not a strong labor union centre. While the date of the bulletin is of Sept. 30, 1914, it is fair to assume that no increase in the number of union men here can be noted.

Upon the date mentioned there were in this city:

Barbers	30
Bartenders	42
Bricklayers and Masons	34
Carpenters and joiners	40
Cigar makers	24
Letter carriers	9
Painters and decorators	31
Paper and pulp workers	40
Sheet metal workers (building)	12
Total	262

There were on the same date in New York State 2,617 labor organizations with 595,824 members. This was a decrease of twenty-six in the number or organizations and of more than 69,000 in membership as compared with the corresponding date one year previous. There were 182 new organizations formed during the year but these were more than offset by a loss of 208 organizations (174 lapses and thirty-four amalgamations).

MUSIC LOVERS HERE GOING TO OSWEGO NOVEMBER 4th

The announcement that the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, Josef Stransky, conductor, and Francis Macmillen, violinist, are to appear at the Richardson Theatre, Oswego, on Thursday, November 4th, has already aroused great enthusiasm among the musicians of this city. It is without an exception the greatest musical attraction that has ever been offered theatregoers of this vicinity.

Mr. Macmillen alone is considered a great attraction. He is to give a series of recitals in Aeolian Hall, New York city, the first of which will take place on October 25th, and two days after the opening date had been announced the entire seating capacity of the hall had been sold.

LUCK

Is just another name for good, hard, persistent plugging. Luck is with the merchant who Advertises, not because he advertises, but because he keeps on advertising indefinitely --- Which Means Success.

YOUR SUCCESS

Means the success of your town. Now, honestly, are you doing what you can for your town? Are you "A Herald of Progress"? Do you realize that by doing what you can—which means as much or more than you are doing now, you will be helping yourself—Which Means Success.

If you cannot now be placed where you belong, it is time to right about face, read the words by Ella Wheeler Wilcox, and say to the publishers of your home newspapers—

"I'LL DO WHAT I CAN"

Who takes for his motto "I'll do what I can,"
Shall be better the world as he goes down life's hill;
The willing young heart makes the capable man.
And who does what he can, oft can do what he will,
There's strength in the impulse to help things along,
And forces undreamed of will come to the aid
Of one who, tho' weak, yet believes he is strong,
And offers himself to the task unafraid.

"I'll do what I can" is a challenge to fate,
And fate must succumb when it's put to the test;
A heart that is willing to labor and wait
In its tussle with life ever comes out the best;
It puts the blue imps of depression to route
And makes many difficult problems seem plain,
It mounts over obstacles, dissipates doubt,
And unravels kinks in life's curious chain.

"I'll do what I can" keeps the progress machine
In good working order as centuries roll;
And civilization would perish, I ween,
Were not those words written on many a soul,
They fell the great forests, they furrow the soil,
They seek new inventions to benefit man,
They fear no exertion, make pastime of toil—
Oh, great is earth's debt to "I'll do what I can."

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

The Verdict

A Trick of Fate That Sent a Man to His Doom

By CLARENCE JAMES FLEMING

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

The white haired judge paused.

For an instant the courtroom was hushed, breathless, like an ominous calm before an electric storm, a stillness so intense and oppressive that it tried the overwrought sensibilities of the principals and even had its effect on the curious mass of morbid humanity which completely filled the historic old courtroom and overflowed into the broad corridor beyond. Then the silence was broken:

"May God direct and control your verdict."

With these low, solemn words the judge finished his charge to the jury and left the fate of James Stanley Black in their hands.

The jurors silently filed into the jury room, and a court attendant touched the prisoner on the arm.

Without a parting glance at the array of lawyers who had been laboring in his defense and apparently unconscious of the spectators who stood up in their places and stared in his direction, Black arose and followed the officer from the room.

When he reached his cell he threw himself down on the hard wooden bench and sat staring at the floor.

His appearance now was a marked contrast to that shown in the courtroom.

During the many weeks of the trial he had appeared day after day a calm, confident, aggressive business man, and the legal proceedings seemed to be mere detail.

But here in the dimly lighted, vault-like room, beyond the gaze of the curious public, he was off his guard, and the ghastly pallor of his cheeks and the deep black circles under his eyes showed the effect of the daily grilling he had gone through.

For a long time he sat in a deep, dejected study. He was worried, desperately worried, for he realised that his only hope for freedom lay with the jury, which was even now deciding his fate.

If they found him innocent he was free, but if they decided against him he was doomed—doomed to serve a long term in state prison.

Heretofore he had laughed at the law, for he had learned from experience that money could whitewash most misdeeds, but now it was different.

He had been caught juggling with the funds of a national bank, and the federal authorities were determined to make an example of him.

He was awakened from his morbid thoughts by the entry of Colonel Baker, his lifelong friend and chief counsel.

After a few minutes' conversation the colonel prepared to leave.

"Better lie down and try to get a little rest," he advised, "for we expect a verdict before midnight."

"Will you be allowed to see me again tonight?" queried the imprisoned financier.

"Not unless a verdict is reached."

"It's going to be mighty hard sitting here all evening without some word of how the jury stands," protested Black.

"THERE ARE ALWAYS RUMORS," CONTINUED THE PRISONER.

The colonel looked enigmatically at his client.

"There are always rumors," continued the prisoner, "and I want to be kept informed."

"Impossible."

"Not if you follow a plan I have thought out," explained the financier as he motioned for the attorney to come over to the iron barred window.

"See that alley," pointing out of the window toward a small areaway leading from the rear of the jail to a main thoroughfare beyond.

The colonel nodded his head.

"Isn't that directly in back of your office?"

"Yes, that second doorway leads into our building."

"Good. Arrange to have a lantern placed there tonight; a white light if the jury is favorable and a red light if otherwise."

"Good scheme," acknowledged the attorney. "I'll arrange with the watchman to look after the lights, and I sincerely hope he will need but one lantern—the white."

For a long time after the attorney's departure Black carefully thought over the case, searching his mind for the weak spots in his defense and going over the strong, damaging points his prosecutor had made.

Finally the prisoner went to the window and stood with his face close to the heavy iron bars and peered out into the night.

At 8 o'clock a wavering white light appeared in the alleyway, and with eager eyes he watched it swing backward and forward, then stop and remain stationary.

The pure white light warmed his heart—the rumors were favorable.

Humming a lively tune, he turned away and started gathering together his books, papers and few belongings which he would take home with him, for it would not be long now until he was free.

The packing finished, he again strolled over to the window and looked out.

The light had disappeared.

No; there it was, but now a dull, sullen red.

Perspiration burst from his pores, and he quivered in every nerve as he groped his way back to the bed.

The weeks of mental worry, like a slow poison or a wasting sickness, had steadily but surely undermined his system, and now when hope, the greatest tonic of all, had gone he collapsed.

His head was racked with shooting pains, the straining eyeballs seemed to be bursting from their sockets, and he could not think rationally. His mind was forever going off on some wild, demoniacal tangent.

His breath came in painful gasps, he was stifled, suffocating, and he had an insane, maddening desire to shriek. Then came an attack of dizziness. He fainted.

Slowly the wretched man regained consciousness.

First there was a restless twitching of the facial muscles, then the eyelids quivered and opened.

Mechanically he raised himself on one elbow, and his dazed orbs peered around the cell, gradually picking out the familiar objects. Then, like the lifting of a curtain, came memory, and what a memory!

Like the fantasy of a terrible nightmare, he lived over his past life.

Vague, shadowy forms, people of his distorted mind, victims of his business career, appeared and swept along in a gibbering, mocking review.

A nameless awe came over him as he reviewed this weird, uncanny assembly of phantasms, for during the years of his mad struggle for success he had never stopped to think of the many he had ruined, businesses he had wrecked, and all to further his own ends.

The people who had opposed him never seemed real; he had thought of them only as obstacles, barriers that must be overcome, pushed aside or crushed.

Even his transactions at the bank were not those of common theft. It was true he had speculated with the depositors' money, but that was only high finance. Others did it every day, only they were not found out, and he was.

His mind wandered back to the days of his childhood—of his mother.

How proud she had been of his success! How she had mothered him and fussed over him even when he was a full grown up man, and then her death!

How thankful he was that she had not lived to feel his disgrace, for it would not be long until he was branded a criminal; then prison, where he would no longer be a man, but a number, a thing in striped clothes.

The hardship of penal servitude did not worry him as much as that thought of what life would mean after he had served his sentence.

He would be a broken, old man, a jailbird, and even his wealth could not protect him from ridicule and distrust.

Then from the inner fastness of his mind came the thought that he was not convicted yet and that every man is assumed to be innocent until proved guilty.

Eagerly his mind caught at the words—innocent until proved guilty. He repeated them over and over in a low, thoughtful undertone.

A change came over the tortured prisoner, his body stiffened and his eyes glittered with a new purpose.

If he should die now before sentence was pronounced he would not go down in history as a convicted criminal, but in the eyes of the law an innocent man.

He was face to face with two alternatives—

Prison—or—suicide!

In those few short seconds he had made his choice—death!

The snuffing out of his life would mean but a few seconds of suffering, while prison would mean a life of misery.

His mind was made up. He would end it all.

He reached into an inner pocket and pulled out a small package of powders that had been given him by his physician to ward off sleepless nights, but, unknown to the doctor or the jailers, Black had slipped a different powder into one of the tissue folders.

This particular powder was marked with a black cross.

With trembling fingers he poured out a glass of water, into which he emptied the white, chalklike substance.

Suddenly the very air seemed to be surcharged with life, lights appeared in the court wing beyond, then the sound of voices and the hurrying of feet.

A verdict had been reached.

He arose unsteadily to his feet and peered out of the window. The red light was still there. He crawled back to bed.

He clutched the fatal glass and raised it to his lips.

He had reached the Rubicon—the river of black, mysterious waters, which separate the real from the great, awful beyond.

His soul hesitated on the brink, sending a chill of doubt into his heart.

Would the fatal plunge mean complete extinction of life, absolute annihilation, or would the resurrection beyond the veil reveal greater trials, greater sorrows?

Slowly the poison was lowered from the trembling lips.

He didn't want to die. There must be some other way.

If he could only escape!

But it was too late, for he could hear the sound of heavy footsteps in the corridor beyond. They were coming for him now.

His features grew cruel and hard as he listened to the steps drawing nearer and nearer.

With a grating snarl he swore they would never get him in that courtroom again.

Again he reached for the fatal glass.

Back, back, warned the soul, but its feeble suggestion was drowned out by the mad waves of thought that surged through the weakened mind, crying:

SLOWLY THE POISON WAS LOWERED FROM THE TREMBLING LIPS.

"End it all! End it all! End it all!"

Slowly the glass was raised to the quivering lips.

The soul again peered into the black cloud of uncertainty, only to encounter a monstrous, quivering thing, shrouded in the habiliments of the grave, a body and yet not a body, a phantom and yet not a phantom, an apparition and not an apparition, and with a low, moaning sigh surrendered to the arch enemy of all mankind, the cloven footed angel of the bottomless pit—despair.

With an encouraging chuckle Despair reached out its sable clad arm and motioned the wretch to drink.

The man still hesitated.

With a savage, impatient gesture Despair rent asunder the curtain of what might be.

Instantly the interior of the courtroom appeared before the prisoner's eyes, the judge on the bench, the jury filing into their places and himself in the prisoner's box.

Then came the judge's question:

"Gentlemen of the jury, have you reached a verdict?"

"We have, your honor," announced the foreman, rising in his place.

"What say you, guilty or not guilty?"

The poor wretch's fingers tightened around the tumbler as he stared at the picture of the foreman's stern features. He knew the worst had happened.

With a low, terror stricken groan he tilted the glass and drained the poison to the dregs.

The fiery liquid gurgled down his throat. He fell back.

The slow, measured tread in the corridor without was joined by another, quicker and lighter.

Both stopped in front of the cell door, the key was turned and Colonel Baker hurried into the cell.

He saw the body stretched out on the bed, apparently asleep.

"Get up!" he called.

But the man on the bed did not hear. He was beyond the control of any human verdict or punishment!

Instantly the colonel surmised what had happened. He leaned down and put his hand over the financier's heart.

"Dead!" he said to the officer.

Then he looked out of the window and, without a word of explanation, rushed from the cell and out into the night.

There in the alleyway stood an automobile—Black's own touring car, which had been ordered to take him home.

The rear of the car was toward the prison window, and the red tail light glowed like a ball of fire!

Beyond, and completely hidden by the body of the machine, was the white lantern on the doorstep.

"The verdict from which there is no appeal," shuddered the attorney as he turned and walked slowly back to the courtroom.

Little Boy Who Won a Prize In a Baby Parade.

© by American Press Association.

Clifford A. Halstead is the name of the little boy herewith pictured. Clifford lives in New Jersey, and he recently won a prize at the annual baby parade held at Asbury Park. He represents Cupid, the god of love, and his costume, or lack of it, was considered the best in the fifth division of the famous baby carnival. Twenty-five years ago Asbury Park held its first baby parade, and as this was the quarter century anniversary a special effort was made to eclipse all that had preceded it. Everybody who was present said that the affair was the best that they had ever seen. There were hundreds of babies in line, and each was out for the prize. As said before, Clifford won in his division, but it is doubtful if he appreciated the compliment. He doesn't appear exactly at his ease. His mother, however, was very proud.

Importance of Little Things.

A friend once called upon Michelangelo while he was finishing a statue. Some time afterward he called again. The sculptor was still at the same work. His friend, looking at the figure, exclaimed, "You have been idle since I saw you last!"

"By no means," answered Angelo. "I have retouched the statue here and polished it there. I have softened this feature and brought out this muscle. I have given more expression to the lip and more energy to the limb."

"But," said his friend, "these are all trifles."

"It may be so," replied Angelo, "but remember that trifles make perfection and perfection is no trifle."

Conundrums.

Why is a steam engine at a fire an anomaly? Because it works and plays at the same time.

What word of five letters is it, of which two being removed, only one will remain? St-one.

Why is a fly taller than most men? Because he stands over six feet without shoes or stockings.

Why should a false friend never leave his house? Because you might look in and "find him out."

When is a man hospitable and a cheat at the same time? When he takes you in.

Why is a divinity student like a merchant? Because he studies the prophets (profits).

Boston.

The following amusing game is called "Boston." Any number of persons may play this game. Every one must sit in a ring and then receive a number. One player is put in the middle of the circle and blindfolded; then she calls any two numbers, according to the numbers in the game. The two persons whose numbers were called should change seats before the one who is blindfolded can get to the seats. If the one in the center calls "Boston," every one should change their seats, and the one in the center should try to get a seat.

Persimmons.

Aquila Porcupine one day
Met Peter Possum by the way;
The latter seemed in haste, for he
Was going toward the 'simmon tree.

"Oh, have you heard," said Peter P.,
"What luscious fruit grows on yon tree?
The frost we had on yester night
Will make the 'simmons taste just right.

"To fill my basket I have come
To feed the little chaps at home,
And I must hurry, for I'm late."
And so the two improved their gait.

When Peter scampered up the tree
And shook the 'simmons—one, two, three—
Aquila stayed upon the ground
And ate the best that could be found.

At last, when Peter did descend,
He scarcely recognized his friend,
For on the end of every spine
Was stuck a 'simmon, large and fine.

To eat them all he'd vainly tried,
Then rolled himself on every side,
Till scarce a plum could Peter see
For [illegible].

BABIES AND SUFFRAGE.

Governor Whitman Says They Go Together.

Visitors to the Macbeth galleries in New York comment on the predominance of babies among the subjects shown in the art exhibition for the suffrage cause. Babies and very young children fairly overrun the galleries.

Further evidence that babies and suffrage go together was afforded by the baby parade at Yonkers. Five hundred babies, a company of militia, a chamber of commerce and some brigades of boy scouts marched between two solid lines of suffrage yellow when the baby parade welcomed Governor Whitman on Yonkers day.

"Which is it, governor," remarked some one, "a baby parade or a suffrage parade?"

"They go together," the governor replied.

What Arizona Women Have Done.

Since the women of Arizona have been given the ballot they have used their influence in assisting to reduce municipal expenses in the towns throughout the state. They have been instrumental in rushing forward the parking of the entire state with fine roads. They have installed in all towns and cities drinking fountains, rest rooms and public comfort stations, where the women from the country can bring their children, feed them and have them cared for without expense while they do their shopping. Public band stands have been established in the parks. The Hon. George U. Young, mayor of Phoenix, Ariz., says that if the men were called upon to grant the right of the ballot over again to women tomorrow there would not be a single intelligent vote raised in opposition. The women have proved their worth.

THE PROTECTED SEX.

Striking Contrast Shown in Suffrage States and In Connecticut.

Equal guardianship took a forward step in Idaho this year. Now 58 per cent of the equal suffrage states give mothers and fathers equal shares in the control of their children. Illinois has voted a red light injunction and abatement act within the past few weeks, raising to 66 2-3 per cent the full suffrage states adopting this measure. Also in two-thirds of the woman suffrage states a wife now owns her own earnings. In all but two equal suffrage states no girl under eighteen may consent to her own ruin. Gains in all these branches of humanitarian legislation have come about within the past year where women vote.

The legislature of Connecticut, which refused equal suffrage to women in 1914-15, also killed every bill aimed to improve the condition of women. It refused to take the first step toward submitting a suffrage amendment to voters. It refused to give women the right to vote on the liquor business question. It turned down their pleas for $20,000 to establish a reformatory for women. It refused to pass a bill establishing a state farm for drunkards, to protect unfortunate wives and children. It refused even to debate raising the age of consent or a bill aimed to curb commercialized vice. And last of all it refused in any way to help destitute widowed mothers or their children.

Cupid and the Vote.

For the half year ending July 1 Los Angeles, Cal., made a new high record on marriages. For a year June of 1914 had enjoyed the distinction of being the most astonishing month for weddings, with 925 to its credit, but June of 1915 topped it with 930.

MAY LOSE CITIZENSHIP.

Status of Baltimoreans Fighting in Europe Is In Doubt.

Baltimore.—A question of law may arise if the young Baltimoreans now fighting in Europe, John Poe, John Sydney Hewell, Alexander Godby and Martin D. Monaghan, attempt to return to their native land. It is held by the department of labor that by taking up arms they have expatriated themselves. This was the finding in the case of Frank Caswell of Harrison, Me., a trooper of the Canadian contingent, who attempted to come home, but was held up by the authorities on the ground that he had ceased to be a citizen of the United States.

Local officials declare that a different light may be thrown on the subject when it becomes known under just what conditions these young Baltimoreans enlisted. If they swore allegiance to the flag under which they aspired to fight they of course ceased to be citizens of the United States, but there appears to be doubt as to just what the foreign powers exact of their recruits.

Their Way.

"In the west formerly they had quite a telephonic way of handling men who dealt in stolen horses."

"How was it telephonic?"

"They hung up the receiver."—Baltimore American.

Easy & Practical Home Dress Making Lessons

Prepared Especially For This Newspaper by Pictorial Review

TO MODERNIZE LAST SEASON'S FROCK.

Last year's frock may be modernized most effectively in duplication of this model. Chiffon poplin is recommended for a new frock.

Taking last year's frock, fussing it up and bringing it strictly up to date is no easy matter when one considers the great difference between the modes of last season and this. The accompanying model may be copied with good effect in making over an old dress. For the skirt, last year's tunic may be used, and if the latter is not quite wide enough applied tucks may be added above the hem, as these make the skirt hang in folds and simulate extra width. If it is necessary to gain length as well as width a band of satin may be added at the bottom.

Last season's waist may serve as an underblouse with the addition of a satin overblouse. Or, the old waist may be entirely discarded and an entirely new one made of satin or velvet. Fancy silk, organdy, batiste or any sheer material may be used for the vest and collar.

If made of entirely new material, chiffon poplin is suggested, the only contrasting material being the silk gauze which forms vest and collar. In medium misses' size the costume requires 4½ yards 44-inch material with ⅝ yard of gauze.

Begin by making the underbody. Turn under front edge of front on slot perforations for an underfacing. Close under-arm and shoulder seams as notched. Face convertible collar and sew to neck edge, notches, center-backs and front edges even. Pleat lower edge of underbody, bringing "T" to corresponding small "o" perforations and stitch. Stitch belting two inches wide underneath lower edge of underbody for a stay.

Next, close center-back seam of skirt from large "O" perforation to lower edge; finish edges above for opening. Turn hem at lower edge on double small "oo" perforations. If desired, stitch straight or bias bands of material three inches wide on skirt along crosslines of single small "o" perforations. Gather upper edge of skirt between double "TT" perforations. Adjust to position on underbody, stitching gathers in skirt two inches above lower edge of underbody, center-fronts and center-backs even, small "o" perforation in skirt at under-arm seam; stitch tape under gathers in skirt (on left side) from center-front to center-back, and finish for a closing.

Now, close under-arm and shoulder seams of waist as notched. Turn hem in front at notches. Gather lower edge of waist between double "TT" perforations. Sew front and back bands to lower edge of waist, center-fronts, center-backs and notches even; large "O" perforations indicate center-front.

Take up dart in collar as perforated. Face and sew to neck edge as notched.

Finally, pleat, placing "T" on corresponding small "o" perforations. Close seam as notched. Sew in armhole as notched, easing in any fulness, small "o" perforation at shoulder seam.

Woman's World

A Suffragist Refugee Tells of Woman's Position In Poland.

MME. MABEL STRUSINSKA.

Mme. Strusinska is a Pole, a native of Warsaw, who lived in Lemberg, Galicia, until her home was destroyed and many of her relatives killed in the capture of the city by the Austro-German army. Then she escaped to England. But although she is really a Russian citizen by reason of her residence in Lemberg, she is a subject of Austria and had to travel under an Austrian passport.

Under the circumstances she was, of course, persona non grata in London. She was put under police surveillance and was obliged to live within what is known as the five mile limit. Unable to endure these restrictions, she succeeded a few weeks ago in coming to America, and she is now traveling in this country, assisting in the work of collecting money for the relief of those of her countrymen who have lost their all in this cruel war.

The Polish women, she said, have more real freedom than the women of Russia. Their opinions are of weight in the affairs of the family, and their advice is always sought by their husbands, not only in business enterprises, but in larger, patriotic questions as well. Though the men have but a restricted franchise, the women are seeking the suffrage for themselves. Both in Lemberg and in Warsaw there were, before the outbreak of the war.

LABOR SAVING.

Various Devices That Assist the Housekeeper.

How efficient is your home? How well does it perform its functions? There are problems to be solved therein every whit as engrossing as the business of the wage earning head of the family. But, thanks to modern devices, it is not impossible to solve them. For instance, take the vacuum cleaner. It will do the work of a maid in a very small percentage of the time it would take her to perform the same work. Of course its first cost is rather large, at least $25, but the saving in the long run is so great that no woman who ever has the tiniest bit of money to spend on making her home comfortable should resist buying one.

If the woman does much of her work herself—if she is one of the domestic women for whom happiness lies in doing the work of the house well—there are electric devices that will take the load of heavy work from her shoulders and yet give her the satisfaction of knowing that she has done her work herself. Electric fans are considered necessities by many business men. Surely if this is so electric motors to run the sewing machine and the washing machine and the dishwashing machine are necessities for the housewife. If you do your housework yourself, why don't you look into this matter of labor saving devices for the home?

There is one other necessity to efficient labor—comfortable shoes. The time has come when every young college girl or professional woman throws appearances to the winds and walks forth in low heels and roomy toes. Her feet may not be as beautiful as formerly, but her general appearance, the swing and grace caused by being comfortably shod, makes up for it. The shoes she wears cost $5 and may be had in all leathers and sizes, from kid to Russian calf.

Peculiarities of the Opossum.

The American opossum is one of the most curious animals living in the United States. It is the only one that carries its young in a pouch like the kangaroo. It is the only animal that can feign death perfectly. It is remarkable for hanging by its tail like a monkey. It has hands resembling those of a human being. Its snout is like a hog's, while its mouth is liberally furnished with teeth. Its eyes are like a rat's, and it hisses like a snake.—Exchange.

The Hasty Word.

One trouble with a word spoken in haste is that an ink eraser has no effect on it.—Chicago Herald.

FEW PAUPERS IN KANSAS.

Many Counties Have No Poor Farms Nor Poor Indigents.

Topeka.—Twenty of the 105 Kansas counties have no poor farms or indigent poor, while in other counties the poor farms are self supporting, according to a report made by J. W. Howe, secretary of the state board of control.

In the year ending July 1 the various counties in Kansas cared for only 900 paupers, the report says.

Pending the construction of new quarters at the Winfield Hospital For the Feeble Minded a number of insane and feeble minded patients have been cared for by individual counties.

As a result there were ten more inmates of poor farms this year than last year. In the year ending July 1, says the report, there were nineteen children in the county institution as against fourteen the previous year.

FIGHT FOR PRINCIPLE.

His Task Seems a Hopeless One, Yet He Sticks to the Job.

Every little while you hear somebody say: "It isn't the expense I mind. It's the principle of the thing."

United States treasury officials have found that the country is overrun with persons who feel just that way. Here is one case:

Some years ago the crew of a government revenue cutter gave an entertainment of some sort, and, according to custom, assessed the cost of the affair among those aboard. Each man's share was taken from his pay. One young man was not in sympathy with some feature of the entertainment and objected to having to pay his share. It cost him only 30 cents, but it was the principle of the thing.

He began to write to the assistant secretary of the treasury, who had charge of the revenue cutter service, and demand justice.

That was years ago and the man has averaged about two letters a week ever since. He numbers his letters, and the last one was numbered seven hundred and something.

Two or three years ago he resigned from the revenue cutter service and is now living in New York, but he is still after his 30 cents and the establishment of a great principle.

When Charles Dewey Hilles was an assistant secretary of the treasury he sent the man his personal check for 30 cents in the hope that it would end the long correspondence, but it did not. The man promptly sent back the check, saying that he did not want the money but justice, and that the 30 cents must come from the government itself.

And so the correspondence goes on with no sign of ever letting up.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

The Way Out.

Mr. Halle in his book "Notes From a Painter's Life" tells an amusing story of the celebrated caricaturist Carlo Pellegrini.

The caricaturist borrowed £5 from the author.

"When he had got it and put it in his pocket he said these memorable words in his broken English: 'Halle, my fellow, if I take this £5 as a loan every time I see you I say: "Dere dat tiresome Halle. I owe him £5." And you say: "Dere dat tiresome Pelican. He owe me £5." It make unpleasant between us. So I take dis as gift.'"

When Spencer Tried Vegetarianism.

Herbert Spencer tried vegetarianism for about a year, says London Opinion. "At the end of that time," he relates, "I went over all that I had written during the year and consigned it to the fire." Spencer found an exclusively vegetarian diet too bulky, and came to the conclusion that rational life is a compromise. In the matter of diet it is best to strike the happy mean, "between the tiger pacing its cage and the cow lying upon the grass."

Old Hickory.

The fifth grade class in history stories had been studying about Andrew Jackson, from his boyhood up. Finally the day came for them to write all they had learned of this great man. Bert, a bright little fellow of nine years, wrote among other interesting things:

"Andrew Jackson was called 'Old Hickory' because when he was a boy he was a little tough."—New York Tribune.

The Eskimo Code.

The Eskimo's social and moral code is interesting. Its chief provisions are:

Should a man inadvertently or by malice aforethought kill another the wife and children of the man so killed remain a burden on the murderer so long as he or they live.

A drift log found is treasure trove and belongs to the finder, who indicates possession by placing upon it a pipe, mitten or personal trinket of some kind.

No one must eat seal and walrus on the same day.

All large animals killed are to be looked upon as common property of the tribe and not as a personal belonging of the man who kills them.

Can Bilious Attacks Be Prevented?

Persons who are subject to bilious attacks will be interested in the experience of Mrs. Louise Shunke, Frankfort, N. Y. "About five years ago I suffered a great deal from indigestion and biliousness," she says. "I began taking Chamberlain's Tablets and they relieved me at once. Since taking two bottles of them I have had no return of the trouble." Chamberlain's Tablets only cost 25 cents per bottle. Why not give them a trial, get well and stay well. All dealers.

COCOA Sponge Cake.—Beat four eggs to a froth, sift two cupfuls of sugar and two heaping tablespoonfuls of cocoa together, then add to eggs; beat; add a teaspoonful of vanilla; sift four times two cupfuls of flour with two teaspoonfuls of baking powder and a pinch of salt; mix well; heat to boiling one cupful of milk and add to it butter the size of a walnut; let melt, then add to the mixture and beat. This is enough for two loaves.

Butter Frosting For This Cake.—Sift two cupfuls of confectioner's sugar and cream with butter the size of an egg. The butter can be melted if desired. Heat about a tablespoonful and a half of milk and add just enough to give the right consistency to spread. Add a little vanilla.

Silver Cake.—Four cupfuls butter, one cupful sugar, one-half cupful milk, two cupfuls flour, sifted with three teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Pinch of salt, whites of four eggs beaten stiff. Mix same as gold cake, folding whites in at the last. One-fourth teaspoonful of almond extract may be added if desired. Bake in a moderate oven about forty-five minutes.

Eggless Sour Cream Cake.—One cupful sugar (either granulated or brown), one cupful sour cream (if separated cream use one-half cupful filling, other half with water), one teaspoonful soda stirred in cream, flavoring; one tablespoonful cocoa sifted with enough flour to make cake consistency. This is inexpensive but delicious.

Cocoanut Cake.—Mix together one-half pound of flour, one-fourth pound each of butter and sugar and two eggs and a small cupful of milk and one tablespoonful of baking powder. When well mixed put in a cupful or more of grated cocoanut. Bake in small buttered tins in a moderately quick oven.

NEW CONSTITUTION GIVES SIMPLICITY

Each day adds light to good work accomplished by the constitutional convention, in the matter of simplicity that will accrue to the people by adopting the provisions of the proposed constitution.

Every voter, regardless of party, the farmer, the mechanic, the merchant, the lawyer, all should give the new constitution hearty support; not that it is perfect, not that in every particular it is just as each would have it, for if this were true, it would not be a humanly prepared instrument, but because taken as a whole it makes a great advancement in government and goes far to meet the demands of the people for better, more efficient, more economical, more responsive government, which have been so incessant throughout the country during the last 15 years. The direct primaries, the referendum, the initiative and recall, yes, even the recall of judicial decisions, are but manifestations of these demands.

Getting Back to Principle

Recognizing the reason which lay behind these manifestations of unrest the constitutional convention with courage and patriotism tackled the problems and has gone far toward their solution by treating the fundamental causes of the trouble.

Republican institutions were falling into disrepute; the law's delays largely caused by complicated methods of practise; the low regard for the legislatures throughout the country largely caused by their being compelled to deal with a mass of local and petty legislation to the neglect of the larger problems of the state. the final turning to the executive for relief, a course at once hopeless so long as the executive was so hampered as to be powerless to institute reforms and a method dangerous to American institutions in so far as it tended to disturb the balance between our three co-ordinate departments of government, executive, legislative and judicial; the extravagance in governmental expenditures, the multiplication of useless offices; all these had served to arouse the resentment of the people.

The convention has gone to the root of matters: First, It has clothed the executive with powers adequate to the responsibility placed upon him as chief executive of the state, by giving him the power of appointment of heads of his executive departments without confirmation by the Senate and, therefore, without the log rolling methods which have been common under the old system; by charging him with the responsibility of preparing the budget, or estimate of expenditures and submitting it to the legislature and limiting the legislature to the reduction of the proposed expenditures; by the reorganization of the various executive and administrative departments of the state so that their number will be reduced from 152 independent organisms with little responsibility to anyone to 12 departments which will be responsible to the executive and through whom requests for appropriations will be made instead of being made directly to the legislature.

Real Home Rule

Second: The convention has added to the dignity of the legislature and restored it to its original purpose as the legislature of the whole people of the state and not of special and local interests. This has been accomplished by the articles creating home rule to cities and counties whereby the legislature is relieved of a mass of local legislation which crowded and choked its calendars and which with other legislation of a like type left little time for deliberation upon great measures of general interest to the whole state, measures which call for the greatest of ability and statesmanship; by relieving the legislature of the log rolling as to appropriation bills caused by the demands of the 152 separate departments of government, a method which impaired the integrity and respect forg overnment; by the abolition of the emergency message which in effect in the last days of every session abrogated the rule that bills must be printed and lie on the desks of the members for three days before final passage and by which the governor cracked the executive whip over the legislature; by eliminating the petty restraints upon members of the legislature being eligible to higher public offices, and finally by providing that members receive a compensation which will at least equal what they are called upon to expend as members of the legislature. Third: The convention further met the situation by providing for the increase of the efficiency of government by the re-organizing of the multitudinous, scattered and duplicated agencies of government now under 152 heads, by creating 17 departments of government and providing that all the civil agencies should be exercised through these departments. Through this method the present duplication will be avoided, sinecures and useless offices will be eliminated, the work of the state will be co-ordinated and greater efficiency will result.

Laws Made Practical

Fourth: The law's delays will be lessened by the provisions of the judicial article which very simply and inexpensively increase the efficiency of the courts in the dispatch of business and provide for the adoption of a simplified method of practice which will eliminate the complicated and cumbersome practices under the code of civil procedure which are the cause of much of the law's delay.

Fifth: By the creation of a department of conservation upon lines so broad and far reaching as to meet the aspirations of the people and insure the state against the destruction of its natural resources which, if continued, would impair the value of our farms, and reduce us to the condition of China of Mesopotamia. Attention is also called to the serial bond provision which is estimated will save the state 40,000,000 on the bond now authorized. There are many other beneficial provisions.

The whole constitution shows that the delegates were actuated by a high and patriotic purpose to reconstruct upon fundations already established, a fundamental law which would be adequate to the hopes of the people of the state.

REALTY MEN MAY BLOCK CONSTITUTION

New York.—Actions to enjoin the city administration from collecting the direct tax and to prevent the submission of the proposed State constitution to the voters were decided upon by the United Real Estate Owners' Association at a meeting at the Astor Hotel last night. Represented in the meeting, it was said, were owners of between $300,000,00 and $400,000,000 worth of property in New York city. The meeting was presided over by Stewart Browne, president of the association.

JAPAN'S PREMIER WARNS PEACE CONGRESS

San Francisco, Cal.—A warning note was sounded today at the International Peace Congres by Count Okuma, Premier of Japan. In the message he sent to the congress from Japan he did not mention the United States nor the unsettled controveraies over the exclusion of the Japanese from citizenship and property ownership, but to those who have followed the diplomatic correspondence between Japan and the United States the meaning was quite clear.

it is believed here that the British and French on the western line will give the Germans no rest.

It is much the same on the Eastern front. The Austro-Germans having brought their offensive to an end, except in the region of Dvinsk, the Russians have recuperated wonderfully and are striking back in their familiar way. The Germans allege another success west of Dvinsk, but they are still fighting to the west of Illoukst. They also announce that Russian counter attacks have been repulsed south of the Pripet River, in Volhynia and in Galicia.

The Russians seemingly have entirely regained the initiative, especially in Galicia. Here it is reported from Petrograd that the Russians have won a victory on the River Stripa. The territory on which this battle wasf ought marks the extreme left of the Russian battle line. The Russian offensive on this front started several weeks ago, when succes were won at Tarnopol and Trembowla. Austro-German reinforcements were hurried up and hard and incessant fighting has taken place since. General Count von Bothmer commands the Austro-Germans in this sector, and the German official report of today says that the position of the "German troops" with him is unchanged.

MICHIGAN BANKERS GIVE $2700 IN CASH PRIZES

Bankers of Michigan, in a year, have contributed $2,700 as prizes for exhibits and for other agricultural work. This information was secured from 200 reports received by the committee on agriculture. Fifty Michigan banks at least have held exhibits, interesting and inspiring, not only the farmers, but also the bankers of the state. The committee recommended that the state association appropriate to each county where the county agent is employed, $25 to be known as the Michigan Bankers Pedigreed Seed Fund for the purchase of pure bred seed. The distribution will be made by the county agent.

Among the bank activities noted were the following:

The Alba Bank of Noble and Bennett has had an agricultural exhibit for nine years. For the past two years it has held three-day exhibits in local opera houses to accommodate increased attendancce. The president of the Ludington State Bank is chairman of the Farmers Institute of the county, and this bank contributed $100 to the boys' contest for 1915.

The First National Bank of Traverse City has had an exhibit in its lobby for the past ten years and contributes $100 in premiums. The First National Bank of Ionia contributes $100 to a corn show. The Wakefield State Bank of Morenci makes a special low rate of interest to farmers when the purpose is purchase of stock, silos or milking machines.

All the banks in Isabella county unite in supporting the boys' and girls' industrial club. The boys grow beans and corn and the girls carry on sewing contests. The banks furnish the premiums. The Traverse City State bank had three agricultural exhibits during the year. On apple day they furnished apples to all persons visiting the bank, and had messengers meet every train and give apples to the passengers. The Lenawee County Savings Bank of Adrian held a fair in the lobby of its bank on gala week, and offered $300 in prizes.

The Commercial Savings Bank of Adrian made liberal donations for prizes during gala week of that city.

The Park River State bank furnished twenty bushels of seed corn of the new variety to farmers in that locality. The First National Bank of Boyne City runs an employment bureau, helping laboring men in the city to find work in the country with no charge to either party. The Farmers and Merchants State Bank of Carson City is erecting a new bank building, with farmers' waiting room, women's rest room and toilet rooms; also places for exhibits of farm products.

The Union Trust company, the People's State bank, and the First and Old Detroit National bank of Detroit have raised a fund of $300 for premiums to be awarded for the best corn exhibit in twenty counties in the eastern part of the state. The Industrial Savings Bank of Flint offers $300 in premiums for agricultural products.

The Old State Bank of Fremont has erected a new building with a special room for farmers and a library on farm topics. The First National of Iron River financed three carloads of high grade cattle to be sold on the installment plan to the farmers. All of the banks in Allegan county united and paid in proportion to their assets a $400 deficit which resulted from the employment of a county farm agent for two years. They were pleased with their investment. In Marine City the business men motor out to a hall in the country each year and have a big meeting with the farmers. It works a good spirit, tends to bring both closer together, and increases trade.

Dansard and Sons' State Bank of Monroe held a very successful fair last October, and are making plans for their October 1915 fair. Their premiums last year were $300. The Norville State Savings bank writes: "We supply every farmer that comes to our bank with money for any legitimate use. If we have not the money we go and get it."

The Commercial Bank of Port Huron holds an annual potato show. Last year there were over 500 exhibits and more than 100 exhibitors. They offered $200 in premiums. As a result of the activity of the First State Bank of Allegan in furnishing corn seed testers, a teacher in a rural school tested all the seed corn used in her district, and inoculated the alfalfa seed to be sown. —F. H. Williams, First State Bank, Allegan, Michigan, chairman committee on agriculture. —Banker and Farmer.

CONNESTICUT MAN SETS ASIDE BIRD SANCTUARY

Greenwich, Conn.—That Greenwich is to become an important centre in the national movement for bird life conservation is assured by the announcement made today that E. C. Converse, a wealthy resident, is to make his fifteen hundred acres here into a model bird sonctuary. Converse Manor, the largest private estate in this section, has long deserved the reputation of being one of the most successful examples of scientific farming in this country. Mr. Converse, as well as George A. Drew, manager of the vast estate, are enthusiastic over the possibilities the proposed new department offers for serious investigation into the subject of economic importance in bird life.

This new conservation department will develop all phases of the subject. It will not be made up from members of other departments, but will be one organized wholly with a view to increasing local bird life. An economic ornithologist will be selected from the Massachusetts Agriculture College, who will be qualified to make Converse Manor an ideal bird refuge. His work will include the raising of wild ducks, winter feeding and protection of game and insectivorous birds, making and setting out nesting boxes, lessening the enemies of bird life, besides planting wild fruits and shelter woods for nesting birds.

MIDSHIPMEN TO ABOLISH HAZING AT ACADEMY

Annapolis, Md.—By the voluntary action of the midshipmen of the three upper classes the hazing system, ingrained in the very fibre of the Naval Academy, has been ended.

In the language of a member of the first class, "hazing is abolished; it does not now exist in the Naval Academy. The midshipmen are anxious that no special encomiums shall be passed on their conduct in the matter, and were hopeful that no publicity would be given to it at all."

Not only is it a fact that they did not seek to make the matter known, but they were induced with difficulty to talk at all about the affair.

Twelfth Nation Enters Conflict; Russian Threats

London.—Bulgaria formally has declared war on Serbia and definitely and apparently irrevocably aligned herself with the Austro-Ottman-Germon combination. And with her decision she is facing a war on two fronts similar to that in which Germany is engaged, for additional reports of a contemplated Russian attack on her eastern coast are reaching London.

For sheer drama, however, nothing in recent months can compare with the situation of the Serbs. Not only two, but four sides of their little kingdom are feeling the weight of marching feet. The Austro-Germans are continuing their advance on the north and west. Bulgarians are pounding away on the east, while Anglo-French troops are moving through the south.

The Serbs, although greatly outnumbered by armies with superior equipment, are making a stubborn defence in the north, and while the Austro-German progress is steady, it is very slow and probably will become slower still when the mountains where the Serbs are strongly intrenched are reached.

Of the Bulgariton campaign nothing new has been received since Nish reported the repulse of the invaders. While the movements of the Anglo-French and Russian forces thus far have been kept from the knowledge of the publlic, the Russians have no easy task before them if they intend to land in Bulgaria. Varna and the other Bulgarian ports on the Black Sea where a landing might be made have been strongly fortified under the direction of German officers and are protected by mine fields, while Turks are moving up to assist in manning the land positions.

May Use the Danube

The Russians could proceed down the Danube, as that is an international waterway, but it is doubtful if they have the necessary transport, while to come through Roumania would require the consent of the government of that country, which, although considered friendly to the Entente Powers, might not wish to risk the displeasure of Germany.

Some disappointment is expressed here at the decision of Italy not to participat Italy has aserted great influence in the Balkans and is known to have aspirations in Asia Minor, which the injunction of Germans and Turks, it is said, virtually would bring to an end. With superfluous force, and excellent transport facilities, the view is held in London that Italy is in a better position than any of the Allies to lend a hand, and the hope is expressed that she will yet do so.

In the meantime the Allies are closely watching developments in the internal situation in Burgaria, where many of the people are averse to fighting against the Allies, particularly Russia. It was reported from Paris last night that General Savoff, formerly Bulgarian Minister of War and formerly Commander-in-Chief of the Bulgarian army, has resigned his command rather than fight against Russia. It is thought the landing of Russians in Bulgaria might result in a change in the policy of that country, even thus late in the day.

The decision of Bulgaria, the twelfth nation to enter the war, to join the ranks of the belligerents, was reached only after a diplomatic duel waged for months between representatives of the Teutonic allies and the Quadruple Enteente. Each side offered tempting inducements in an effort to gain another ally, but the Bulgarian government finally decided Germany and her friends had made the higher bid.

Bulgaria Rated High

Bulgaria is rated as one of the most powerful of the Christian Balkan States. Her army, while considerably smaller than that of her neighbor, Roumania, is well drilled and equipped. Her military strength on a peace footing is only about 56,000 but in time of war she is able to put into the field something like 300,000 men.

Since the second Balkan war, in which Bulgaria fought Greece, Serbia and Montenegro, after the victory of all four nations against Turkey, Bulgaria has been isolated to a certain extent from the other Balkan States. The second war, which resulted from a dispute concerning the division of teritory won from Turkey, was not participated in by Roumania, which also kept out of the first Balkan conflict. Roumanian troops invaded Bulgaria, however, and forced the latter to make territorial concessions.

When peace was finally restored Bulgaria was compelled to relinquish a large part of thet erritory she had gained in the first war The ill feeling thus engendered made it doubtful whether Bulgaria would consent to enter the present war on the side of Serbia and Montenegro. She steadfastly refused to abandon neutrality unless assured of territorial concessions which would enable her to realize her national aspirations. Chief of these was to regain those sections of Macedonia populated chiefly by Bulgars which now belong to

LIBRARY GETS WAR BOOK, COMPILED AND WRITTEN BY EX-ARMY OFFICER

A highly interesting book entitled, "Uniform of the Army of the United States—1774-1889," has been received at the Fulton Public Library.

Miss Forsyth, librarian, states that the book was given to the library by Noble D. Preston, whom she believes to be a former Fultonian. Inquiry among a number of old residents produces the information that a man of this name resided here during the period of the civil war. Earl Wilcox, a resident of the west side and a lifelong resident of Fulton remembers a United States Army officer named Preston who at the out break of the Civil War was engaged in recruiting here. Mr. Wilcox is of the opinion that Preston organized a company of troops here. E. P. Cole says that only recently he heard a number of veterans discussing the man's name and his connection with a certain foundry establishment here.

The book, which is too large to be placed in general circulation, consists mostly of full page illustrations of United States Army men, the pictures being in colors. In addition, a careful description of every uniform is printed. Epaulettes, buttons, hat, loop, spurs, cockade, tassels, plums, sword and sword knot, trousers, jacket, boots, etc., are minutely described in regard to color and material.

The Secretary of War has authorized the publication of the book. It was prepared under the supervision of the Quartermaster General by Lieut. Colonel M. I. Ludington.

HUNTER STOCK OF GUNS GETTING LOW; WAR ORDER PROSPECTS REMAIN GOOD

Improved business conditions throughout the United States results in the surplus stock that was stored in the Hunter Arms company factory as being rapidly depleted, according to the statement made today by Mr. Thomas Hunter. The hunting season, of course has a considerable influence on the local arms company's sales and a gradual increase in the ordinary output of the company is looked forward to. A medium sized force of men is at work in the factory manufacturing new stock.

Mr. Hunter would not discuss the probability of securing a war order, other than to say that every effort will be made by the company to bring some of the war business to Fulton and that when an order is secured the people of Fulton will be advised of it without delay.

GREAT WAR PICTURES REAL ONES; TO BE SEEN AUSPICES THE TIMES

The wonderful war pictures secured by the New York Sun in the European countries now at war, will be produced at the Quirk under the auspices of The Evening Times Friday evening, October 22. The matinee will start at 2:30 and two evening performances will be given, the first at 7 and the second show at 9 o'clock.

Those who have seen these films in other cities have stamped them as the most realistic moving pictures ever presented. Joseph W. Halper, the lecturer who explains each scene as it appears on the curtain, is fully conversant with not only the events depicted but with the territory in which each film was made.

While every one has been interested in reading from day to day as to the progress of war, this will give an opportunity to witness some of the actual battles regarding which so much has been printed. The scenes are taken in various countries now at war and are absolutely neutral. New films are being aded each week, as the movie operators are busy taking these history making pictures each day.

"Wonderful! It doesn't seem possible that men would risk their lives as those men must have to, to obtain pictures!".

That was the comment of thousands after viewing The Citizen and Sun's war pictures on their first presentation in New York. Every person who witnessed the pictures left the great hall declaring them the most wonderful thing he or she had ever seen.

Different From Sixties

"It is war," remarked a man who wore the bronze star, crossed cannon and red, white and blue badges of the Grand Army, as he came out, "but it's different in many ways from the carnage we knew in the sixties. Never before have I realized the great changes in the method of fighting from what they were in the days of the rebellion. And yet," he continued, "there is a sameness. There is the same grimness of purpose, the same lightheartedness of the soldiers, the same death and suffering which we know. It is war! Any man who ever saw a fight knows that after viewing those pictures. I am going to see them again."

And so they commented; so they will continue to comment in every city where the pictures are shown.

Courage of Movie Men

After viewing these films one cannot but marvel at the nerve of the men who took the pictures. Neither can a person help wondering at and admiring the skill of the censors who passed upon these films before they were shown to the public. It is an open secret that thousands of feet of films were rejected and thrown out by the censors, because they were too horrible to be shown. Yet, they succeeded in preserving a true and realistic history of the fighting, to make clear its horrors without permitting a single thing to be shown which cannot safely be witnessed by any person, regardless of their state of health.

The pictures proved an instantaneous success. They are news pictures pure and simple. Not a single scene was pre arranged. Thec amera men took them during action. Study their uniforms and their outfits. The uniforms are soiled and worn, the shoes are out at the sides, the toes and the heels; did you ever see a pre-arranged picture where the soldiers presented such an appearance? Not one.

It is difficult, indeed, to write a description of these six remarkable reels There are so many things which impress themselves upon one, such a variety of scenes worthy of mention, that one is confused as to which is the best to talk about. Beyond that, the

Incomes of $1000 to Be Taxed, is the Committee Plan

New York.—A State tax on all incomes of more than $1,000 will be recommended to the next Legislature unless strenuous objection is made by up-State farmers. Secret conferences with groups of prominent bankers which, it was learned yesterday, the Legislation Committee on Taxation, of which Ogden L. Mills is chairman, has been holding have resulted in the adoption of this plan to relieve the burden on real estate.

It was as the result of the agreement reached in these conferences that Isaac N. Seligman, head of the private banking house of J. & W. Seligman & Co., and Clarence H. Kelsey, president of the Title Guarantee & Trust Company, took the stand to advocate a tax on all incomes. Though declaring they spoke only for themselves, both witnesses admitted they had conferred with leading financiers and voiced their views.

"A State income tax represents the most exact justice in taxation," said Mr. Seligman. "It provides the most effective way of reaching the greatest number.

"It would be a great mistake, however, to tax only the rich. Moderate incomes should not be exempted. The federal exemption was a great mistake. First, you need the revenue, and, second, you should interest the greatest number in the operation of the State.

"Real estate cannot stand any additional burden and the personal property tax should be abolished. It is making liars out of good citizens.

"A State income tax should be collected from those who do business here as well as residents. Then there would not be any such exodus to New Jersey as has been feared. There also should be some way of reaching those who live in New York hotels only a part of the year."

Mr. Seligman also declared large wealth does not bear its proper burden of taxation. He said:

"I think the inheritance tax should be laid somewhat heavier, though not in such a measure as to drive people out of the State. Large wealth does not now bear its just burden.

Joseph M. Schwab, former State Tax Commissioner, declared the direct tax provided by the last Legislature was unnecessary.

"On that point," he said, "I refer you to the statements of former Governor Glynn."

The Republican members of the committee rushed to the defense of Governor Whitman and the Legislature, and declared Glynn had only postponed the necessity of a direct tax to pass it along to his Republican successor.

Former Deputy Tax Commissioner Thomas F. Larkin said the personal tax assessment wasm ade up haphazard from telephone books by clerks.

James R. Brown, of the Manhattan Single Tax Club, and Frederick C. Leubuscher, president of the Society for Lower Rents, advocated a single tax.

GOVERNMENT PREACHES ECONOMY, YET WASTES

GOVERNMENT

London.—"The man who does not study the idea of having half his income available for the state is not doing his duty," said Edwin Samuel Montagu, financial secretary to the treasury, in replying in the House of Commons today to criticisms of the new taxes imposed by the budget of Reginald McKenna, Chancellor of the Exchequer.

"Colossal extravagance and wicked corruption" was the way in which John Annan Bryce, ab rother of Viscount Bryce, characterized many acts of the Government since the beginning of the war.

Members of the chamber said that the Government while preaching economy was not practising it and declared tremendous waste was going on in the camps of the country.

Mr. Montagu added the government had not yet bent itself to the task of meeting the obligations imposed by burdens which involved an expenditure amounting to not less than two-thirds of the entire estimated national yearly income: Therefore it followed, he said, that every citizen ought to be prepared to put no less than half of his current income at thed isposal of the State, either by tax or loan.

"To do this," Mr. Montagu continued, "the civil population must stint itself and rearrange its whole life with regard to the consumption of luxuries and foreign purchased goods. There will, however, be still more money left in the pockets of the people that will have to be got out later by loan-taxation, and this has caused a feeling of relief and given an assurance that the country can continue to finance the war."

Mr. Montagu said the Chancellor of the Exchequer intended to develop with all possible rapidity a compulsory taxation system for the country, but that this in itself would not be adequate to the case and voluntary savings were essential to an ultimate victory.

Sir Alfred Mond and other free traders protested against the import duties imposed by the budget, while the Laborities opposed the budget, while taxes on tea and sugar, and announced that they would vote against them.

SAVES A HALF MILLION

Every 10 years the State of New York has been having a census. It costs upwards of $500,000, but the taxpayers get no such benefit out of the count. If the taxpayers desire to save this half million dollars hereafter, they may do so by voting for the new constitution. The obsolete constitution requires the census for the fixing of the Senatorial districts. The new fundamental law would permit the use of the Federal census for that purpose. There is no need for counting the people of the State every five years. Let the United States Government do it every 10 years. That is often enough and costly enough.—Utica Press.

LIBRARIES AND FICTION

New York city is having a spirited discussion relative to the amount of fiction circulated by the public libraries. The public press is expressing itself freely regarding the matter, and it is affording some an opportunity to say, "Cut off the fiction altogether and buy only the non-fiction." New York has discovered that between 50 and 60 per cent of the literature circulated by its libraries is novels and romances These figures have caused some of the populace to raise their hands in horror at the dreadfulness of it all.

The Flower Memorial library shows figures in excess of New York's 60 per cent. Last year the local library circulated approximately 75 per cent fiction. The total will probably run about the same this year. But it is not appalling. The books of fiction are there to be read. They are supposed to be the best fiction of the present and the past, and the public is not to be condemned because it reads them. It might be better for the mentality of the community if more history, biography and general literature were read, but readers have their own taste and they are pretty stubborn about having them interfered with.

The average reader gets as much out of a good novel, as he does out of a biography or a work of history, if he reads it thoughtfully. It acquaints him with phases of life he knows not of and every novel is a study in psychology in some form or other. Novel reading is not to be condemned if carried on within reason. Let the public read fiction if it desires. The province of the library is to fill the wants of the public, but its great obligation is to see that the fiction is of the first order of meri. The rest is with the individual. He must exercise the control which will make him temperate. No library can cut off the supply of fiction, simply because people will read it to the exclusion of other literature.—Watertown Times.

CAMPAIGNERS

Those persons who availed themselves of standing beneath the O. and W. Station shelter last Saturday evening and listening to two western women speak on the justice of equal suffrage got a downright inspiration.

In spite of the drizzling rain, and a pair of very wet feet, each radiated a glowing, kindly interest in humanity that was unmistakable. Miss Muir, a young woman of high intellect and great beauty, —a high school teacher, who had taken a year off for the sake of "sweat-shop kiddies" that they might through mothers' votes have a chance in the open—explained her message clearly. Somehow the earnestness of her plea got beneath the skin and made itself felt. It seemed fair to assume that if this young woman chose of her own volition to stand on street corners, in sunshine and rain, by day or by night, instead of holding down a good position, while she dozed by the fire like a "house cat," that there must be "something in what she said."

Mrs. Currie, the other speaker, a wholesome motherly woman of refinement spoke straight from her heart. She stated the old fashioned belief about suffragists was that they neglected their homes and didn't "darn stockings." Mrs. Currie stated she had darned a bushel basket of them before leaving, and that back in her Indiana home the two daughters and the husband were writing her, "Go it mother, help the work along."

Mrs. Currie's story of when she was a teacher she was led to make a pledge for the children's sake—those of the grog shop, sweat shop homes—was but the expression of a true mother heart. She pointed out the narrow useless life of the woman who today crochets and reads Browning instead of reading from Life's own book, which unfurls its leaves each day. The great blessing for humanity, she assumed is not alone individual usefulness, but the liberty of universal usefulness,

Mrs. Currie and Miss Muir by their work in Fulton for Equal Suffrage have both lent dignity to the campaign.

TEXAS

The picture of Texas, as it is, is a bit overdrawn, but it will serve to illustrate the importance of buying at home. Texas is manufacturing fourteenths of one per cent, of what it raises, and it raises one fourth of all the cotton in this country. Texas raises more cattle than any other state, and still it sends north for its beef. The resources of Texas are marvelous. There they have the oil, coal and water power. There they can produce almost anything, and still they are crying for pay rolls.

There will never be pay rolls in Texas while the people continue to send most of their money out of the state for things manufactured elsewhere.

The false idea of trying to save a few pennies by trading through the mails proves the surest way of paralyzing prosperity for Texas or for any other state, county, township or village.

What can be earned at home is more important to the individual than the few cents he can hope to save by supporting other towns, other cities.

But the big point is, do you actually save anything when you consider quality and satisfaction? Of course you don't.—Silent Partner.

RESPONSIBILITY WITHOUT POWER

Senator Wadsworth refers to some of the advantages of the proposed State constitution. A large amount of local legislation is eliminated, because home rule is granted to both cities and counties. This is a decrease in the incentive and opportunity for log-rolling, through which matters of fundamental importance have been up by the granting or withholding local legislation.

Heretofore, a member of the Assembly was apt to vote any way he was asked on a question of the State-wide importance, if he could secure a certain piece of local legislation. If the new constitution should be adopted much of this trading would be eliminated, for localities could do their own legislating, while the member of Assembly would devote himself to State affairs.

The Senator also speaks of the fear lest the Governor be a king. The present constitution says that the Governor shall be the chief executive of the State, and shall see to it that the laws shall be faithfully executed, and then the "Constitution has seen to it that the Governor could not possibly control more than a small fraction of the agents of the State charged with its administration."

It is as though the constitution provided that "The Governor shall take all the responsibility and only a part of the power," while "Other officials and special interests shall take the rest of the power without any responsibility." That sizes up the situation very aptly. The Senator continues by saying that "Responsibility without power is a sham and inevitably means that somewhere else there is power without responsibility."

That describes the present arrangement of the government precisely. There are many irresponsible heads with much power to spend. No one can keep track of them or what they do. No business could endure with such an inefficient arrangement, and it requires a wealthy State with huge resources to keep such machinery moving.

Senator Wadsworth calls attention to the fact that the only specific allegation to the vicious charge that the proposed constitution favors special interests is that the Public Service Commissions are put into the constitution. As a matter of fact, the change provides that these commissions can't be legislated out of office every two years. But they are removable upon charges preferred by the Governor, or they can be impeached by the Legislature. The commissions, therefore, if inefficient or corrupt, can be reorganized. They cannot be touched, however, merely for political purposes, and surely that is in the interests of the people.—Utica Observer.

NO MORE TREATS

Discouraged in the attempt to awaken people to the enormity of the injury they were doing their country by the unfortunate habit of getting drunk and staying drunk several days, they have put in effect in London and a big adjacent manufacturing district an anti-treating regulation. If this regulation does not shorten the consumption of liquors by at least 50 per cent., London will curtail the hours during which bars may be open. It is punishable by a fine of $500 or six months imprisonment for treating another person to a drink, according to this regulation, and there will be a great interest the world over to discover how this sort of a regulation works.

It has been recognized in every land that one of the chief causes of intemperance is the habit of treating. Through it, men are often led to drink more than they would under other circumstances. Anti-treating societies have been formed from time to time, but they have been of short life, and the treating custom has increased. If London's drastic regulation is a success, a remedy may be discovered for much of the evil accompanying drink. There would be no necessity for prohibition if each man bought and paid for what he drank and accepted treats from no one.—Albany Union.

WORKING THEIR WAY

There are many men holding prominent positions in this country today who worked their way through college. Of necessity, these men must have had well-laid foundations for character building at the start, because earning the funds to pay for an education and studying at the same time is not an easy task by any means. The boy who thinks it is, need only visit someone who is doing it to see the seamy side.

Many times the student who works his way must sit in his room and study, while his classmates play around on the campus all the afternoon. At night he must go about gathering other fellows' laundry or some other menial task, which is not as attractive as atending a fraternity meeting and mingling with the brethren. Yet the young man who has the goods mentally, morally and physically or the determination to get them, though the privations be hard, can get through college in good shape and never call on father for handout. What's more, many students come out with a bank account. And don't think they do it by any means other than hard work.—Batavia News.

MUSICAL EVENT NOTABLE IN OSWEGO'S HISTORY

The New York Philharmonic Orchestra, Josef Stransky, conductor, will appear in concert at Richardson Theatre on Thursday, November 4th. This is without exception the greatest musical organization that has ever visited Oswego. Mr. Francis MacMillian, violinist, will be the soloist at the Oswego concert. The New York Philharmonic Orchestra numbers eighty-seven musicians, each one a soloist on his particular instrument. An idea of the ability required from the musicians in his orchestra can be secured from the fact that Mr. Stransky heard 80 consecutive performances of the Mendelssohn and Bruch concertos when he required certain additions to the department of second violins. The agony was long-winded, but apparently had its compensations for Mr. Stransky's satisfaction with his splendid orchestra is today overflowing. The New York Philharmonic Orchestra will come direct from the Wieting Opera house, Syracuse, where they play on Wednesday, November 3d.

DYNAMITE AND CASTOR OIL PRICES ARE SOARING

Good news for children—the price of castor oil has been increased. Now may be mother will give something better tasting for a laxative. Yes, the price of caster oil has been advanced because the British government has placed an export tax on all medicinal preparations coming from its dependencies. Castor oil comes largely from India.

Increased demand for dynamite has raised the price of glycerine. Denatured alcohol has been advanced 50 per cent. and peroxide of hydrogen 230 per cent.

Then Came the Storm.

"Why is it that the attendants in telephone offices are all women?" Mrs. Brown made this inquiry of her husband.

"Well," answered Mr. Brown, "the managers of the telephone office are aware that no class of attendants work so faithfully as those who are in love with their labor, and they know that women would be fond of the work in telephone offices."

"What is the work in a telephone office?" Mrs. Brown further inquired.

"Talking," answered Mr. Brown. And that conversation came to an end and a different kind of conversation began.—Chicago Herald.

Home Town Helps

GOOD TREE FLOWER BASKET

Latest Idea In Outdoor Ornament Will Help Enhance Attractiveness of Any Place.

A feature which has been termed "The Tree Flower Basket" is one of the latest things presented in the western part of this country for the beautifying of the home property. The owner of the home place knows that almost any kind of flower holders, if they are put to work, serve to add to the appearance of the property. Furthermore, where a novelty, in the way of a flower basket, such as is seen in the accompanying illustration, is erected, it does more than merely serve to enhance the attractiveness of the place—it adds individuality to the dwelling.

Surely this feature adds the "individual" touch to the home it adorns. Altogether there are eight trees that have been treated in this manner, these running along the parkway beside this home. The idea is especially valuable when used in connection with trees that have tall, plain trunks, for the little baskets serve to break the trunk's plainness.

These baskets are simple in construction and inexpensive. A number of branches are cut in uniform length; palm branches being used in this instance, and the length being 18 inches. These are arranged around the tree about three inches apart and are held in position by wires run around their lower ends, fastening them tightly to the tree. A lining such as moss is then secured for the baskets, after which earth is placed in them. Flowers can then be planted in the earth. While many kinds of flowers may be grown in these baskets, vines and ferns which hang down against the trunk of the tree are very acceptable.—World's Advance.

How About Your Roof?

A city may have the reputation of being a "clean town," and its citizens may be prone to boast of this fact, but nearly any "clean town" would lose self-respect if seen as the workers in the upper ozone view it. If your office happens to be located on one of the upper floors of a tall building, take a look at your town and see what you think of it. Look down and see the dirty alleys, roofs littered with everything from old lumber to paper, tin cans and cheap signs. Awful, isn't it? Now go up and examine your roof. There must be a man higher up, and, too, aviators are a discriminating class.—Building Magazine.

Neighborhood Parks Needed.

All of our cities need more small neighborhood parks. The masses must have breathing places and small parks or squares best meet these requirements. The development of cities should be controlled by the municipalities, and no tract put on the market except a small area for a park is first donated to the city. This is a justifiable hold-up. There should be a neighborhood park within ten minutes brisk walk of every home. All should have an educational value for the district school and general public, therefore each tree or shrub should be labeled with proper and scientific name and country of nativity.

For Next Year's Garden.

Why not start a good lot of hardy perennials if you have a coldframe in which to winter the plants? Any sort of a crude frame will do; if you haven't glass covers, boards or mats will do. Nearly all the hardy perennials can be sown at this time and will flower next season; they simply require some very light protection over the winter. This is also the accepted time to sow those two showy biennials, the foxglove (Digitalis) and cup and saucer (Campanula). Winter in a frame and set out in very early spring.—Harper's Bazar.

THREE SCHOOLBOYS WIN PRIZES WITH PIGS

Put $150 in Bank While Still at Lessons.

Washington.—"A year ago the three sons of a dairyman living seven miles out of Macon, Ga., did not have a cent in bank, but had two small thoroughbred Duroc-Jersey pigs," says a statement issued by the department of agriculture. "Two of the boys joined the Bibb County Pig club. Today all three boys belong to the club and have in one of the Macon banks over $150, made while going to school.

"One of the banks in Macon offered a deposit of $1 and a metal savings bank to each of the Bibb County Pig club members who would make good. Making good consisted in exhibiting a pure bred pig at the fair and delivering to the county agent a record of feeds and weights, showing how much it cost per pound to raise it.

"Out of the forty-two boys who made good thirty-two let their dollar deposit remain in the bank. Two of the latter were the dairyman's sons, who won considerable prize money with their boar and sow pigs. This prize money was deposited with the bank and is part of their savings.

"A sow they exhibited had her first litter of seven redheaded pigs at fair time. She is now the mother of a second litter, in which there are twelve, all of them thriving.

"These boys will be exhibitors at the fair this fall, and the bank will have to surrender three more one dollar deposits and three metal savings banks for the three pure bred pigs exhibited and three complete records delivered."

Origin of the Tricolor.

The French tricolor, which has been traced by ingenious antiquaries to so many different sources, is really derived from the dress of the "Trinitarians," a religious order founded specially for the purpose of redeeming from slavery those Christians who had been captured by Moors, Turks or other "infidels." They held large endowments in Rome and formerly owned part of the present gardens of New College, at Oxford. It was the close association of these Trinitarians with "liberty" that led Lafayette at the revolution to adopt their habit of red, white and blue for the new flag of France.—Westminster Gazette.

One Way to Get Water.

Walter F. Reid, the scientist who invented smokeless powder, has led an adventurous life in many lands. His invention of smokeless powder was a result of his experiences among the red Indians, when he relied on his rifle for food. On one occasion Mr. Reid was dying of thirst in the pampas of the Argentine. In his extremity he noticed his horse during the night licking the dew off the vegetation. Then he had an inspiration. He dragged his shirt over the grass until it was saturated, and then squeezed it out. He worked in this way for hours, and in the morning there was enough water to save the lives of both man and horse.—London Standard.

PEARL WHITE

"THE DIRECTOR WHO CROSSES MY PATH AT EVERY TURN IN CAREER—MR. THEODORE WHARTON."

By Pearl White—The Pathe Star.

Miss Pearl White, the famous moving picture star, can hardly be called superstitious, but she feels that Theodore Wharton, the Pathe producer, is her guiding star, and when he advises anything she can be depended upon to follow the advice without any question. She explains this feeling as follows:

"About five years ago I was leading woman of a stock company playing near New York, and was just about played out. I'd had no vacation in a long time, and my voice needed a rest. Mrs. O. A. Miller joined the company one week and suggested that I go into moving pictures. 'Sure! I'm willing,' said I, 'but where can I get a job?' She gave me a list of film companies, so the next morning I dressed in my best, went to the theatre, rehearsed my next week's play until noon, and then caught a train for New York. It was January, the thermometer was below zero, and there was several feet of snow on the ground. Oh, yes, be sure I remember it very well!

"Arriving in New York I set out on foot to a film studio in 19th Street. You see money was scarce with me then, and I wanted to save that nickel. I asked to see the man who engaged the players and was asked to wait. After a while a man walked out and said, 'I am Mr. Wharton, the director, and the man who engages people.' I was very young and very small, and he seemed about eight feet tall. I asked him for a job and, as he afterwards admitted, he took me for a young thing from the country with a stage bee buzzing in her bonnet. So, in a very fatherly way he gave me a lot of advice, told me it was hard to get an engagement in pictures, and still harder to keep it—that if I had a job of any sort to stick to it. He said he had no opening for me at that time but later if I was in New York permanently, he might be able to use me once in a while.

"I went back to my show somewhat disappointed but still determined. The next week I came again to New York and saw the second name on my list. There the director took me more seriously, and offered me an engagement beginning with the next week. I stayed with that company for one year, and then determined to try a bigger concern. So I went over to Jersey to the Pathe Studio and asked to see a director. In a couple of minutes I was in the presence of Theodore Wharton again. This time he was more encouraging and recommended me to a fellow director. I was engaged and remained with Pathe for some years, but Theodore Wharton left the company the day after I joined and I didn't meet him again until my affairs again took a turn.

"I had just finished "The Perils of Pauline" and my contract was nearly over with Pathe. I was undecided whether to stay in pictures or go back to the dramatic stage or into vaudeville. The Pathe people informed me that they wanted me to play in a new serial to be produced by some new directors. I was asked to meet them. I walked into the office and there was Theodore Wharton again! My mind was at once made up. I said to Mr. Wharton 'Every time my career takes a turn you cross my path first and it has always meant more success for me. I will play Elaine!'"

LEHIGH VALLEY R. R. GIVES BEST TRAIN FOR PATHE PICTURE.

The Whartons, who make motion pictures for Pathe, succeeded recently in securing the most remarkable concession ever obtained from a railroad. In filming the first episode of "Wallingford" it was necessary to show the private car in which that famous high financier dazzles the inhabitants of the little "tank" towns. The Lehigh Valley R. R. not only permitted the Whartons to attach a big steel flat car, properly equipped, to their best train, "The Black Diamond" Express, but stopped the train twice to allow for the taking of scenes. The special car had to be sent all the way from Buffalo for the purpose, but the railroad supplied that also, fixing it up specially according to the Whartons' instructions.

CRIPPLES FILE CHARTER.

Sarah Bernhardt Is One of Welfare Society's Officers.

New York.—The charter of the Cripples' Welfare society, organized three years ago, was filed in the county clerk's office here along with the certificates of election. The papers showed that all the members of the board of directors had each lost a leg except Charles Noel Douglas and Dr. William Sheldon Coons. One of the vice presidents is Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, who recently lost a leg.

The object of the organization is to procure employment for cripples, elevate their moral and physical conditions, help them earn their livings and supply the needy with artificial limbs.

Mr. Douglas is president of the society. Although not a cripple, he has been bedridden for eighteen years.

EYESIGHT CAME BACK AS DEATH DREW NEAR

Soldier, Blinded in War, Saved From the Hesperian

London.—The fact that Private Chambers, a blinded Canadian soldier, who was thrown into the water when one of the Hesperian's lifeboats capsized, regained his eyesight as an effect of the shock of being pitched into the ocean, does not surprise London surgeons who attended him. His blindness, they say, was the result of wrecked nerves.

When he was put in a hospital in April he was not wounded, but was a nervous wreck, absolutely blind and incapable of distinguishing darkness from light. Later he regained his perception of light, but no more.

Chambers was blown into a shell crater on Hill 60. He staggered out blind. He heard a wounded man moaning and told him to get on his back and direct him toward the British lines. In this way both men reached safety, Chambers, unable to see, carrying on his back his wounded companion, who could not walk.

He says that he was dozing on the Hesperian when the explosion occurred. He felt his way to the deck and was put into a boat. Then he was plunged into the water, and when he came to the surface he saw the ship. In a moment somebody began to pull his heel and drag him under. He muttered to himself, he says: "Good God! To be drowned just as I am beginning to see!" Then he kicked hard and, freeing himself, swam to a lifeboat.

Since his arrival in Queenstown he has been roaming about the city enjoying his sight.

New Tennis Champion.

Youth was served at the West Side Tennis club courts, at Forest Hills, N. Y., when William M. Johnston, the twenty-year-old California star, won the national tennis crown, defeating in the final round Maurice E. McLoughlin in a four set match. Johnston's victory keeps the championship bowl in competition for at least another year. Had McLoughlin carried off the honors he would have been entitled to permanent possession of the trophy, as he already had two victories to his credit, and three are required to win the cup outright.

BENEFITS OF THE SEAMEN'S LAW

Provides Greater Safety For the Traveling Public.

GIVES FREEDOM TO SAILORS

Opens the Way For Upbuilding of the American Merchant Marine—Equalizes Cost of Operation as Between United States and Foreign Ships—Effect Will Be Worldwide.

By VICTOR A. OLANDER.
[Vice president International Seamen's Union of America.]

The passage of the seamen's act is the emancipation proclamation for the seamen of the world. For them it means freedom, which has heretofore been denied. For the traveling public it means greater safety of life at sea. In these things it sets the standard for the entire world. For the nation it means the restoration of the American merchant marine in the oversea trade.

The seamen's calling is essentially international. A national law governing that calling is necessarily international in effect. This is true of the seamen's act, and therein is its greatest importance. The right to quit the service of an employer, a right without which freedom cannot exist, has been long denied to crews of American vessels in foreign ports and to the seamen on practically all foreign vessels in American ports. This denial of liberty has been in the form of an American statute law, combined with some twenty odd treaties with foreign nations, under which seamen were held to service on the ships or punished by imprisonment for quitting work during the terms of contracts which all seamen under the laws of every nation are required to sign upon accepting employment. The seamen's act repeals the statute and provides for the abrogation of such parts of the treaties as require the arrest and punishment of seamen for what is called "desertion." The necessary changes in the treaties are made in accordance with the method and within the time provided for by the treaties affected. Thus American soil for the first time becomes free soil and slavery under the stars and stripes ceases to exist not only for Americans, but for all others who step upon our shores. Thus the seamen come into their own, and since the effect is international the seamen of the entire world have the door of opportunity opened to them.

The new law provides for greater safety of life at sea for the traveling public and for the seamen as well, by providing a standard of efficiency applicable to the deck crews of all vessels leaving American ports, requiring that a given percentage of the sailors must be men of experience and by designating the lifeboat capacity which such vessels must provide. True, the number of efficient seamen required under the new law is not as large as it should be, and except in the oversea trade the number of lifeboats is woefully small, particularly on the excursion vessels. Nevertheless, there is improvement over present conditions, and standards have been laid down upon which to base more substantial improvements in the future.

For the nation itself the new law opens the way for the upbuilding of the American merchant marine in the oversea trade, providing for an extension of American commerce, by removing unwarranted privileges which foreign ship owners have been allowed up to the present and by the enforcement of American standards of manning and equipment equally upon all vessels in American harbors, whether such vessels be domestic or foreign.

The new law giving freedom to the sailors abolishes the system under which, by the aid of the United States, foreign ships were enabled to hold cheap labor. When the law goes into operation the men on those ships will have the right to quit and even to go on strike in American ports when they so desire. The immediate effect will be that the wages paid by oversea vessels will be determined not alone by the low wage port from which they sail, but also by the higher wage port to which they sail. Wage cost of operation will be equalized upward. Further equality as between American and foreign vessels is obtained by the standards of manning, efficiency and equipment, which under the new law are made applicable to foreign vessels when such vessels are in American ports. Thus the cost of operation as between American and foreign ships will be equalized and the American ships will have equal opportunities in competition with all others. In doing this the United States has simply taken advantage of the international law that each nation has a right to govern its own harbors. The result will be the steady growth of the American merchant marine as a whole.

Eight Hours For Oil Men.

The Standard Oil Company of New Jersey has conceded the eight hour day to its workmen. The announcement was made after a special meeting of the board of directors. The New Jersey company is the parent and most powerful in the Standard Oil group, and it is believed all the subsidiaries of the vast organization will follow its example.

Charming Lolita Robertson, the photoplay "fans" call the Pathe star and though the "fans" are usually right they are unusually so this time.

THE WHARTONS TELL ONE ON THEMSELVES

Here's a good one from the Pathe producers, Wharton, Inc., at Ithaca, N. Y. Recently in filming a "Wallingford" story which dealt with high finance as applied to skunk farms, they took down the big Wharton sign over the main entrance to Renwick Park and put up one with the words "Skunk Farm" on it instead. When the pictures had been taken and the first print was being projected on the screen they were first amazed and then carried away with laughter to find they had neglected to remove a smaller sign on the foot passenger gate, directly below the skunk sign, which read as follows: "No one not a member of the cast admitted."

"AT BAY," A PLAY WITH A HISTORY.

It is interesting to note in connection with the announcement of Pathe's intention to put George Scarborough's play "At Bay" into pictures, that Mr. Scarborough was formerly connected with the U. S. Secret Service and drew upon his experience there in writing the play. Naturally he had access to the secret records of the Service and when "The Witness" was running as a "legitimate" success on Broadway as well as the road, it was reported that various hidden scandals in high society had been utilized in the writing of the play.

As a result the ticket headed by Dennis McCarthy, selected at a second caucus Monday, stands as the Democratic ticket in Hannibal.

AUBURN BEGINS CAMPAIGN AGAINST THE BILLBOARDS

Yesterday's Auburn Advertiser-Journal announces that Edward S. Connell of New York City, has arrived in the prison city to begin a vigorous anti-billboard campaign. He predicts that before long picturesque posters and guadily painted signs in the city streets and along the highways nearby may begin to disappear and natural vistas left unscarred.

The crusader for unblemished highways hopes that the police of Auburn will turn their attention to the matter and before many weeks have gone by an abatement of the billboard nuisance will become apparent. In Westchester County all advertising of the kind has disappeared he said and on Long Island there has been complete clean-up. And along the Hudson river, on both sides, the person gazing at scenery from auto, train or steamer does not now find his view of stretching landscape or sloping hills cut off sharply by a glare of red or green paint advising the eating, chewing, smoking or wearing of so and so's perfection brand of one thing or another. "The Hudson is cleaned up," said Mr. Cornell, "now let's se what Auburn will do.

DISCONTINUANCE PAPERS IN KOWALSKI CASE FILED

A judgment for $633.85 for the plaintiff was filed today in the case of Fremont C. McKoon vs. Frank B. Dilts. The verdict was for $500 damages.

The judgment roll in the cases of William Moon vs. Fulton Heat, Light & Power company, and the same plaintiff against John W. Stevenson, was filed today. The costs for defendant was $66.80 and $67.95, respectively. The action was for an injunction regarding the lighting contract in Fulton and the complaint was dismissed by Justice DeAngelis.

GEO. HUNTLEY KILLED IN MILL

Engaged in Running Elevator in Phoenix Paper Mill—No One Saw Accident—Funeral Tomorrow.

George Huntley, 73 years old, was crushed to death yesterday afternoon while running an elevator in the plant of the Phoenix Toilet & Paper Manufacturing company.

Mr. Huntley's death was due entirely to an accident, according to the words of Coroner Crane, who was called to the scene of the accident; and further, avers the coroner, no blame is attachable to the officers of the company.

During the morning oneo f the state's factory inspectors visited the plant and pronounced the elevator safe. No one saw the accident, but Mr. H. D. Wood, owner of the mill, says that Mr. Huntley had been moving some bundles of paper on a truck from the second floor to the first floor. It was Huntley's intention to stop the elevator at the ground floor, but for some unaccountable reason the elevator went to the basement. It is possible that the handles of the truck projected from the side of the elevator and that when the car ascended the man's body was caught between the first floor and the truck.

Dr. Crane found that the man's skull was fractured and his neck broken. Death must have been instantaneous.

The funeral of Mr. Huntley will be held tomorrow. Besides his widow he is survived by one brother, James Huntley of Syracuse, and one sister, Mrs. Della Bowley of Perry, N. Y. He was born in Phoenix and had been in the employ of the company for sixteen years.

MR. WALKER AND MR. WELLDRESST SYNONYMOUS

Mr. Welldresst struck Fulton last night in the person of George Walker, proprietor of the Clark House barber shop. If you should see Mr. Walker on the street any of these days sporting a new silk hat, it will be of no avail to address him with the words, "You are the handsome Mr. Welldresst."

Last night, the genial proprietor of the tonsorial parlor patroled First street wearing a brand new plug hat at the expense of H. Putnam Allen. Mr. Allen appeared on the wrong side of a world'e series bet, and the wager between the two men stipulated that the winner was to be given a silk hat. One conditional clause was attached to the wager and that was the hat must be worn daily for thirty days.

BUFFALO VOTES UNDER NEW LAW

Sharp Lines Drawn and Numerous Surprises the Outcome of Heavy Vote Polled

Buffalo. — At Tuesday's Buffalo primary election the total vote was 214,100, and it is estimated that these were cast by 55,000 electors.

The eight candidates receiving the highest votes were nominated for councilmen, to be voted for on election day, November 2nd, when four of these eight will be chosen. Three will serve a four-year term and one a two-year term. The short term will be filled by the candidate who receives the lowest number of votes of the four elected.

One of the big surprises of the primary election was the vote polled by Fred W. Bond, George B. Burd, Knowlton Mixer and Charles B. Hill, who were endorsed by the Guardians of Liberty. Small cards, bearing these names, were presented by leading members of the "Units" to electors, and the close vote of these four men showed that the "Guardians" united their strength. According to the number of votes polled by these four candidates, the Unit voting strength is about 18,000 in Buffalo, and it is expected that the Units will supplement their primary endorsement with further instructions for election day. The high vote received by Hill, Mixer, Burd, and Bond is generally attributed to this endorsement.

The other four winners were not supported by any sectarian or political combinations. Col. Ward polled a good vote in all the wards up to the Nineteenth, and in the northern section of the city and returns indicated opposition of the colonel. But a glance at the tabulated returns shows Col. Ward got a big vote all along the line.

With the primary election a thing of the past the nominees will open the campaign immediately, election day being less than three weeks away, and the final lap promises to be very exciting.

Party affiliations of candidates apparently did not influence voting to any substantial effect. Of the winners, Ward, Hill, Bond and Kreinheder are Republicans; Heald, Malone and Burd are Democrats, and Mixer is a Progressive.

The Buffalo Times in commenting upon the election result says in part:

The result of the first primary under the Commission Charter in Buffalo shows a healthy interest in the new form of government. More than 55,000 of a possible 80,000 voters participated in the nomination of eight candidates from among whom four will be selected to manage the city for the next four years. The interest was more manifest on the West Side than on the East Side of the city, and if there should be complaint later on that men are chosen who are not easily accessible, or in close touch with the conditions in various sections, the people will find that they have only themselves to blame. More than ever the question of candidates is now up to the people.

In the course of a few days there will be some sort of a general alignment, undoubtedly, of the men who may be expected to associate together in the final campaign. But four of the eight are to be elected, and that seems to be one of the regrets of the situation, for it is rather trying to ask the citizens and the candidates to immediately plunge into another campaign. The survival of the fittest, however, we assume is the aim of this election process, and all good citizens will seek to so shape its course that our citizenship may be united behind a policy of municipal government which will place Buffalo in the very front rank in industry, comerce, trade, municipal achievement and social contentment.

Rural Mail Service Impaired; Failure to Understand the Cause

Washington, (Special Correspondence).—Complaints continually coming to Washington tell of impairment of the rural mail service because of changes made in recent months by an administration whose head and chief subordinate officers had no practical knowledge of the service prior to their appointment to their present positions. Failure to understand rural conditions and the needs of the farmers, is the only explanation that can be made, for it is incomprehensible that the Department would intentionally cripple the rural mail service.

A few days ago the Master of the State Grange in Pennsylvania told of the manner in which the rural delivery service had deteriorated in that state. Now comes a Congressman from Minnesota with a plain declaration of facts showing that the Department has made changes of the most incredible kind, even including the establishment of a route on roads which have been abandoned 15 or 20 years and which are utterly impassible in any kind of weather. The only plausible explanation of this latter action is that in changing the route from one road to another, the Department merely consulted a map and did not have the proposed change inspected by some one familiar with the neighborhood.

Congressman Sidney Anderson, of the First Congressional District of Minnesota, says that in most of the counties of his district there has been an elimination of one or two routes, parts of the routes eliminated being attached to others. This policy has added additional miles to practically all the routes in the counties affected, some of them now being as much as 32 miles long.

"Farmers in all these counties say it will be practically impossible for the carriers to cover their routes during the winter months, especially if we have a heavy snow," says Mr. Anderson, who has been in close touch with the farming communities. "There has been considerable curtailment of service, a great deal of added inconvenience, and in many instances it will be impossible to serve the routes as established.

Mr. Anderson points out one injurious effect of these changes which was also mentioned by John A. McSparran, Master of the Pennsylvania State Grange. He says: "These wholesale changes result in changing the addresses of thousands of farmers, and practically nullify the use of the parcel post in a local way, as only a comparatively small proportion of the farmers are now served from their trading town."

Theoretically, the only person injured by these changes are the farmers, but in practice the local merchants and all other persons having dealings with the farmers are injured in no less degree. Says Mr. Anderson: "The changes practically render valueless the mailing lists of every merchant, and will result in very great confusion i nthe handling of the local mails for some time to come."

The endless confusion resulting from a change which compels af armer to get and send mail from one town while he transacts his local business inanother, will be readily apparent. If he has produce to send to market by parcel post, he certainly wants it to go to the town where he does his local trading. A change in routes which makes him a patron of some other postoffice, as stated by Mr. Anderson, renders the service so valueless that hem ight as well go after his mail as have it delivered by rural route.

DR. SHAW GETS BIG OVATION

Wieting Opera House Crowded to Hear Noted Suffrage Leader Answer "Antis" Claims.

Syracuse—Dr. Anna Howard Shaw's reception here last night rivalled anything of its kind accorded a public personage The famous Pennsylvania campaigner met with one continues ovation during her trip from the Onondaga to the Wieting Opera house, the hour came for closing the meeting it was quite apparent that Dr. Shaw had convinced her audience that the Constitution of the state of New York should be amended on November 2 by striking the word "male" from the suffrage clause.

At the outset of her remarks she started with a reply to Colonel J. H. Irish who attacked her in Albany recently, and her reply was in the nature of an explanation of why the colonel had attacked her. That meant going back to the California campaign, and when she had done with Colonel Irish her audience was in an uproar.

Hanging Is "Wicked"

The colonel, it appeared, had adjured her to "go hang herself" among other things and she replied, "Why, if Colonel Irish doesn't like my society, why does he seek to continue it—for it is very wicked to hang oneself."

The literature of the ever-offending "antis" came in for the most severe broiling upon the gridiron of Dr. Shaw's ridicule. Picking up clipping after clipping she—well she inclinerated them all. In some instances she merely read them aloud, and then stopped to listen to the shouts of laughter.

"Don't vote for votes for women," she read from a Pennsylvania circular "There are ten thousand reasons why you should vote no. Here are six of them." When the laughter subsided she read the six reasons.

The first was that women should not subject themselves to the strife, publicity, falsification and unpleasantness of political campaign."The greatest sin in the world," said Dr. Shaw, "is selfishness. How selfish of these antis. We want our share of the publicity and the lies, too."

"They protect us in our homes,"was the second reason, and in reply Dr. Shaw drew a picture of the line, miles long, of women and their children who have no homes. It was a passing note of pathos, well and effectively handled.

"Women's greatest right is to be free from this political medley," was the third reason, and Dr. Shaw merely chuckled—and everyone chuckled with her. "And that is one of the six reasons—six out of 10,000."

"Do not vote for woman suffrage," was the fifth reason, and on that Dr. Shaw made no comment.

"Don't start something you can't finish," was the sixth reason, and that, to, failed to elicit any comment.

Called Many Names

"And these are their arguments," the suffrage leader said, summing them all up, "these are the arguments of desperate men and women against democracy. They are so desperate they have descended to calling names. In an single publication I have been called an old spinister and a Mormon, a Socialist and an Anarchist; and arch crime of all—a feminist. Thus, you see, they are in their last ditch."

Dr. Shaw was most effective probably when she traced in a few clean-cut sentences the extension of suffrage in America. Beginning with the first charter of rights, which permitted church goers to vote, she went down through the substitution of taxpayers for churchgoers; white males for taxpayers; male citizens for white males. "And in the beginning God said it is not good for man to stand alone?"

LUCK

Is just another name for good, hard, persistent plugging. Luck is with the merchant who Advertises, not because he advertises, but because he keeps on advertising indefinitely — Which Means Success.

YOUR SUCCESS

Means the success of your town. Now, honestly, are you doing what you can for your town? Are you "A Herald of Progress"? Do you realize that by doing what you can—which means as much or more than you are doing now, you will be helping yourself—Which Means Success.

If you cannot now be placed where you belong, it is time to right about face, read the words by Ella Wheeler Wilcox, and say to the publishers of your home newspapers—

"I'LL DO WHAT I CAN"

Who takes for his motto "I'll do what I can,"
Shall be better the world as he goes down life's hill;
The willing young heart makes the capable man.
And who does what he can, oft can do what he will,
There's strength in the impulse to help things along,
And forces undreamed of will come to the aid
Of one who, tho' weak, yet believes he is strong,
And offers himself to the task unafraid.

"I'll do what I can" is a challenge to fate,
And fate must succumb when it's put to the test;
A heart that is willing to labor and wait.
In its tussle with life ever comes out the best;
It puts the blue imps of depression to route
And makes many difficult problems seem plain,
It mounts over obstacles, dissipates doubt,
And unravels kinks in life's curious chain.

"I'll do what I can" keeps the progress machine
In good working order as centuries roll;
And civilization would perish, I ween,
Were not those words written on many a soul,
They fell the great forests, they furrow the soil,
They seek new inventions to benefit man,
They fear no exertion, make pastime of toil—
Oh, great is earth's debt to "I'll do what I can."

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

Your Home Newspapers Are Your Greatest Asset. Are You Doing What You Can For Them?

Why Bowser Exaggerates

Mrs. Bowser Demands to Know.

By M. QUAD.

Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

"Mr. Bowser."

Mr. Bowser had read the evening paper and finished his cigar and was nodding in sleep when the voice of Mrs. Bowser, as above, reached his drowsy ear and gave him a jump.

"What is it he growled?" as he opened his eyes and scrambled around.

"I want to talk with you."

"Well, go ahead. You needn't scare a man half to death because you want to talk with him. I was dreaming that Dr. Cook and I were searching for the west pole out in Oregon."

Mrs Bowser looked at him for a minute, and then began:

"Mr. Bowser, I want to know why you exaggerate the way you do. It is getting to be something shameful, and it has got to stop?"

"What do you mean, woman?" he exclaimed as he suddenly roused up.

"I will tell you what I mean, sir. One evening about six weeks ago our minister and his wife called. During the conversation he mentioned that a friend of his passed through the fire in the north woods of Canada two or three years ago. He said that his friend saw two black bears with their fur afire. You remember, don't you?"

"Yes, I remember."

"And you at once turned around and said that while you and a companion were out in the Rocky mountains hunt-

"HE CARRIED YOU TO SAFETY."

ing a forest fire took place at night. You knew nothing about it until the tent was burning over your heads. The other man had already suffocated, but you rolled out of the flames and ran seven miles. Then you stopped to draw a long breath, and you found that your eyebrows had been singed off, your ears blistered, your hair turned to a brick color and the soles of your shoes burned through in seven different places. You had just started to run another seven miles, when a huge grizzly bear approached you and laid down upon the ground that you might mount to his back. You did so, and he carried you to safety and licked your burned ears before he passed from sight. You told that story Mr. Bowser, didn't you?"

"I did," he calmly replied.

"I was looking at our callers as you related it, and their faces told me that they believed it all a monstrous lie."

"Well, I can't help that."

"It was one evening about four weeks ago that Mr. Bascomb and his wife called. He and you got to talking about the war and he said that during the civil war he captured nine of the enemy with only a club in his hand, and was made an officer for so doing. He told that didn't he, Mr. Bowser?"

"I should say he did?"

"And then you had to have your inning. You related that during the Boer war you were commander of a British man of war. At daylight one morning as you were cruising around you saw a Boer warship three or four miles away. She also saw you and endeavored to escape, but you put on steam and overhauled her. She ran up the white flag of surrender, but you paid no attention to it and opened fire with your 160 great guns. She went to the bottom in five minutes carrying with her her crew of 7,000 men. Not one of the poor fellows escaped. You were made Admiral Bowser for your great gallantry. Mr. Bowser, you reeled that story off as if you were telling about digging a woodchuck out of his hole."

"Yes, it was easy work," he half yawned.

"But do you think that either one of them believed one single word of the story? In fact, you had only begun it when I saw Bascomb wink at his wife. He kept up the winking all through it, and three or four times she had to make great efforts to choke back her giggles and her titters."

"But why did he wink and she want to giggle?" asked Mr. Bowser.

"I'll tell you why. Both of them knew that you were not in the Boer war; that the Boers had no warships; that no man-of-war ever carried a crew of above a thousand men. Mr. Bowser, your story contained three of the most whopping lies I ever heard."

"Oh, I don't know about that."

"One evening about two weeks ago," said Mrs. Bowser after looking at him in astonishment, "our neighbors, Mr. and Mrs. Green, came in for a game of cards. We were just ready to sit down at the table when Mr. Green mentioned the fact that he had just met that day the man who had saved his life some thirty years ago. As a boy Mr. Green had gone out to skate on a small lake. He had been skating about three-quarters of an hour when a large wolf came out of the forest and began to pursue him. The pursuit had lasted nearly an hour, and the boy was about to fall from exhaustion when the man spoken of came along with his dog and the wolf was frightened away. Mr. Bowser, did you tell a story to match Mr. Green?"

"Most certainly," he answered.

"Yes, you did. And Mr. Green began laughing as soon as you started in. He seemed to understand that there was a whopper coming, and he was right. You said that when you were a boy fifteen years old and your parents lived near a river in Florida you went out one night with your skates to have a little spin. Wolves were plenty in that location, but you did not think that any wolf would be so daring as to attack young Samuel Bowser. You didn't even take a crowbar with you as a weapon of defense. When you made the statement Mrs. Green was looking on the floor for a lost hairpin. You may have thought she had lost one, but I knew better. She wanted to get her face out of sight so that she could laugh."

"But why did she want to laugh?" asked Mr. Bowser.

Mrs. Bowser's only direct reply to this was a look of contempt, and then she went on:

"You had only gone half a mile on you skates when you heard the howl of a wolf. Did it scare you? Not much. Young Samuel Bowser was not a kid to get scared over the howl of one wolf. You simply continued to cut pigeon wings and curlycues. Presently there came the howl of a second wolf. No attention was paid to it. The howl was heard by your mother at home, but she only greeted it with smiles. She didn't know much about wolves, but she did know her son Sammy from head to heels. At this critical point, Mr. Bowser, you must have noticed that Mr. Green went to the front door to see if it was raining. He was gone about five minutes and must have had five hearty laughs during that time. His face was still twitching as he came in."

"I don't see why he wanted to laugh," remarked Mr. Bowser.

"Maybe not. There came a howl of a third, fourth and fifth wolf, but you only smiled in disdain. Your mother heard them, too, but she did not even stop her knitting. As you moved slowly up the river whistling as you went, there came more howls until you finally estimated the number of wolves at fifteen. Then, of a sudden a pack of the fierce and hungry brutes dashed out upon the ice and with foam flecked jaws and clashing fangs rushed upon you. Was Samuel Bowser there to be pulled down and made wolf meat of? No, you weren't there, were you, Mr. Bowser?"

"I don't remember that I was," he replied.

"No. You were scooting up the river, not for your life, but to amuse yourself with the savage brutes. You let them come so near the foam flew on your coattails, but at no time were you in danger.

"It is said that a wolf can tire out a horse, but when they got hold of young Samuel Bowser they lost their job. After he had drawn them fifty miles up the river they began to wheeze and pant and tire out. Then three or four of the pack turned back to look for an easier chicken roost, and those who continued on lost their speed and spirit. How far did you lead these wolves up river, Mr. Bowser?"

"Never mind that," was the reply.

"I think you said 150 miles. It was then coming daylight, and you wanted to have some fun with those wolves. You circled around them. You pulled their ears. You grabbed them by the tail and swung them about. You gave them an occasional kick. You drove them before you to the starting point of the night before, and there you booted them into the woods, where they fell down exhausted. Your mother had not been alarmed over your absence, but she had come down to the bank of the river to see if any muskrats were playing around. She held out her arms to you and called you her gallant boy. You might have continued that wolf story for another hour, but the Greens rose up and said they must go home on account of the baby, and they went. I heard them laughing all the way home."

"I will see Green tomorrow and ask him what they were laughing about," said Mr. Bowser.

"You needn't see him. They were laughing about your lie. In the first place, no river in Florida ever freezes hard enough to bear the weight of a baby, and no living boy or man ever skated 150 miles without a stop. There were various other flaws in your story, and even an idiot could have told that there wasn't a word of truth in it. Mr. Bowser, why do you tell these falsehoods?"

"Well, Mrs. Bowser," answered Mr. Bowser after hesitating for a long minute, "if you think that I am the sort of a man who will let another man come into my house and sit face to face with me and tell a bigger lie than I can, you had better get acquainted with me all over again."

And as Mrs. Bowser had not gained much of a point she said no more, and Bowser will probably continue to lie at every favorable opportunity.

A Story of The Balkans

By DONALD CHAMBERLIN

Shortly after the assassination of the Austrian royalties in Servia that brought on the big European war I was talking with my friend Hardegan about it and noticed that he was under considerable emotion.

"If the subject is disagreeable to you, Ned," I said, "let us change it."

He made no reply for a few moments, then lowering his voice said:

"You know that my wife was born and brought up in one of the Balkan states."

"I know that you have been very secretive about your wife's past," I replied.

"There is a reason for my secretiveness. The people of the Balkan states have lived in a constant state of oppression by the Turks and of late years in dread of being absorbed by one or another of European sovereigns. My wife had spent her childhood in familiarity with the barbarous acts of the Turks and when she became a woman saw her country in process of passing into an empire lying to the west."

He then told me the following story:

"My wife, as you know, is called Anna. That is not her name, but I shall not give you her real name or tell you where is her birthplace. When I went abroad before settling down to my profession I put aside a year for travel. In Vienna I made the acquaintance of an Austrian of prominence who let me into the secret of Austrian intentions respecting the provinces lying to the eastward of the empire. That summer Bosnia and Herzegovina were annexed.

"From Vienna I went to Servia and thence through all the Balkan states. In one of them—I shall not say which—I met my wife. We took a desperate fancy to each other at once. Her family was noble, and, she being both refined and intelligent, there seemed no reason why we should not be married except that we were of a different race.

"After our engagement I told my wife what I had learned about Austrian intentions concerning certain Balkan states. I noticed that she listened with deep emotion. She hated the Austrians and seemed to dread their encroachment. My information confirmed certain hints she had received that the emperor of Austria was about to appropriate her native state and that a certain Austrian diplomat was then in the capital—in which she lived—who was taking certain preparatory steps for the occupation. This seemed to work upon her mind, distressing her very much.

"I was glad when our wedding day arrived, for she was to leave her home with me for America. The bridal was solemnized with a certain barbaric splendor which was enhanced by the picturesque costumes of all but myself, I wearing the usual American clothes and looking for all the world like a weed in a flower garden.

"In the evening after the ceremony my wife bade goodby to her family and friends with so much emotion that I wondered if she would be content in our far distant home. Then we entered the carriage that was to take us to the station. Before starting my wife told me to ask the coachman to stop at the house of a friend of hers to whom she wished to say goodby. I noticed that Anna carried in her hand a small package, and I asked her why she had not put it in a trunk or a satchel. She replied that it was glass and perishable.

"When we reached her friend's house she asked me to remain in the carriage while she went in and bade her friend goodby. She would not be gone more than two or three minutes. I assented. She went to the door, still carrying the package. A young woman admitted her; the two disappeared inside for about a minute; then Anna reappeared and returned to me—without the package. I saw no evidence of an emotional parting between the two girl friends. Indeed, both seemed absorbed in something else.

"From Anna's home we passed into Hungary. In the morning we were at Budapest, and at the hotel I noticed knots of persons talking excitedly on some subject and on inquiry learned that an attempt had been made during the night in the city we had left to assassinate the Austrian diplomat, who was preparing the way for the state's annexation. A woman had thrown a bomb through an open window into a room where her intended victim was sitting. He was badly injured, but not killed. The news did not appear in the newspapers. It was simply whispered from one person to another. Indeed, it was never published to the world.

"When I rejoined my wife I told her what I had heard. She turned pale and in two quick questions asked if the girl who had thrown the bomb had been captured and if the attempt had been successful. The answer to the first question I did not know. The second I answered mechanically, for my wife's emotion, taken with other events, led me to suspect that she had delivered to the assassin the bomb that had been used.

"The look of horror on my face revealed to Anna what was on my mind. Clasping her arms about me, she confessed that she had been a party to the attempted assassination and begged me not to turn against her. Despite my repugnance to her participation in what the world considered a crime, I could not turn away from a bride of less than a day.

"'We must get out of Austria at once,' I said, and within half an hour we were on our way to the train."

For the Children

Baby Zebra and Mother in Central Park (New York) Zoo.

New York city is the proud possessor of two zoological gardens, one in Central park and the other in Bronx park. The latter is the larger and is said to be one of the finest institutions of its kind in the world. Central park zoo is much smaller, but still it contains a number of specimens of rare animals. In one respect Central park zoo leads. It now has a baby zebra, said to be the first of its species born in captivity in this country. The picture shows the little fellow being fondled by his mother. The youngster is a finely marked specimen of his race and is as frisky as a young colt. William Snyder, head keeper of the zoo, will soon have the little fellow christened with appropriate ceremonies.

The Queer Penguins.

Sir Ernest Shackleton, who led the British antarctic expedition which so nearly reached the south pole, tells amusing anecdotes of the penguins, that, when standing upright, look from a distance like a lot of dignified gentlemen in black coats and white waistcoats, and many a time shipwrecked castaways in the southern hemisphere, approaching some desolate coast, have imagined the distant penguins sitting upright upon a rocky shore to be human beings. Sir Ernest tells that one day a big penguin strolled into camp and saw one of the shaggy dogs. Mr. Penguin stared and stared and came closer to see what manner of beast this might be, until the dog snapped playfully at the bird's funny short legs. Next day the penguin came again to camp with a personally conducted party of penguins, apparently to show them the dog. They came often after this, and the explorers amused themselves by occasionally giving them a concert with the phonograph, to whose music the birds bobbed around in a circle with much apparent pleasure. About fifteen species are known. The king penguins are the largest. They exist in colonies of many thousands.—Farm Journal.

A Paste Pot Party.

Did you ever give a paste pot party? You'll need some old magazines and a pair of shears, as well as a blank book in which to paste pictures. You can make the blank book yourself from pieces of plain, smooth paper, and, in fact, each little guest might enjoy making such a book for herself or himself. Sick children always like to look at scrap books, and so you might send the ones you make at the party to a hospital after you have finished with them.

A set of cut out paper dolls should be given each child to carry home as a souvenir of the occasion.

Origin of a Word.

The origin of "windfall" in the sense of good luck dates back to the time of William the Conqueror. It was then a criminal offense to cut timber in the forests. Only such could be gathered as the wind had blown down; hence a heavy windstorm was hailed by the peasants as so much good luck, and from this we get the term.

Scarecrow and Snow Man.

The scarecrow was chasing the snow man,
No, it wasn't a dream at all,
For I saw them as plain as daylight
From the top of our garden wall.

There were miles and miles between them,
Or months, perhaps I should say,
For the snow man passed in December
And the scarecrow passed in May.

The chase was very exciting,
As on and on they whirled,
But they came no nearer together,
For I followed them round the world.

But the winds blew hard on the scarecrow,
And he found no place to hide;
They tore him to rags and tatters
And scattered him far and wide.

And the sun beat down on the snow man,
In his garments of dingy white;
I saw him grow smaller and smaller
Till he vanished quite out of sight.

But each year this chase is repeated;
You can see it as well as I,
If you live [illegible]
And watch [illegible] they're passing by.
—St. Nicholas.

FIRE ABOARD SHIP

A Danger Every Vessel Faces and Is Prepared to Meet.

QUICK ACTION BY THE CREW.

When an Alarm Is Sounded Every Man Springs to the Post and the Work to Which He Has Been Assigned—Working the Pumps.

In every ship carrying passengers the law requires that there shall be posted in a conspicuous place what is known as a station bill, giving the post of duty for every man in the deck, engineer and steward's departments in case of fire or abandoning ship. The law further requires that there shall be drills once each week at least and that during the stay of a ship in port these drills must be performed in the presence of a United States inspector of steamships. This is done to insure orderly and prompt action against any danger that may threaten. During these drills the pumps are tried out, and all the apparatus must work to the satisfaction of the inspector or the ship will not be permitted to sail until repairs have been made and everything works as it should.

Some ships are provided with tubes let into the deck and extending into the holds containing thermometers, which are examined every four hours. Any suspicious increase in temperature brings about immediate and thorough investigation. In this way the presence of fire can be discovered before it gains serious headway.

There is a rapid ringing of the ship's bell for about a minute. Instantly there is a change throughout the ship. Where but a moment before things were going on in the manner prescribed by the daily routine now all is activity. Men get to their fire stations with the alacrity induced by danger.

Sailors under the direction of the officers get out hose lines and appear with axes and lanterns. One group is ripping the battenings off the main hatch, where the fire has been detected. They drag the canvas away and open the booby hatch (a small opening in the large hatch cover), and immediately there pours out a column of dense black smoke.

Two or three men make an attempt to go down, but after two or three trials they are obliged to give it up. The captain gives the order to flood the hold and turn on the steam lines. Hose is pushed into the opening, which by now resembles a crater, for the air admitted by taking the cover off has fed the flames, and smoke and flame roll out in alarming quantities.

Suddenly the hose fills out and the swish of water under high pressure is heard. At almost the same time far below in the smoke filled hold the hissing and roaring of liberated steam reach the anxious ears on deck. The pipes connecting with the boilers have been put into use, and the fire is already beginning to feel the choke of the steam as it keeps the air away and settles over everything in a dense, damp cloud. While some pumps are throwing tons of water into the hold others are hard at work taking that same water out, for any great amount of water sloshing about would endanger the stability of the vessel.

Up in his cramped quarters Sparks is working with all his skill to pick up some station ashore and flash the wireless call for help. The spark crackles and crashes, then stops. Sparks snaps shut a switch, and then with deft fingers making an adjustment here and there listens in for the faint buzz that announces that his call has been heard. There comes just a series of faint buzzes, like the noise of a fly on a drowsy summer afternoon. At once the operator is galvanized into action. Again the spark crashes out the ship's position and need. Soon ships alter their courses and with all possible speed make for the threatened ship, to stand by in case of need.

Perhaps the crew are able to master the blaze. And, again—and this is a danger that always stares them in the face—perhaps they can't. What happens then is not always pleasant to think about. You will doubtless recall the burning of the Uranium liner Volturno and the lives that were lost then while other ships stood by helpless. That is what is likely to happen when the blaze gets beyond control. And this is only one of the dangers that every seagoing ship must face.

When a sailing vessel takes fire it is a case of man the hand pumps unless the ship should be a modern one and carry a donkey engine and a steam pump. Those of wooden construction offer very little resistance to the fire once it gets headway, and it is generally a case of all off when a windjammer is discovered to be afire.—New York Sun.

When California Was Unknown.

In an old geography printed in 1815 appears the following: "California is a wild and almost unknown land. Throughout the year it is covered with dense fogs, as damp as unhealthful. In the interior are volcanoes and vast plains of shifting sands, which sometimes shoot columns to great heights. This would seem nearly incredible were it not for the well authenticated accounts of travelers."

PAJAMAS THE MEN WILL LIKE.

Linens, madras, mercerized poplin and pongee are used, in plain and figured effects, for pajamas.

Every man likes comfortable sleeping garments, and the old fashioned pajamas which have an ugly way of dividing themselves during sleep are giving away to more convenient models made in one piece. The design illustrated has the front and back cut in one. A choice of sleeves is provided—long sleeves with turn-back cuffs or short ones, simply hemmed. If made in average size for a man the pattern calls for 5 yards 36-inch material; for boys, only 3½ yards, the same width, are needed.

A careful study of the cutting guide shows that the various sections of the pattern are laid on an open width of material. The front and back (A) rests on a lengthwise thread of the fabric, while the sleeve is placed to the right. In the upper left-hand corner the pocket is arranged, then several inches to the right the underfacing and cuff are laid into place.

There are so few seams that the making is very simple. After closing the shoulder seam as notched the shoulder seams of the underfacing are closed. Next, adjust underfacing to position underneath front and back, center-backs, shoulder seams and corresponding edges even. Close leg seam as notched. Close center-back seam from neck edge to double "oo" perforation. Stitch a bias facing about 1½ inches wide when finished underneath back from double "oo" perforation to the leg seam. Turn hem at lower edge of leg on small "o" perforations. Work a buttonhole at small "o" perforation in back at pointed end and sew a button at large "O" perforation for closing. Center-front indicated by double "oo" perforations.

Large "O" perforations on pocket indicate front edge; turn hem at notches. Adjust on left front, upper edge of pocket along small "o" perforations.

Close the sleeve seam as notched, close cuff seam and sew to sleeve. To adjust the sleeve to position lap armhole edge of front and back to line of small "o" perforations in sleeve, double "oo" perforations even, seam of sleeve at single large "O" perforation in front and back section and bring the line of three single small "o" perforations in sleeve to shoulder seam. Fell edge of sleeve underneath over seam.

Leg of Mutton in Blanket.—Make deep, narrow gashes in the thick end of a clean leg of mutton. Crowd in a mixed seasoning of salt, red and black pepper. Add a little minced onion, a little dry mustard and powdered herbs. Brush all over with melted butter or soft bacon fat. Then sprinkle lightly with salt, set on a rack in a roasting pan. Put into a very hot oven.

Let brown; then rub over a tart jelly melted in a little hot water and envelop it in a crust of flour and water, made very stiff and rolled half an inch thick. Pinch the edges tight together, lay back in the pan, cover and bake in a hot oven. Take up, break the blanket carefully, lift out the meat and pour the gravy over from the envelop into a small saucepan. Add to it either hot claret or a spoonful of tart jelly, along with tabasco, boil up and serve in a boat.

Broiled Shad Roe With Bacon.—Take six pieces of fresh shad roe. Wipe thoroughly with a towel, lay on a dish and season with a good pinch of salt and two tablespoonfuls of sweet oil. Roll gently to avoid breaking and arrange them on a broiler. Broil them for six minutes and pour over a maître d'hotel sauce. Decorate with six slices of broiled bacon and six quarters of lemon.

Tomatoes Stuffed With Cucumber.—Peel five tomatoes. Cut off the stem ends and scoop out the pulp thus forming the cups. Set turned upside down in a cool place. Chop fine the solid pulp from the tomatoes and one cucumber. Chill before chopping. Stir into a cupful of cream dressing and fill the tomatoes with the mixture. Salt and pepper will be needed in addition to that in the dressing. If at hand a pimento may be chopped with the other ingredients or two tablespoonfuls of grated horseradish may be used. Serve at once on lettuce leaves.

Tomato Soup.

Cook a quart can of tomatoes or its equivalent in fresh for twenty minutes, then rub through a fine sieve. Season with salt and pepper and a few drops of onion juice. Cook a quart of milk in the double boiler, adding, when at the boiling point, two tablespoonfuls of flour stirred smooth in a little cold milk. Add two tablespoonfuls of butter.

Now beat the yolks of two or three eggs in a tureen, pour the milk into the tomatoes and this mixture into the tureen over the eggs, beating vigorously so they will not curdle. Sprinkle finely cut parsley over top and serve very hot with croutons or bread sticks.

French Bouille.

An acceptable soup for hot days is the French bouille made of thickened milk. Put in a saucepan two tablespoonfuls of wheat flour, a dessertspoonful of sugar and a teaspoonful of salt. Mix to a smooth paste and add a quart of hot milk. Cook in a double boiler until thickened and serve with crisp croutons and a dash of pepper. The hot milk will be found stimulating, yet delicate, proving just the soup one requires for a hot day.

Lobster Salad.

Boil one large or two medium sized lobsters and pick to pieces when cold. To make the dressing for them, beat the yolks of two raw eggs with a teaspoonful of salt, a pinch of cayenne, a half tablespoonful of powdered sugar and a full teaspoonful of mustard wet with vinegar. Add gradually and at first very slowly one cupful of olive oil. When quite thick whip in the strained juice before adding two tablespoonfuls of vinegar. Just before serving add to the dressing one-quarter cupful of sweet cream whipped to a froth; stir all well together and into the lobster. Line a salad bowl with the crisp heart leaves of lettuce, put in the seasoned meat and cover with a little more whipped cream. If a little more acid is liked use vinegar.

Chicken Veal.

Have veal stripped from the shank, cut in pieces large enough to serve, boil in salted water until very tender, roll in flour and fry the same as chicken. If desired, cooked peas may be heated in the skillet after the meat has been taken out and served as a garnish for the meat.

OUR GREAT CANAL

How Vessels Cross From Ocean to Ocean at Panama.

GOING THROUGH THE LOCKS.

Electric Locomotives of Unique Design, With a Cog Rail System, Are Used For Towing Purposes—Safeguarding the Lock Walls and Gates.

Forty electric locomotives of unique design are used to tow shipping through the huge locks of the Panama canal. When the canal was being planned it was apparent that the various winch and capstan systems in vogue for towing ships through existing canals and locks would not do at all for Panama. After a thorough study of the entire problem of maneuvering ships through the locks at Panama it was evident that they could not safely proceed through the locks under their own power and that a substitute for the ship's power should embrace the following requirements:

Ability to place the ship in proper relation to the lock.

Capability for keeping the ship in its course.

Accelerating and retarding the ship without rupturing the lines.

The lines when once attached should be used without change for lockage in flight.

In passing through the canal from the Atlantic to the Pacific a vessel enters the approach channel in Limon bay, which extends to Gatun, a distance of about seven miles. At Gatun it enters a series of three locks in flight and is raised eighty-five feet to the level of Gatun lake. It then steams at full speed through the greater part of the channel in this lake for a distance of twenty-four miles to Bas Obispo, where it enters the Culebra cut. It passes through this cut, which has a length of nine miles, and reaches Pedro Miguel, where it enters a lock and is lowered thirty feet. Then it passes through Miraflores lake for a distance of one and one-half miles until it reaches Miraflores, where it is lowered fifty-five feet through two locks to the sea level, after which it passes out into the Pacific through an eight and one-half mile channel.

The main features of all the lock sites are identical, and the following brief description of the Gatun locks, with special reference to the arrangement of the towing tracks, ship channels, inclines and approaches, gives a clearer conception of the towing scheme in general.

There are two channels at Gatun, one for traffic in each direction. The channels are separated by a center wall, the total length of which is 6,390 feet. There are two systems of tracks, one for towing and the other for the return of the electric locomotives when returning idle. This, however, refers only to the outer walls. For the center wall there is only one return track in common for both the towing tracks. The towing tracks are naturally placed next to the channel side, and the system of towing utilizes normally not less than four locomotives running along the lock walls. Two of them are opposite each other in advance of the vessel, and two run opposite each other following the vessel. The number of locomotives is, however, increased when the tonnage of the ship demands it.

Cables extend from the forward locomotives and connect with the port and starboard sides, respectively, of the vessel near the bow, and other cables connect the rear locomotives with the port and starboard quarters of the vessel. The lengths of the various cables are adjusted by a special winding drum on the locomotive to place the vessel substantially in midchannel. When the leading locomotives are started they tow the vessel, while the trailing locomotives follow and keep the cables taut. By changing the lengths of the rear cables the vessel can be guided, and to stop the vessel all the locomotives are slowed down and stopped, thus bringing the rear locomotives in action to retard the ship. Therefore, the vessel is always under complete control quite independent of its own power, which is not used, and the danger of injury to the lock walls and gates is consequently very greatly lessened.

These towing tracks have a specially designed rack rail extending the entire length of the track between the rails. It is through this rack that the locomotive exerts the traction necessary for propelling large ships and climbing the steep inclines. When the locomotive reaches one of the inclines between the locks, the grade of which may be as much as 44 per cent, or when it is towing a ship, the cog rail system is utilized to enable the locomotive to climb the grade and in the other case to exert traction necessary for pulling the ships. The cog or rack rail is laid between the track rails and the locomotive is provided with a cog wheel or rack pinion to engage the rail.—Electric News.

New Towel Ends.

The ends of the newest embroidered towels are surely trying to emulate the latest of dress fashions, for they are showing every variety of scallop. Where one was once content to hemstitch the ends of a huck towel and place a simple embroidered letter in the middle of one end, to be strictly up to date one must now finish the toweling into some new cut of scalloping.

TWELFTH NATION ENTERS CONFLICT

Serbia and Greece. She also sought a section of Turkish territory.

The first important victory of German diplomacy was scored when Turkey was induced to cede to Bulgaria territory along the line of the Dedeaghatch railway. In addition to this, it has been reported that Bulgaria has been promised a regulation of the frontier north of Adrianople as far as the Black Sea, whereby the district of Kirk Kilissee would revert to her. She also is said to have been pledged efficient help in obtaining the whole of Macedonia, including the so-called disputed part of Uskub and the coast region along the Aegean Sea to the Struma, as well as part of Dorbrudja.

Bulgaria ordered the mobilization of her army on September 21. On October 3 Russia sent an ultimatum to Bulgaria, demanding that she break with the Central Powers within twenty-four hours, but the Russian demands were rejected, and three days later diplomatic relations between Bulgaria and the Powers arrayed with the Quadruple Entente were severed. The same day Bulgaria sent an ultimatum to Serbia regarding Macedonia, and on October 8 issued a manifesto announcing her decision to enter the war on the side of the Central Powers.

Bulgarian troops actually invaded Serbia about twenty-four hours before war was declared.

WAR PICTURES, THE REAL ONES

Many Historical Scenes

There is the brave defense offered by the Belgian army, the magnificent stand made by them which frustrated the German plan to dash across the little nation and the quick crushing of France by the capture of Paris. Your blood thrills and youb egin to realize the place in history which that gallant army of King Albert's will have. You see them preparing pontoons in preparation of the retreat from Antwerp. This is decidedly interesting. They work like a victorious army, father than one preparing to fall back from the enemy. It shows them as they are, defeated, but knowing that in defeat they have won a greater victory than the overpowering force which isd riving them back. Then there is the retreat from the city. The army, cavalry and artillery, march out of the city and away. With them goes the crowd of refugees, men and women and children, carrying such of the belonging as can be made into bundles. It brings home with gripping force the terribleness of the war.

Matinee prices will be 10 and 15 cents; evening performances, 10, 15 and 25 cents.

CHIEF ACCUSES SMALL BOYS

Chief Dyer is today in possession of an expensive pair of automobile glasses as well as several other articles which have been stolen from automobiles during the past few days by juveniles.

Lately a number of complaints have been made to the police by automobile owners that articles had been taken from their cars while they were left standing at the curb. Rochester and Oneida streets figure as the scene of several of the thefts. When report of the robberies was first made, Chief Dyer had suspicion of certain boys and after questioning them, some of the stolen goods was recovered. The boys have not been arrested but their fathers will be notified to appear before the chief to discuss probable action in the cases.

The young men charged with the robberies have all been arraigned in police court before and iti s likely that this will go against them.

An automobile tire is still missing and the police are searching for it. Auto owners at odd intervals during the past summer have notified the police of small articles being taken from their cars and the boys questioned by Chief Dyer were strongly suspected but no evidence could be obtained against them.

HAS ANY ONE HERE SEEN DOMINICK?

Dominick Musealena, 14, a pupil in the State street school evidently has heard October's call. Dominick is being looked up by the truancy officer and will be haled, when found, into his teachers' presences likewise that of his parents.

Dominick has a weaknes for "hookey stunts" as he has shown on several previous occasions, but he has the sympathy of several persons who were once just boys in October.

GERMAN SHIP SUNK IN BATTLE BY SUBMARINE

London.— The German steamer Walter Leonsardt, 1,261 tons, was blown up in the Baltic yesterday by a British submarine, carrying out the English campaign to prevent Germany from receiving supplies from Scandinavia. The crew was permitted to take to the small boats.

The German Government is arranging to convoy German merchant steamers in the Baltic. Seven convoyed steamers have already arrived at Swedish ports, according to advices from Copenhagen.

NEW CASE OF ANTHRAX DEVELOPS AT HOSPITAL

New York.—What is believed to be another case of anthrax poisoning was discovered at Bellevue Hospital last night at an hour when the physicians were about convinced that the life of George F. Stackpole, of Riverhead, has been saved through the administration of the Eichhorn serum for anthrax.

The new patient, Martin Bradsky, a laborer, fifty-eight years old, by a sinister coincidence, also comes from Riverhead, though if could not be learned last night that he was at any time in contact with Mr. Stackpole.

ORANGE READY FOR ROCHESTER

O'Neill's Men Preparing to Reverse Defeat at Hands of Princeton—The Line is Unchanged.

Syracuse. — Rochester, always a good opponent, is the next team on the schedule of the Syracuse University football team and Coach Frank J. O'Neill is preparing a team to oppose the Flower City boys, as though the Rochesterians held the secret of the season's success.

Since returning from Princetown last week Monday the Orange eleven has been put through a series of strenuous drills the object of which has been a more complete knowledge of fundamental football. That this has been gained wasm ade apparent in the hard scrimmage drill this afternoon.

Loose handling of the ball was a cause of the 3 to 0 defeat last week, and with that event fresh in the minds of all the players, there has been greater care in the handling of the pigskin. The work of center candidates has improved wonderfully and the ends and backs are much more careful in the execution of the forward pass.

Only one change has been made in the line up. Matt Brown, a ten second sprinter who played good football with the freshmen last fall has surplanted his old team mate Newbury, who has not shown the desired fineness in his play. Brown is a fast man in an open field, a clever off tackle smasher, and in all is considered a valued acquisition.

The line remains unchanged, although Brainey is looming up again as an end. He is fighting it out with Ruststeing, a former LaFayette High school Buffalo man. DuNos and Travis are playing the flanks well.

Following the Rochester game the Varsity will be gone two Saturdays, at Providence, where Brown will be opposed and at Michigan. Then they return to meet [illegible], Colgate and Dartmouth following which games the big [illegible] will commence.

MRS. A. P. BRADT AS HOSTESS TO D. A. R.

The first meeting after the summer vacation of Kayendalsyona Chapter, D. A. R., was held on Monday at 408 Hannibal street, Mrs. A. P. Bradt being the hostess. It was the largest attended meeting of any regular session since the organization of the chapter, although several of the Fulton members were in New York and other places. Miss Elizabeth Osgood as leader had the program in charge and Mrs. Anna M. Harvie read a sketch of Martha Washington, which with the discussion following made a very interesting session of the Daughters.

The out-of-town members present were Mrs. John Snell of Baldwinsville and Mrs. Eugenia Northrup Elder of Lysander.

The reception rooms wee elaborately decorated with flags which are always in evidence at the D. A. R.'s meetings.

Mrs. Bradt was assisted in entertaining by Mrs. Dewitt Gardner and Mrs. John M. Cox.

The next meeting will be held with Mrs. F. E. Goodjon, with Mrs. Emma B. McKinstry as leader and Miss Jane Osgood to furnish sketch of Abigail Adams.

QUAKER UNIVERSITY BARS SUFFRAGISTS

Philadelphia.—The board of trusteesof the University of Pennsylvania today refused to grant permission to Edward R. Cheney, a sophomore, to hold a suffrage meeting in Houston Hall.

According to Cheney, the university authorities gave as their excuse that "suffrage deals with a political issue."

NOTABLES IN THE LIMELIGHT

General Maurice Sarrail of the French Army.

General Maurice Sarrail, who has commanded the French land forces at the Dardanelles since early in August, 1915, had won recognition for military skill before being named commander in chief of the army of the orient. When the forces of the kaiser were making their first onslaught into France General Sarrail commanded the Third French army, which at that time faced northwards, with its back to the fortress of Verdun. Under pressure of the German rush General Sarrail's army bent around Verdun, yet held a firm and unbroken line that effectively stopped the advance of the German center. General von Kluck, in command of the German army at the extreme western end of the line, was forced to swing back, and then General Joffre saw that the time had come to fight the great battle of the Marne. Sarrail had saved the day.

General Sarrail first received military notice when, in 1887, with the rank of captain, he was appointed to the staff of the Seventeenth army corps. Several years later he was attached to the staff of the military governor of Lyons, the headquarters of the Fourteenth army corps. He was made a lieutenant colonel in 1902 and eight years later was appointed director of infantry at the war ministry. The next year General Sarrail reached the rank of general of division, and in 1914 he was given command of the Eighth army corps. This is the position he held just before the outbreak of the war.

The former French commander at the Dardanelles was General Gouraud, who was severely wounded and forced to return to France.

Governor of Montana.

The recent conference of governors, governors elect and former governors at Boston was gathered for the purpose of discussing matters of vital public interest—such matters as more efficient state administration, problems of penology, policies of conservation and the great question of a more adequate preparedness for the defense of the nation in case of war. Thirty-four chief governors, past, present and elect, were present at the convocation.

Among the governors who took a leading part in the discussion of "Economy and Efficiency In the State" was Governor Samuel V. Stewart of Montana.

SAMUEL V. STEWART.

Governor Stewart is a native of Ohio, although he was educated in Kansas. He studied for a time in the Kansas State Normal school at Emporia and was graduated in the law from the University of Kansas in 1898. He began the practice of law at Virginia City, Nev., the same year and for five years was city attorney. Removing to Montana, he served for eight years as county attorney of Madison county. In 1910 he was chairman of the Montana Democratic state central committee. In 1912 he was chosen governor of Montana for a term of four years. His home is at Helena.

CONGRESS MA YHANDLE BRITISH TRADE PROTEST

Washington.—It was stated officially today that the purpose of the State Department to send the pending vigorous protest to Great Britain against violation of American commercial rights will not be abandoned because of reports that Great Britain is about to make new promises and concessions.

Officials said that as the note deals with principles, any concessions now made by Great Britain whicch do not grant them as "rights" would be futile. They believe none of the principles asserted in the note will be accepted.

There are indications that Congress will ask the Department to send down all the correspondence with Great Britain. This is usually done when an irreconcilable conflict develops between two nations. Congress in that way would take over the whole question.

ARMS WORKERS STRIKE AT PHILADELPHIA PLANT

Philadelphia, Cct. 13.— One hundred union tool makers of the new Remington Arms plant at Eddystone, built for the manufacture of 3,000,000 rifles for the English and French armies, started a strike today which it is declared will paralyze the great plant.

The men quit because of the discharge of three union workmen without explanation. One hundred and fifty machinists, representing the balance of the present working force, are scheduled to quit work tomorrow.

ZEPPELINS HAVE KILLED TO DATE 177; TWENTY-ONE RAIDS OVER ENGLAND

Wednesday night's Zeppelin raid on England was the twenty-first since the war began, and the total casualties reported in all the raids are 177 killed and 463 injured. Few of the raids reached London. On June 15 sixteen persons were killed and forty injured. Early in July there was an ineffectual attempt to drop shells on Harwich. On August 9 fourteen persons were killed, on August 12 six, and on August 17 Zeppelins flew over the eastern counties, killing ten persons and wounding thirty-six. On September 8 occurred theg reat raid on the heart of London, in which twenty persons were killed and eighty-six injured. After September 8 there was only one unimportant raid on the east coast, on September 14, in which there were no casualties, until the attack was made on London on Wednesday night. The latter surpasses all the others in its casualties, fifty-six being killed and 114 injured.

No previous attack upon the British capital or the metropolitan district proved so deadly as did the raid of Wednesday night. The casualties exceed those of any previous raid upon the London area. The last in which casualties were reported occurred on September 8 and that raid is second in point of the toll taken in lives and injury inflicted upon persons by the dropping of bombs, On that occasion twenty persons were slain and eighty-six injured.

Indications are that the cry for reprisal, which in London has become almost general, is being echoed throughout the length and breadth of the United Kingdom. Nothing since the commencement of hostilities appears to have aroused the people of the nation to such a pitch of anger.

The mass meeting held yesterday is likely to be followed by others. Unlike the patient attitude of awaiting developments which characterized the people of London and elsewhere after the previous air attacks by the Zeppelins, the temper of London last night indicated a distinct realization of the danger which before had not been apparent.

The general feeling is for reprisal. Observation of the old time accepted usages of warfare, in spite of the piratical methods adopted by a ruthless enemy, isb eing repudiated by an incensed people. Demand that German cities be subjected to similar bombardment is heard upon all sides.

Germans Retake Trenches Captured by British in Rush

London.—British troops on the line from a point north of Ypres to the junction with the French left, east of Grenay, resumed the offensive and in a violent engagement won and lost a thousand yards of trench south and west of Hulluch and advanced behind the Vermelles-Hulluch road and along the edge of the Hulluch quarries.

The thrust was the most important in point of territory and numbers involved that has been attempted since the great drive on September 25 and 26. The attack was preceeded by a bombardment that included even the naval guns, which shelled the Germans in their Belgian coast fortifications. The fire became particularly severe in thev icinity of Ypres and culminated in an intense bombardment on the Hulluch-Loos front, where the main attack was to be delivered.

The retreat of the Germans, however, was the signal for their artillery to centre a fire on the abandoned works, and a veritable hail of shells fell on the heads of the Britons. They held on for some time, at considerable sacrifice, but in the end were compelled to fall back from their hard won ground.

While this struggle was in progress an attack was launched against the Hulluch forest and the Hohenzollern redoubt, or the part remaining in the hands of the Germans. One trench on the side of the forest was captured and the main trench in the redoubt was occupied.

The French at this time entered the battle by advancing against the Givenchy woods, but no changge in the relative positions of the forces is apparent from the reports.

Washington Disturbed Over Japan's Attempted Alliance

Washington.—Reports of a forthcoming alliance between Russia and Japan have a disturbing significance here. It has been felt that as long as Japan had the menace of the Russian bear at her back she would be less likely to concern herself with the United States.

In the ten years which have elapsed since the treaty of Portsmouth, Japan has made repeated efforts to conciliate her beaten antagonist. Recent references in the Russian Duma to the projected alliance were warmly received.

Petrograd.—The Russian Foreign Office has received official news of a wish expressed in Tokio for the conclusion as speedily as possible of the preparatory work for the negotiation of a Russo-Japanese alliance.

It is said that one of the high officials of the Foreigga Office will shortly go to Japan on a special mission.

CAPT. PRESTON AT ONE TIME WORKED IN FOUNDRY AT FIRST & E. BROADWAY

Noble D. Preston, author of the book entitled, "Uniform of the Army of the United States—1774-1889," was a captain in the United States Army, according to the statement of Mr. C. F. Foster, of this city, who was well acquainted with the writer.

Mr. Preston, as mentioned in yesterday's issue of the Times, donated a copy of his book to the Fulton Public Library and it was the opinion of Miss Forsyth, librarian, that the donor was a former Fultonian. Positive verification of this could not be had yesterday although several men stated that they had a faint recollection of meeting Mr. Preston. It remained for Mr. C. F. Foster and his brother, Mr. J. M. Foster, old residents of Fulton and members of the firm of Foster Brothers & Chattilon, to furnish positive information relative to Captain Preston, as he was known during the period when he lived here.

Mr. C. F. Foster states that Captain Preston in the early '60's was connected with the Wasson Brothers' foundry, where he too worked, and which stood on the site of the present plant of the Oswego Falls Pulp & Paper company. Captain Preston was a relative of the Wasson's. When the North and the South were thrust into war, the captain wasi nstrumental in organizing a company here.

Mr. J. M. Foster tells of meeting a son of the captain a number of years ago in the Columbia Vallley, in the State of Washington. The son, Charles Preston, requested Mr. Foster to convey his respects to an aunt then living in Fulton, Mrs. R. K. Sanford. Mrs. Sanford's maiden name was Wasson.

In connection with thep ublication of the book just received at the library, Mr. J. M. Foster furnishes the information that Charles Preston is reputed to have the second largest private collection of books in the State of Washinggton, also that he has read each and every copy.

MACCABEES VICTORIOUS OVER THREE-LINK MEN

In the second match game, played last night, of the series between the pool experts of the Maccabees and the Odd Fellows, the Maccabees were again victorious. As in the previous set, every man on the Maccabee team easily defeated his opponent. A large crowd witnessed the games.

Following is the score:

Odd Fellows	Maccabees

The next match will take place in the Odd Fellows rooms on next Thursday night.

A series of matches between the Maccabees and Elks is being talked about and no doubt will takep lace after the present series have been played.

JUDGE LINDSEY CALLS JUDGE WRIGHT LIAR

Denver—Judge Ben B. Lindsey was ejected from the District Court today. He accused Judge Wright of making unfair rulings and displaying prejurice. The clash came during the trial of Frank L. Rose, charged with conspiracy to ruin Judge Lindsey.

"When Sullivan, Rose's attorney, reached the point charging me with maligning my city and State." said Judge Lindsey, "and the Judge sat quietly without interrupting him, I got up and deliberately called him a liar. The Judge was entirely responsible for this necessity."

NEW METHOD USED IN BLOOD TRANSFUSION

New York.—Blood transfusion by a new method invented by Dr. Richard Lewisohn, of Mt. Sinai Hospital, was accomplished sucessfully yesterday at Har Moriah Hospital. Thirty ounces of the life fluid was transferred from the veins of Michael Sidney, twenty, of Nyack, to those of Dora Silbert, thirty-eight, No. 114 First avenue, a sufferer from pernicious anemia.

The blood was taken from Sidney with a needle syringe and "poured" gradually into the circulation of the patient.

EDISON OFF TO SPEND FORTNIGHT AT THE FAIR

New York.—Thomas A. Edison left for the San Francisco Exposition last night on a long vacation—for him. He expects to return November 1. Accompanying the inventor were Mrs. Edison and their sons, Charles and Theodore. They will be theg uests of honor at the Fair next Thursday, Edison Day.

Secretary of the Navy Daniels, visiting Dr. Miller R. Hutchinson, Edison's chief engineer, was at Brick Church station to see the party off.

MILLS COMMITTEE WOULD TAX INCOMES BETWEEN $1500 AND $2500; A UNIT

New York.—A State income tax which will produce an annual revenue of $45,000,000 one-third of which must be borne by individuals whose incomes are between $1,500 and $2,500, is the present programme of the Mills Legislative Committee on Taxation, which has been sitting in this city for two weeks examining city officials, financiers and economists on possible new sources of revenue to meet the growing cost of State and city government.

Senator Ogden L. Mills today presided over a private meeting of the committee, at which it was definitely determined whether the next Legislature shall be asked to apply an income tax. The domocratic members of the committee, who are in the minority, opposed the project.

It became known yesterday for the first time that Senator Mills has had experts in the employ of the State busily engaged in figuring out how much money can be raised by an income tax. These experts have reported thats uch a tax moderately applied and equitably distributed should net the State at least $45,000,000.

These figures, (however, are predicated on a complete abandonment of the special franchise tax, which has netted the communities of the State about $10,000,000 a year. This tax is collectible by the tax commissioners of each community and is applied to the community in which it is collected. In New York city alone in 1914 the assessed valuation on which the special franchise tax was collected amounted to $404,420,311. It is estimated that about $7,000,0000 of the special franchise tax is collected in this city alone.

Although a tentative form of applying the proposed income tax has been drawn up, it is said that no consideration has yet been given to the matter ofd ivision of thep roceeds between the State and the cities. The abandonment of the special franchise tax in favor of an income tax on corporations would work a hardship on the communities unless their share of the new tax was at least as much as they had enjoyed since the Legislature decreed that francrises should be taxed.

BOARD OF EDUCATION ASKS FOR INCREASED BUDGET; TOTAL $53,000

Fifty-three thousand dollars is the sum wanted by the Board of Education to carry on the ensuing year's work. This was decided upon at the meeting last night in the Fourth st. building, and it is a sum considered by members of the Board in keeping with the demands of a growing school district.

If the Mayor and Board of Aldermen pass upon the item asked for the money will be used to defray the expenses involved by making repairs to the Walradt building, maintaining the open air school in old Falley seminary, and in grading a lawn about the Erie st. school building. Of course these matters should not eat up the additional $9,000 asked for this year, but the contemplated increases in salaries to be paid to public school teachers will eat up whatever balance may be left.

A short session of the Board of Works was held last night when the department made known its request for funds to carry on next year's city work. Thes um asked for was $40,750, which is subject to the pruning knife of the Board of Aldermen.

Mayor Fox was an attentive listener at both meetings and he advised the two Boards to go easy wherever possible, as it is likely that the Aldermen have in mind any idea of allowing increased appropriations to go through their hands.

Armenian Towns Ravaged; Thousands Are Murdered

London.—Patrick W. J. Stevens, British Consul at Batum, Russian Transcaucasia, reports the arrival at Urumiah, Persia, and in the Caucasus, of a large number of Armenian refugees from Asia Minor. They are in a pitiable condition.

They declare that Turkish troops have ravaged Sassun, thirty-five milesn orthwest of Bitlis, killing a majority of the inhabitants and the defenders of the town. Only a handful of the people were able to flee to the mountains, where the refugees say they are doomed to perish.

The Bishop of Bagra, writing from Echmiadzin, the Consul says, reports that a large number of refugees have arrived there and at other points in the Government of Drivan. They come chiefly from the Melazghert and Aadesh districts and Van. In all 160,000 refugees have passed through Igdir and Echmiadzin.

The condition of these people, Mr. Stevens adds, is indescriable. The daily mortality among them is about 100, due chiefly to dysentery and typhus. Medical men from Russia are attending them, but unless immediate relief comes half the refugees must die.

IS THE SOLICITUDE HONEST?

It is a wholesome sign that a member of the daily press circulating in Fulton is so generally joining in the attempt to drag down the reputations of certain public officials and in warning the people of this city against the dangers of looking at men who attended a late summer outing.

Crazy news stories seem delightful while they are being written, but the after effects are sometimes swift and exceedingly full of pain for the writer. This being true a word to the wise should suffice.

Every era of orgy of a correspondent resembles every other. They differ not in character and symptoms, but in occasion merely. The occasion for the present outburst of protest is the story that has appeared from time to time in rehashed form in an out of town medium, in effect that a minister of the Gospel of this city and certain lawmakers of the county were snapped while in juxtaposition with bottles of something stronger than mineral water.

Even if there is a grain of truth in the painful stories as published, one cannot help wondering how much of the solicitude shown for the welfare of the accused is really honest, and how much of it is merely put on for the purpose of stampeding the lambs of politics into the advertising columns of the organ where they may be shorn, is a question to ponder over.

It however, devolves upon the accused men more than ever to apply the same remedy that was applied upon one previous occasion when the same correspondent essayed himself as the champion of each and every faction concerned in the campaign for commission-manager form of government. Then the offending writer received the hardest kind of a slap—he was snubbed.

FARM IMPROVEMENTS

There are statistics in increasing quantity to prove that the farmer is spending money liberally on farm improvements. The demand from rural quarters for lumber, hardware, fencing material, drain pipe, brick and cement is large. This indicates an unusual amount of building activity. Prosperity has come to the farmer and he is making the most of it. It is significant of his habit of thought and general procedure that he is putting a big part of his profits back into his business—a fact that ought not to escape the notice of the banker.

Big crops and high prices have brought none of that "speculative tendency", of which capitalists stand so much in dread in these days of a plentiful gold supply, to the farmers of the country. Prosperity has not upset them. The three or four seasons of bumper yields and increased revenues, experts tell us, have practically wiped out the general averages and percentages based on figures collected in the last census. It is not true today, for instance, that the average farmer's income is $1 a day. It is larger, as is readily demonstrated by his increased orders for building material, farm machinery and implements, tractors and motorc ars.

These facts have not gone unnoticed by the department of agriculture, and especially by the bureau having in hand the improvement of the farmer's domestic conditions. The United States government, in eight years, has spent $12,000,000 giving lessons in home economics to farmers' wives, and it means to spend a good deal more than this in the next eight years. Heretofore farmers' wives have been hampered in putting into execution much that the government has taught them. There was notm oney enough, Now, with the changed conditions, money is not lacking, and the bureau feels that its progress accordingly will be more rapid.

It reports, for example, that as a result in Michigan, water systems were installed in forty farm houses. This is by no means an isolated case. It shows that the farmer's wife, if not the farmer himself, has decided to divert some of the prosperity from the barn and the field to the kitchen. Domestic conditions are going to be improved, and the lot of the farmer's wife made easier, as it should long ago have been made. She means to eliminate the drudgery, The government has taught her how and now, with increased income she has the means of carrying her plans into execution.—Indianapolis News.

"MONEY OR YOUR CHILD"

What is designated as the "Money of Your Child" decision of a Supreme Court justice is described in yesterday's New York papers. It throws a new light upon the matter of marriage laws in this state, and should furnish excellent campaign material to the Suffragists who claim that man made laws are not all that the Antis advertise them to be.

Mrs. Alice M. Moncrieff and her husband, John R. Moncrieff, did not live happily. Their domestic affairs got into court when Mrs. Moncrieff sued her husband for a separation. The Supreme Court heard the case and handed down a decision, in effect, that pending trial Mrs. Moncrieff could receive from her husband $9 a week and $60 counsel fee, provided she relinquish the custody of her daughter, and turn her over to her husband. The child, Alice May, 8 years old, had always lived with her mother. The court said:

"I direct that thec hild be given to the father one week after the entry. If the child is not given to the father within the time specified the order providing for alimony and counsel fee is modified by striking out the provisions for the same. If the child is delivered the order providing for alimony and counsel fee is continued with the same force and effect, provided, however, that the plaintiff notice this case for trial the first Monday in October, 1915, and proceed to trial at that term of court."

Mrs. Moncrieff promptly chose to retain possession of her child, but her attorney has appeared before the Appellate Division to argue against the decision of the lower court. It certainly is astonishing to the layman that a family affair of this sort should have its decision hinge upon the acceptance of money in return for the custody of the child, the unhappy victim of the parents' disagreement. The woman's attorney made a strong argument to show thatt he lower court erred in making the child's custody the condition that governed the payment of alimony or counsel fee. We trust that the higher court may reverse this ruling, for if such a decision is valid under present law then it is high time that the law is amended and made more equitable toward the natural guardian of a child, the mother, when moral turpitude, ignorance, inability to support and such considerations do not enter into thec ase.

As Mrs. Moncrieff said, when the remarkable decision was handed down: "What kind of a mother would I have been if I hesitated for even a moment to choose my daughter instead of the money?"—Auburn Citizen.

HELLO TO HAWAII

A striking and sensational illustration of the advance of electrical science has just been furnished by the successful testing of contrivances by means of which the human voice was carried, on electrical waves through the air and ether, from New York across the continent and thence over 2,100 miles of ocean to Honolulu, a distance of 4,600 miles.

Given the proper apparatus and the mayor of Reading might now send a greeting to the mayor of Caracus or Bogota, or Rio Janeiro, or one of our manufacturers might solicit orders, through the air by word of mouth, from prospective customers south of the Equator.

This, however, startling as it is, is only one of the high points and spectacular incident of electrical advance. It is surpassed by the wonderful growth and daily multiplying possibilities of the service which the electric current can render, along humble and practical lines in our daily life. For instance, electrical trains are now running on the Pennsylvania Railroad between Broad Street Station and Paoli. That is probably the beginning of the electrification of all the railroads in Pennsylvania. We may not have to live long to see smokeless and comparatively noiseless locomotives drawing trains to and through Reading.

These trains, when they come, will probably derive their power from generators located at the mouths of mines or by the side of culm banks on the other side of the Blue Mountains. Instead of hauling the coal the power of thec oal will be transmitted to where it is to be used, over a cable.—Reading, Pa., Times

SLIDES IN THE CANAL

Probably every citizen will agree that General Goethals is better placed at Panama fighting the renewed effort of nature to block the canal than he would have been in New York city striving to make the police efficient and at the same time withstand the pressure of the politicians.

The Panama situation is not one to be lightly dismissed. It is not going to be corrected by the presence of General Goethals, however great his ability and indomitable his determination. The slides in the Culebra Cut, now known as the Gaillard Cut, almost baffle the imagination of those who have not seen them. They in no way resemble an ordinary land slide due to a washout, but are shiftings of hundred of acres of soil, sometimes forty feet deep, due to the pressure of hill tops upon their bases, weakened by the canal excavation. This same pressure will sometimes force the bed of the canal upward to a height of twenty feet, the pressure seeming to act as a lifting force. This was a common phenomenon at the time the canal was under construction. But it had been hoped that the pressure of the water when the ditch was filled might counteract this force.

How little the uninformed citizen understands the character of the Panama slides is shown by the multitude of suggestions made for their correction. One man urged the plastering of the canal prism with concrete. That was, in fact, done in the earlier days of construction, but the concrete slid with the rest. Multitudes have suggested binding the banks by planting willow trees, as is done along the dikes in Holland. But that, too, is ineffective, the break coming at a point far below the depth of the deepest roots of any tree.

During construction Colonel Goethals declared that the only cure for the slides was to keep digging out until there was no more hillside left to slide. It is a herculean task, but probably the only complete remedy. —N. Y. American.

C. M. B, ASSOCIATION ELECTS MUENCH TREAS.

New York.—William Muench of Syracuse was re-elected supreme treasurer of the Catholic Mutual Benefit Association this afternoon at its annual convention held in the Hotel Astor. John J. Hynes of Buffalo remains as supreme president and Martin A. Cameron of Cornell was elected supreme recorder.

But few changes werem ade in the by-laws of the association. Previous to the convention there had been considerable discussion over the report that rates were to be increased and that there would be dissention at the convention had been freely predicted.

Nothing of the sort happened, however. As explained by one delegate to the convention, those who had been foremost in their protests against any increase in rates had only been suffering from misapprehension.

The state association wasd ivided into two classes—one and two. Class one will be made up of the present members in the association. Class two will be made up from new members. The new scheme probably will not be put into operation until the beginning of the new year.

It was explained that options in class two under the new scheme will include many new features and that old members, that is class one, will not be excluded from class two. If they so desire they may enter class two by accepting the conditions under which any new members enters after January 1, 1916.

Martin F. Dillon of Skaneateles met with no opposition when he was elected a member of the Law Committee.

One Texas County Has Its "WE" Club of Joiners

The Kleberg County Commercial Club was organized, having in view the idea of getting every merchant and farmer in the county to join. Through the organization of this club was born the idea of community development. Here we unanimously decided to drop the words "I" and "me" and "myself" and use instead "WE." Our idea for this was to eliminate the line or barrier of distinction between the business man and the farmer. To accomplish our purpose, we called a community meeting at one of the school houses about seven miles from Kingsville, inviting all of the farmers to attend. Our president at that time, made a speech on cooperation, dwelling on the point of importance of the farmer and the merchant getting closer together, as their interests were identical, or should be, in their duty to do some public service or good for the general community. A farmer got up and said, with a great deal of sarcasm, that he was expressing the sentiments of the farmers present by asserting that "we thought so or expected as much for you business men to come out with the pretense of preaching cooperation, when the fact of it is we have been ordering some of our necessities, (meaning implements and most everything) from catalogue houses, and the merchants were getting afraid and taking steps in an effort to get their business."

We had occasion just recently to entertain a party of Houston business men and it gave us a great deal of pleasure to invite them to a barbecue on this farmer's property. He is one of the best boosters our club has today; in fact, he has attended several of our community meetings and will come every time he gets a chance.

I had occasion to ask a farmer to join our club. He refused by saying he thought our organization was for the business man and not the farmer. I called his attention to the fact that he was a business man; that in plowing up his land and planting his crop he expected to raise something to sell, and of course, a man who sells and buys articles, and works for a profit, and is successful, is bound to be a business man, and if he is not, he is a failure. The farmer then seemed rather complimented and to my surprise said, "I believe you are right" and asked me to put in his name for membership. He is now one of our loyal members.

The trouble with most retailers is that they do not get out and visit these farmer business men at their places of business. They expect the farmer to come into their store, buy their lumber, hardware and merchandise, deriving a profit of course, and never return the courtesy by a personal visit.

The secretary of the Kingsville Commercial Club issues a farmers' bulletin every few days on live subjects of interest to the farmers, giving them facts they want; he cooperates with them by these personal visits, talking over conditions and rendering whatever aid possible toward sucess.

In our club we have started a cooperative marketing bureau, issuing bulletins twice a month, listing all articles that the farmers have to buy or sell, whether it is hogs or chickens, eggs, an old wagon, or anything the farmer might want to buy or dispose of. This has been a great help and assistance in bringing the farmers in closer touch with each other as well as with the business men.—Charles H. Flato, Jr., Vice-President, Kleberg Bank, Kingsville, Texas.

EMPIRE UNITED MAY CHANGE PASSENGER RATES

The Empire United Railways will soon make application to the Public Service Commission for permission to change their rates on the Rochester-Syracuse Division and probably on other lines.

Under the new plan the fares will be regulated by mileage and the company will establish a rate of two or three cents a mile, wtih five cents as the minimum fare.

Under the present system, the rates of thec ompany on all but one of its lines are regulated in denominations of five cents. All of the fares are established so that there is no use for one cent pieces. The present register will not register anything under a nickel.

In the past there has ben considerable criticism from some of the towns. Most of the complaints alleged that thec ompany was discriminating either one way or the other against them. Theb usiness men of Rochester have hinted that the company was discriminating in favor of the business men of Syracuse.

H. C. Beatty, secretary of the company said that either the new register or some device of its kind would be installed by the company in the future.

FUN RAYS

By Ray I. Hoppman

SUCH IS LIFE.

WHILE one-half, bejabers! toils steady and labors, the rest of the world lolls in ease. And when we feel happy, our neighbors are scrappy and do just about as they please. And, gosh! ain't it funny? Some people have money and others can't scare up a dime! Some mortals are lucky, while others, real plucky, lose out ev'ry dodgasted time. Some laugh long and loudly—some strut with mien proudly and others are chucking the bluff. And folks that are healthy, quite seldom are wealthy, and healthy folks lack the green stuff. If half the world knoweth not what this half doeth—a funny old world it is sure. It's full of the toilers, the crooks and the spoilers—the honest, the rich and the poor. Now, why should a favored old guy, money savored, loll 'round in a big limousine? And why should another, his poor luckless brother, clean streets for a small stack of green? And why should a poet, a poor unwise "know it," write verse for the price of a prune, while others will squander the coin as they wander, and live in perpetual June? It does seem unequal; but hark to the sequel—it's time that I finished this rhyme. One lives by his working—the other, his shirking, and thus will it be for all time.

JURY GETS FEES FOR TEN MINUTES' WORK

Oswego.—Although in the jury box less than ten minutes, and during that time not listening to any arguments from opposing lawyers, the jury in the case of Eleanor D. Van Wagenen as executrix, etc., of Frederick D. Van Wagenen, deceased, viz. Wesley O. Paddock, in Supreme Court last yesterday afternoon, were told that the case had been settled, and politely informed by Judge Ross that they would receive their fee, just as if they had acted throughout the entire trial of the case.

"While I don't think you have earned it," said Judge Ross, "I do think that you are entitled to it." A few minutes before that Attorney Riley, of the firm of Riley and Sullivan, of Phoenix, and Attorney Pendergast, of the firm of Piper and Pendergast, were undecided whether to try the case or let it go over the term. However, Judge Ross told them to get together, and they did, announcing a few minutes afterward that the case was settled.

Judge Ross, before recessing court until Monday morning, called for District Attorney Francis D. Culkin and held a conference with him in the private chambers adjoining the courtroom. Mr. Culkin was asked regarding the conference when he came from the Judge's room, and said that it was simply a talk on the report of the Grand Jury. Mr. Culkin said that the jury will probably not conclude its work until Friday, and possibly not until some time next week. A large number of witnesses were before the Grand Jury yesterday afternoon. It is said that some very important matters are being investigated.

An order made by Judge Ross permitting the case of George H. Richards vs. E. A. Gladman, of Fulton, to go over the term on the payment of $10 costs was filed in the County Clerk's office today. Dr. Gladman asking that the case go over on the ground that he needed Miss Jennie M. Slanger, a former nurse at the Lee Memorial Hospital, as a witness that she was at present on duty at Grand Rapids, Mich., and could not come. Plaintiff, the affidavit says, asks $25,000 damage on the allegation that defendant improperly set his injured nose on November 13th, 1914.

TEAM STRONGER BY 100 P. C.

Coach Merrill Confident of Men's Ability to Meet and Conquer Tomorrow---Finances.

Today the high school football team will run through signals and practice running down punts, in preparation for the Auburn game which is to start promptly at 2:30 tomorrow afternoon.

Yesterday on account of the inclement weather the squad was not sent out on the field but was given instead a long blackboard talk relative to some of the fine points of theg ame.

Coach Merrill and the men who are assisting in drilling the team are favorably impressed with the showing made by the squad all week. Althougn the line is practically new, only one player from last year's team being present, each man from end to end is working in harmony with the others and the team appears to be 100 per cent stronger as a result.

Several men were out this week who have not been out since the East Syracuse game. Mangot has rejoined the squad and has been showing up well. Judd also is showing up in good shape and will get a chance to take part in tomorrow's game.

A new man, Pooler, who came out this week appears to be a comer and it is believed he will be given a chance to show what he can do under fire in the game against Auburn.

Coach Merrill has received assurance from the Auburn High school athletic manager that his team will be here without fail.

As a large expense will be incurred in bringing the Auburn boys here tomorrow it will be necessary to have a large attendance at the game and from indications the high school students will turn out en masse.

Today the students at the High school will commence soliciting funds for the benefit of the Athletic Association. The money obtained will go towards purchasing equipment for the football and baseball teams.

ORANGE EXPECTS TO WIN TOMORROW'S GAME

Syracuse.—When the Syracuse University football team takes the field against the University of Rochester eleven in the stadium tomorow afternoon, the orange will be represented by one of the strongest, fastest and most aggressive aggregations in years.

Following the brilliant battle against Princeton last Saturday, in which the Syracuse eleven showed its great strength by outplaying the Tigers both defensively and offensively. Head Coach "Buck" O'Neill has strengthened the weak spots in the team and Rochester will face a really formidable team, one of the best in the East this season.

OLD MINISTREL SELECTED AS TOWN CAT WARDEN

Montclair, N. J.—William B. Williams, an old-time ministrel man and former justice of the peace, has been appointed to the position of animal warden of Montclair. One of his first tasks will be to take a census of all the dogs and cats in the town, as the Common Council recently enacted an ordinance providing that cats, as well as dogs, shall be registered.

PHEASANTS NOT YET IN SEASON

State and Federal Game Protectors in the state yesterday issued warnings to pheasant hunters that contrary to a widespread belief, the open season on birds did not open yesterday:

According to the state law, pheasants may be shot on the last two Thursdays in October and the first two in November. Hence only on October 21 and 28 may the gunners go to the fields and all who plead ignorance of the law and begin the killing on the morrow, will be treated summarily, say the wardens.

There have been numerous inquiries made of the game wardens as to their attitude toward Sunday hunting, and as to whether they would make arrests for shooting on that day. Inquiry made of the wardens reveals the fact that it is within the realms of local authorities to prosecute for Sunday hunting and not within the province of the wardens.

Game Protector Travis says that Sunday shooting is not against the Conservation Law, but and old code regulates Sunday hunting the same as it does Sunday baseball, etc. The Conservation Laws provide for open shooting between such and such dates and make no referenee to the Sabbath. Hence, as Sunday shooting is prohibited by other laws, it lies in the scope of local authorities to prohibit it, and I shall make no arrest of gunners foor going a field on the Sabbath.

COLUMBIA MILLS WANTS TAX EXEMPTION HERE

In the contention over the assessment of the Columbia Mills at Minetto, that a personal tax was being paid by the company in New York city, and therefore should not be assessed in this county, it has developed that the receiver of taxes of the metropolis does not collect taxes from the corporation. On account of the company's claim the Oswego town assessment of $100,000 was wiped off the books.

WITBECK LAUDS COUNTY ROADS

County Will Soon Have 158 Miles of State Roads—Gaps Have Been Closed.

S. M. Witbeck, assistant engineer in charge of all highway work in Oswego county is reported in an interview with a newspaper reporter of The Oswego Times as saying:

"There are now in the county of Oswego, 130 miles of completed State and county highways which have been built under the supervision and direction of the State Highway Department, and which are commonly known as State roads. Ten miles were completed this summer and when the roads under contract are finished, Oswego county will have a total of 158 miles of State roads.

Gaps Have Been Closed

"The roads completed during 1915 were 3.66 miles ofc ounty highway between Hannibal and Fulton, and the State highway from East Ninth and Bridge streets, Oswego, to the city line in East Oneida street, 1.47 miles. The completion of each of these roads closes a long-standing gap. The contractor on the State highway between Hastings and Maple View has completed all but a mile of the concvrete roadway, and with favorable weather conditions expects to finish that road shortly after November 1. On this highway, County Superintendent E. A. Howard and the town of Mexico are placing concrete abutments for a new steel bridge over Little Salmon Creek, which, when completed, will be one of the finest bridges in the county. Superintendent Howard expects to be able to swing the steel work and have the bridge open for traffic, sometime in November. With the road also completed the last objectionable gap in the county will have been closed and detours on the Syracuse-Watertown line will be a thing of the past.

Repair and Maintenance

"We have done a great deal of repair and maintenance work in this county the past season," continued Mr. Witbeck, "and Mr. Johnson and myself believe that there is not another county in Central New York, whose highway system is in any better condition at the present time than Oswego's. Two miles of waterbound road were resurfaced with a new asphalt top between Fulton and Volney, and the three miles of highway between Bowen's Corners and Fulton were resurfaced with a waterbound top. Thirty-six of the 119 miles of roads in this county, which were under maintenance in 1915 have been given a surface application of tar or oil and stone, of which 18 miles were done under contract and 18 miles by department forces under Mr. Johnson's immediate charge. The roads oiled by the department include the West Fifth street highway south of Oswego city; the Volney-Palermo road, the highway from Scriba to New Haven; Maple View to Fernwood, and three miles of road east of Altmar village.

"Our repair gangs have been over practically every mile of road in the county, doing such patching and tuning up as was necessary, and included in this work were complete repairs on all concrete highways on the main line south of Oswego City to Three Rivers, via Fulton. Included in the repair work has been the placing of 2,000 yards ofg ravel for the purpose of restoring shoulders of highways, which are washed by rains and worn by traffic; 18,000 feet of guard rails has been repainted two coats, and 18 patrolmen have been employed on thev arious roads doing such work as can be accomplished without the aid or regular gangs of workmen.

A Difficult Problem

"The maintenance problem is a difficult one," said Mr. Whitbeck in conclusion, "for it requires constant study and attention with a view of keeping the roads in the best possiblec ondition and in the most economical manner. The ever increasing traffic on the improved State roads and the constant wear and tear resulting therefrom make it practically impossible to always keep the roads in perfect condition, but by the middle of November, when our repair and maintenance work usually closes for the year, it is safe to predict that the entire mileage of the State and county highways in Oswego county will be in a better physical condition than ever before and in one which the people of the county and the State department may be well satisfied with."

WATERTOWN SOCIALISTS STICK TO WORKERS

Watertown.—The following is the preamble and platform of the Socialist party submitted yesterday.

The Socialist party of the city of Watertown, in convention assembled, reaffirms its allegiance to the principles of international Socialism as set forth in the national and state platforms of the party, and declares that its ultimate purpose is to obtain the powers of government and use that power in the interest of the working class, and with that end in view we pledge every candidate elected to any office the first duty of striving to procure whatever is for the workers' most immediate benefit as rapidly as possible.

In entering upon thec ampaign of 1915, the Socialist party presents itself to the voters of the city of Watertown as the party of thew orking class and declares that the paramount issue in this campaign is thes ame as in all former campaigns, a conflict between the exploited and the exploiters for the control of government, and that power, when obtained, to be used in the interest of the working class. No political party can honestly serve all the people.

LUCK

Is just another name for good, hard, persistent plugging. Luck is with the merchant who Advertises, not because he advertises, but because he keeps on advertising indefinitely --- Which Means Success.

YOUR SUCCESS

Means the success of your town. Now, honestly, are you doing what you can for your town? Are you "A Herald of Progress"? Do you realize that by doing what you can—which means as much or more than you are doing now, you will be helping yourself—Which Means Success.

If you cannot now be placed where you belong, it is time to right about face, read the words by Ella Wheeler Wilcox, and say to the publishers of your home newspapers—

"I'LL DO WHAT I CAN"

Who takes for his motto "I'll do what I can,"
Shall be better the world as he goes down life's hill;
The willing young heart makes the capable man.
And who does what he can, oft can do what he will,
There's strength in the impulse to help things along,
And forces undreamed of will come to the aid
Of one who, tho' weak, yet believes he is strong,
And offers himself to the task unafraid.

"I'll do what I can" is a challenge to fate,
And fate must succumb when it's put to the test;
A heart that is willing to labor and wait.
In its tussle with life ever comes out the best;
It puts the blue imps of depression to route
And makes many difficult problems seem plain,
It mounts over obstacles, dissipates doubt,
And unravels kinks in life's curious chain.

"I'll do what I can" keeps the progress machine
In good working order as centuries roll;
And civilization would perish, I ween,
Were not those words written on many a soul,
They fell the great forests, they furrow the soil,
They seek new inventions to benefit man,
They fear no exertion, make pastime of toil—
Oh, great is earth's debt to "I'll do what I can."

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

Your Home Newspapers Are Your Greatest Asset. Are You Doing What You Can For Them?

Youngest Leading Lady in World Tells of Her Experiences in Support of Selig Movie Stars

"You See! He Does Not Love You!"

By GRACE DARMOND.

My home is in Chicago. One day about two years ago I walked into the Chicago studios of the Selig Polyscope company. The studios are not so very far away from my parents' home. Maybe that was the reason I walked into them. The superintendent of the studios needed 'extra people.' I had visited the studios in curiosity; I remained to take part in a Selig feature film. That was the beginning of my motion picture career. One must protograph well in order to attain any degree of success in motion picture work. I was told that I photographed well. My profile is clear and my features are adaptable to the animated screen. I was asked to take other minor parts. I liked the work—there is a fascination about it—and I accepted.

That was about two years ago. Today I have the honor of being assigned to many important roles in Selig Red Seal plays. I have assumed leading feminine parts in "A Texas Steer," "The Millionaire Baby," "The House of a Thousand Candles," "A Black Sheep," and other productions which have won further fame for the Selig company.

I have been asked the reason for my rapid success in a difficult profession. The only answer that I can give is 'hard work.' There were other incidents that also contributed to my success. One of the most important is that Col. William N. Selig, president of the company which bears his name, gives everyone a fair opportunity. He appreciates close attention to work and loyalty on the part of his employees. I was fortunate enough to please him and the directors and was assigned to more important roles as time passed, and I gave my entire time and thought to them.

Perhaps there is another qualification connected with my promotion that should be mentioned here. I had had stage experience. I appeared in the spoken drama when five years of age, taking the title role of Editha's Burglar.' Later I appeared in stock companies. This experience in the art of acting was certainly of untold benefit to me.

I have been told that I am the youngest leading woman in motion pictures. Maybe I am, but I have earned the parts I play. Working in motion pictures is not pastime—it is hard work. In motion pictures, as elsewhere, work counts.

Long hours fall to those who engage in motion picture acting. They report at a studio at a certain hour in the morning. They do not leave until a certain hour. Their day's work is just like a day's work in any other occupation in life. In warm weather the sun beats through the glass enclosure of the studio and the thermometer sometimes registers 150 degrees. Perhaps in this warm atmosphere one must be compelled to appear as a character heavily bundled in clothing, and you can imagine one's discomfiture.

There are many recompenses, also, and I think, on the whole, that the work is ever so much more enjoyable than the speaking stage. Girls who wish to enter motion pictures, however, should pause and think over the fact that they are embarking on a career—a branch of art which requires talent, intelligence and hard work. There are many girls who feel that if they could only appear before a camera they would be an instantaneous success, yet who would go to a business college for many months in order to become a stenographer. It stands to reason if one considers that preparation for such a position is necessary that ever so much more time must be devoted to learning an art which entertains millions of people daily. From my own experience I do not feel justified in advising any girl to try to become a screen actress.

There are times, of course, when I enjoy the excitement of being a player. An example of this was during the filming of the big Selig Red Seal play "The House of a Thousand Candles," at the Chicago studio of the Selig Polyscope Company. Doubtless most of my readers heard of the big car strike in Chicago, but few of them knew what havoc it played with the motion picture producers. We had many players who were working in the "Loop," Chicago theatrical center, and as the studio is quite a way from this place, and there was no auto service, Mr. William N. Selig ordered a huge truck in which all the players were taken to the theaters in which they were working.

There were other excursions, too, during the time I was appearing in "The House of a Thousand Candles." One of these was made to find a house which would correspond to the director's ideal "house" in which the "thousand candles" were supposed to be. All the players who had friends with homes which might serve the purpose told the director about them, and one day we all got into a big touring car and started our search. We covered almost all of the city of Chicago, and when we were all beginning to despair of ever finding an ideal "House of a Thousand Candles," the director suddenly called the chauffeur to stop. We were in a part of Wheaton, a suburb of Chicago, and none of us could see any "house" that might prove available. The director, however, made us all get out of the machine and tramp up a hill. As we rounded a curve in the road we saw beyond a clump of trees, which had been obstructing our view, the exact "House of a Thousand Candles" we had all been hoping for.

When we returned to the studio to take the interior scenes, we found that we needed many more times as many candlesticks for the "big set" as our property room had. We started a search for candlesticks and candelabra, and gathered them from every conceivable source—our own homes, homes of our friends, small shops near the studio and large stores in the business district of Chicago. After getting them all together we sorted them out and the director arranged them about the "set." The effect is beautiful in my estimation, and I am sure that those who see "The House of a Thousand Candles" will agree with me.

Mr. Harry Mestayer and Mr. John Charles, who have the two leading male roles, and Mr. Backus, who plays the "character" lead, were all cast in parts which fitted them perfectly and enjoyed the work fully as much as I did. The other players were also at their best, so we went through the entire production like a well-oiled machine. Mr. Heffron, our director, kept us all working together, and while no exciting accident happened to distinguish it from other pictures in which I have worked, I shall remember "The House of a Thousand Candles" for a long, long time, because of the pleasure I experienced in working in it.

CAUGHT IN A HURRICANE.

Captain Boothe Sought Life Preserver For Fireman and Was Only One Lost. Bermudian Also Brings In Thirty-three Survivors of Wreck In Mid-Atlantic Ocean.

The Quebec liner Bermudian arrived in New York from Bermuda with sixty shipwrecked sailors among her passengers and brought the story of how Captain Ernest Boothe of the British steamship Pollokshield, caught off the Bermudian coast in a hurricane and fog, ran his vessel ashore head-on and sacrificed his life while trying to insure the safety of one of his crew. This story has added interest because the Pollokshield was, up to the outbreak of the war, the Hamburg-American liner Graecia, plying between New York and West Indian and Central American ports.

The Graecia slipped out of New York harbor with a cargo of coal for the German cruiser Karlsruhe, was captured by the British, taken to Gibraltar and sold. Her name was changed to the Pollokshield, and she was used by the admiralty as a supply ship.

Had Cargo of Explosives.

The Pollokshield, with a crew of thirty-two men, left Cardiff, Wales, for Bermuda on Aug. 22 with a cargo of shells and gunpowder. In mid-Atlantic she encountered the great gulf hurricane and fought wind, fog and seas for five days. Captain Boothe had lost his bearings when at 8 o'clock in the morning of Sept. 7 the fog lifted and he found himself almost ashore on Elba beach on the south coast of Bermuda.

He tried in vain to get his vessel away from the reefs, but the gale was too strong. Nothing remained to be done but run ashore. Captain Boothe ordered the fires banked, called all the men up from below and assembled them on deck, tied down his whistle cord and headed his ship for the coral shore.

The journey was not a long one, and the Pollokshield soon struck, burying her nose in a great smother of waves beating over the reefs. She beached herself in such a way that she rested on a shelf of coral, and in a few hours she began to break in two just forward of the mainmast.

Captain Gives Up His Life.

Captain Boothe discovered that one of his firemen did not have a life preserver. The fireman said he had not been able to find one. The captain started aft for a preserver just as the ship broke in two, and the last his men saw of him he was being carried away on the crest of a wave.

The rear end of the ship slipped off into deep water, and much of the cargo fell out into the sea. The thirty-two survivors were taken off after thirty hours by Antonio Marshell, a Portuguese fisherman, who manipulated a whaleboat through the surf and got it alongside the stranded hulk.

Five of the survivors of the Pollokshield remained in Bermuda to work at recovering such of the shells as remain in the wreck. The others will remain in New York a few days and then start for England.

Besides the survivors of the Pollokshield, the Bermudian brought thirty-three survivors of the wreck in mid-Atlantic on Aug. 15 of the Italian steamship Purificazione, bound from Genoa to Norfolk, Va. The captain and crew of the Purificazione abandoned her several hours before she went to the bottom and were picked up a couple of days later by the British steamship Cayo Gitmano, which took them to Bermuda.

MEXICAN WOMEN PLEAD FOR BREAD

"Shoot Us!" They Cry—Ordered From Food Line.

DESPERATE LIFE STRUGGLE.

"Death Must Come, but Don't Let Us Starve; the Bullet Is More Merciful." Meanwhile Mexican Bandits, Bolder Than Ever, Are Sparing Neither Rich Nor Poor.

Torreon, Mexico.—Starvation conditions in Mexico City are fairly typical of central northern, northeastern and northwestern Mexico.

Northern Mexico has long since forgotten the principles of the revolution, the political, agricultural, financial and social "reforms" which were the slogans of Villa and Carranza. To the great mass of Mexicans those principles never were more than campaign talk. They understand that the military leaders are merely playing politics with guns instead of speeches, processions and votes.

To make matters worse, the Mexican bandits never were bolder or busier than they are now. With the always chaotic government of Mexico more chaotic than ever, the bandit raiders are sparing neither the poor nor the rich. They are mercilessly plying their trade.

In Torreon eggs sell for 1½ pesos each; chickens, 25 to 35 pesos each; milk, a peso for half a liter; cigarettes (as much an article of food to a Mexican as bread), 2½ and 8 pesos for a package of ten. A silver peso is worth about 18 cents in United States money and a paper peso about 7 cents. Practically there is no meat here, though the hotels occasionally are allotted a little by the government.

TYPE OF MEXICAN BANDIT.

Torreon always has a bread line. It is a long, patient, black robed line of women with bowed heads. Ablebodied men have either been killed or wounded in the fighting or are in conscript service or in hiding. So women and children stand in the bread line in front of the panaderia, or municipal bakery.

While the supply lasts each is given a pittance of cornmeal, sometimes a mere handful. When the supply is gone some turn away to forage in the garbage cans of more prosperous citizens. Others just wait in the bread line. Sometimes they faint before the doors open; sometimes they drop dead, and their bodies lie in the street. There are several of these panaderias, and a line averages 250 persons all the time. Some buy bread instead of taking flour. A tiny loaf of bread, hardly larger than a roll, sells for 50 centavos.

At one of the larger panaderias the crowd waited thirty-six hours. Then gendarmes appeared and ordered the women to leave. They did not refuse to disperse; they simply didn't go. The gendarmes repeated the order loudly and fired pistols in the air. A torrent of Spanish broke out from the women.

"Shoot us!" they cried. "Death must come. Shoot us, but don't let us starve to death. The bullet is more merciful."

Torreon is full of Villa troops, mostly elderly men or young boys. The flower of his army is dead or disabled, principally dead. The army of today is not well uniformed, spick and span, as it was a year ago when Villa was triumphant and his treasury was full of money. Villa's forces are thin, hardened, morose, the result of many battles and a succession of defeats. All that prevents mutiny is fear of the big brown man with the bushy mustache and the blazing eyes—Villa.

The army is sober. So is the civilian population. Knowing that sotol, tequila, mescal and the whole line of native strong drink tend to inflame men and make them ugly, Villa has enforced prohibition.

Northern Mexico is full of wounded men. "In the hospitals and on the streets of Torreon and Chihuahua City are about [illegible]

MISTAKEN FOR ANOTHER MAN

An Episode That Resulted In a Change of Lovers.

I was in a frame of mind to get all the fun that could be possibly extracted from a two weeks' vacation. I extracted so much in the first twenty-four hours that—but I anticipate.

I alighted at the hotel, gave my hand baggage to a porter and was climbing the piazza steps when I saw a girl whom I was sure I had never met before coming to meet me with a radiant smile.

"Good gracious!" she exclaimed. "I thought you were not coming till tomorrow."

"But you see I have come today," I replied, humoring her mistake.

"Well, I declare! You quite take my breath away," she went on, looking at me admiringly from tip to toe. "How you have improved! I'd scarcely have recognized you."

"You are the same lovely girl; you couldn't improve."

"Those people over there are looking at us. Leave me till after supper; then we'll walk on the beach."

I was glad to comply, determining that as soon as I rejoined her I would let the fact come out that I was not the lover she expected. When we met again my resolution weakened. I could not resist the temptation to enjoy a brief period with so charming a girl. We went down on to the beach in the gloaming and strolled on the line of foam. The moon rising out of the ocean glinted the crests of intervening waves. The stars were coming out. There was no sound but the plash of waves. I knew that if I talked of anything except love I should expose my hand, and it seemed as natural for me to talk love to her as if we had long been lovers. I told her how during the four years of absence my heart had yearned for her and begged her to tell me if I was to be made happy. Sailing on the broad sea of love I struck never a rock, and when it was time for us to go in she had no suspicion that she had made an exchange of lovers.

"And now," I said before parting, "give your reply in a kiss."

She kissed me. The next morning I rose late and was the only person in the breakfast room. Sitting by a window, I heard voices on the piazza.

"Who was the fellow?" asked a man's voice, "and what did he look like?"

"Like you, very much improved from what you were when I saw you last."

"H'm! You don't seem to consider me improved."

"Not in disposition. You blame me for a very natural mistake."

"A very natural mistake! If you make such mistakes after we are married there'll be the deuce to pay."

"We're not married yet."

I peeped through a slat in the blind and saw a man sitting with the girl I had made love to the night before. He looked very like me, though I did not feel flattered by the likeness. What should I do, slink out unobserved and take the first train or brazen it out? I scorned to follow up my prank by leaving these two lovers to quarrel on my account. I marched boldly out and joined them.

I certainly expected both to receive me scornfully. Without waiting for either to speak I begged a thousand pardons of the girl for not rectifying her mistake at once, giving as my only reason that she was so charming I could not bring myself to do so. While I was speaking, which I did humbly, the face of the girl slowly broadened into a smile; that of the man grew momentarily surlier. Having done all I could to atone for my sin I turned to leave them. The girl gave me a look that told me I was forgiven; the man gave me no look at all.

I resolved to leave the place that afternoon, but, meeting the girl without her lover, she extended her hand to me and asked me to take a seat beside her. I did so and told her of my intention to depart, which had been formed on the ground that my presence there would not be agreeable to her and her lover. She declared that she would not be the cause of my departure and begged me to stay. I determined to remain for awhile, but if my presence proved objectionable I would go at once.

That evening, observing the young lady sitting alone on the piazza, I joined her. To my surprise at my mention of her lover she said that he had gone.

Then she gave me her confidence in a matter of which I already knew the principal part. At eighteen she had admired a man whom she had known but a short time when he removed to another place. They had corresponded, and after four years' absence he had returned, hoping to get a favorable answer to his suit. She had been disappointed in him and had rejected him.

I chatted with her till the moon rose, then boldly asked her if she would walk on the beach. She accepted the invitation and, walking over the same sands as the night before, I made the same love. She proposed that I should go away and return for an answer in four years, but I told her I had been in suspense for twenty-four hours and that was long enough. She considered that ridiculously short, but yielded. When later I rallied my wife on accepting me on such short acquaintance she said:

"H'm! Do you suppose I was going to be put off after that engagement kiss?"

AN ELEGANT COSTUME IN BROADCLOTH.

Prune colored broadcloth dress trimmed with purple and gold embroidery.

It is made in princess effect and has a fichu vest of chiffon.

Handsome materials, not necessarily costly, trimmed with simple but elegant embroideries are features of Autumn and Winter fashions. This strikingly handsome costume is carried out in dark purple colored broadcloth, trimmed with velvet of the same color. The embroidery is done in dark purple silk and gold threads. In medium size the costume requires 4½ yards 54-inch material, with 1 yard 40-inch velvet for the belt and ⅝ yard lace or chiffon for the vest.

In cutting the dress it is necessary to fold the material in half for some of the sections and in a quarter fold for the others. For instance, the side-front, which is a panel running the full length of the figure, is laid near the half fold of material, yet on a lengthwise thread. If the applied back is used and made of the same material this is placed directly along the fold. Even if the applied back is of velvet or satin it is arranged on the material in the same way. The shield and belt are arranged near the selvage edge with the back between these sections and the side-front. The collar and cuffs are placed to the extreme right of the goods.

From the quarter fold the sleeve, the front, the back gore and the collar are cut. The material must be so folded that the selvages meet in the center instead of along an edge of the goods.

The surplice shaped vest is new and looks particularly well outlined with a dainty braid border. The neck, however, is capable of much variety, and the square, round or high neckline being equally provided for. The length of the sleeves and the skirt may be shortened by following single "o" or double "oo" perforations indicating such lengths.

Smooth cloths are coming into their own again, for they take the fur trimmings splendidly, and just a little fur and braid form a lavish effect.

LILLIAN LORRAINE

No, this is not an advertisement for a new hot-weather drink. It is Lillian Lorraine, of "Neal of the Navy" fame, celebrating the end of the filming of an episode by having a drink of soda. The new Pathe and Balboa star has "made good" in pictures.

WM. COURTLEIGH, JR., MISTAKEN FOR SAILOR.

The lucky chance which made William Courtleigh, Jr., who plays the lead in "Neal of the Navy", the Pathe and Balboa serial, turn his head, saved him from a forcible application of shoe leather administered by the captain of one of Uncle Sam's warships. Mr. Courtleigh was sitting on the starboard side of the quarterdeck of the battleship, which particular spot is sacred to the use of the captain and his invited guests. He had been working in a number of shipboard scenes, and feeling tired and hot made his way to a portion of the deck that seemed particularly attractive, and sat down to rest. He was arrayed in the costume of one of Uncle Sam's sailor boys, and so caught the eye of the captain, who made a rush at him to give him a lesson in discipline. The captain's boot was poised in the air when young Courtleigh turned his head just in time. "Lucky for you, my boy," said the captain, his anger over, "the refreshments are on me!"

FITZMAURICE BECOMES A BOND ISSUE IN HIMSELF.

Geo. Fitzmaurice, the Pathe producer, wears a disgruntled look these days. He only had one scene in "Via Wireless" left to take and ran up against all sorts of trouble over it. "Fitz" wanted to blow up a yacht off the coast of Long Island, but ran afoul of the government. In the first place he had to give heavy bond that after he blew up the boat he would have her raised. Secondly he had to give bond to a tow boat concern and thirdly to a wrecking company. "Fitz" is so plastered with bonds that he dreams of them. "They say there's no market for bonds these days," he remarks. "They're wrong!"

The Garbage Bucket.

If the housewife, after buying a new garbage bucket, will paint the inside black and then shellac it she will find that it will last twice as long. It will hold none of the odors and will rinse out very easily, not requiring the scrubbing which is taken to keep the ordinary bucket clean and sanitary. Then, if she will fold a newspaper, opening it first to the fullest extent, in wide pleats from margin to margin, and, opening it again, pull it into a circle, she will have a perfect lining for the bucket, which will insure its emptying clean each time it is emptied.

Washing Summer Dresses.

In washing summer dresses of colored linen it is an excellent plan to get a package of dye and put it into boiling water, making just the shade of the dress (test it first). And as quickly as the dress is washed clean and rinse in salted water to set the color, dip it in the dye and let it stand two minutes. Then put it into the starch and hang it on the line in the shade without wringing and iron while it is still damp.

Egg Substitutes.

When eggs are high one hesitates to make white cake, especially if she does not care to use up the yolks for something else. It is not necessary to use egg whites at all. Simply use gelatine instead. One tablespoonful of the dry gelatine equals three eggs. Dissolve it in cold water and add enough boiling water to make a cupful. Beat with an egg beater and add to cake.

A Biter Bit

By F. A. MITCHEL

[It is obvious from this story that the story teller was a young man bent on an adventure.]

One morning the postman left me a letter with the firm name of Outcault, Hardy & Dunn, attorneys-at-law, stamped on the left hand corner of the envelope. I opened it and read the following, signed by the lawyers:

> Your proposition to unite the properties so long in legal dispute by marrying Miss Auchincloss has been referred to her with our assurances that the tangle between the two can never be unraveled except by such a union. Present circumstances if continued will in time eat up a property which removed from litigation would produce an income of $5,000 clear of all expenses. Miss Auchincloss, never having seen you, desires us to send her your photograph.

It was evident to me that the letter doubtless intended for another Anthony Page had come to me. I inclosed my photograph in a note stating in substance the note I had received from the attorneys and adding that I did not care to act further through them, but would be pleased to form her acquaintance direct. I chose this course, thinking that the real Anthony Page might be known personally to Messrs. Outcault, Hardy & Dunn and my photograph if sent to them would give me away.

In due time I received a note signed Bertha Auchincloss acknowledging the receipt of my photograph and inclosing one of her own. It represented a young girl of eighteen or nineteen, pretty as a peach and in whose eye lurked an inexhaustible fund of mischief. This will be a case of diamond cut diamond, I said to myself, and I see a lot of fun ahead. The letter was very short, stating that the writer agreed with me in direct action instead of the "horrid lawyers" and inviting me to call.

Without proper consideration as to the risk I ran of being horsewhipped by some of the young lady's relatives I went to see her. She came into the room smilingly and extended her hand, which I grasped and pressed. We began our acquaintance without the slightest reference to the subject of the union of property and, so far as that first meeting was concerned, made no progress in coming to an understanding with regard to a union of properties. This was gratifying to me, for the moment we should enter into details I would betray myself. On leaving I asked permission to call again, which was graciously accorded.

Having made no reply to the note of the lawyers, I did not hear from them again.

So delighted was I with my success that on my second visit to Miss Auchincloss I ventured to mention the object of my calls. She dropped her eyes to the floor and said that before the matter could be considered she must take time to have inquiries made concerning me. She could not even contemplate such a step without knowing more about me. I winced at this, for it seemed impossible for her to make such inquiries without discovering that I was an impostor. Nevertheless I brazened it out and offered to give her references. To this she replied that she already had the names of some persons who could give her the required information. Of course she meant friends of the real Anthony Page and I hoped he had a better character than I, though I did not express the hope to her.

Notwithstanding the perils by which I was surrounded my bark sailed on over an untroubled sea. At times I wondered how I could escape the dangers that beset me, but the truth is I was falling heels over head in love with Bertha Auchincloss and was infatuated not only with her, but the part I was playing. My calls grew more and more frequent, but instead of taking up the matter on account of which we had come together she not only refrained from mentioning it, but discouraged my doing so. This, taken with the fact that nothing adverse had come from her injuries, gave me quite a clear coast.

Plunging headlong into love as I was, the time soon came when I made a declaration without confessing my identity. I told her that I loved her and were the property on account of which we had come together sent to the bottom of the ocean still would I love her, still would I marry her if she would consent. She did not drop her head on my shoulder and whisper "Yes." She burst into a laugh.

"The next time," she said, "you play a game like that, keep your wits about you. My aunt, for whom I am named, is the lady you have supposed you were visiting. Since you first came to see me she has married the other Anthony Page. She is forty years old, and he is fifty. I took an interest in that case and remarked the handwriting of the letter he wrote my aunt and which was sent her by the lawyers. Believing that their reply to him must have fallen into the hands of a scamp—for the writing was not his—I sent for your photograph, thinking to have a little fun. Being pleased with it and realizing that it takes two to carry out a lark, I invited you to call. Accept my thanks for having afforded me the most amusing episode of my life."

I was madly in love with a girl who had been fooling me. Nevertheless, I began all over again and in time captured her. She says that in marrying me she did better than her aunt with the other Anthony Page, since their property yielded only a hundred thousand dollars, while mine is half a million.

The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

SOMETHING NEW.

Cherry Cheese.

STONE ordinary red cherries and chop them very fine, reserving all the juice. For each pound of fruit add half a pound of sugar. Simmer until a smooth mass is formed, stirrring all the time to prevent burning. It is a good plan when making this or any other sweet which requires long cooking to place the pan in a moderate oven, where it may remain several hours, simmering slowly, with no danger of scorching. Try the "cheese" by placing a small quantity in the refrigerator. When cool it should be quite firm. This conserve is delicious served in slices with whipped cream and white cake. Gooseberry cheese is made in the same way.

Raspberry Parfait.

Mix one cupful of powdered sugar with one quart of raspberries and mash through a fine strainer. Add to the juice one-third box gelatin which has been melted in cold water. Whip a pint of cream and beat the salted whites of three eggs stiff, mix the cream and whites together and fold it into the juice as it thickens. Freeze without churning in a mold packed in equal parts of ice and salt in a freezer.

Iced Rice Pudding.

Wash and drain one-half cupful of rice, cover with two cupfuls of cold water and let it boil for twenty minutes. Drain and put in a double boiler with one cupful of milk. Cook until the rice has absorbed the milk and is very soft. Then press the rice through a sieve and return to the saucepan. Beat the yolks of three eggs with one cupful of sugar and add to the rice. Cook, stirring until it begins to thicken, which should take but a couple of minutes. Remove from the fire, add one teaspoonful of vanilla extract and one teaspoonful of lemon extract and set away to cool. Add two cupfuls of whipped cream and freeze.

Cheese Souffle.

Melt a tablespoonful of butter, stir into it two tablespoonfuls of flour, add a pint of milk, stir until thick and smooth, then add one cupful of breadcrumbs and one-quarter pound of American cheese. Season with salt and pepper. Remove from the fire, add the yolks of four eggs, mix, then stir in the well beaten whites of the eggs. Turn into a buttered baking dish, bake in a quick oven until a golden brown. Serve at once.

BARNES TO PROCEED TO FILE JUDGMENT

Syracuse.—Wiliam Barnes will file an appeal to the Apellate Division of the Supreme Court from the decision adverse to him in his $50,000 libel suit against Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, tried in this city before Justice William S. Andrews in April.

It was said yesterday on behalf of the counsel in the case that the attorneys for Colonel Roosevelt are now engaged in the preparation of the bill of costs, representative of the amount of the judgment which Colonel Roosevelt obtained against Mr. Barnes. Because of the great numbero f witnesses and the enormous amount of detail work that task is necessarily a slow one.

TRAMP GIRL OF 16, OUT TO SEE COUNTRY, ARRESTED

Gainesville, Fla.—A supposed tramp arrested for stealing a ride on the roof of a coast line train proved to be a girl of 16 who says her name is Julia Dowling.

She was dressed in an old pair of overalls much too largef or her, and with one leg rolled up higher than the other, and an old cap pulled well down over her face looked the tough young tramp to perfection. Long hair falling from under the cap was what gave her away.

RED SOX AND PHILS NOT GOING TO COAST

Philadelphia.—The proposed trip to the Pacific coast of the world's champion Red Sox and the Philadelphia National League pennant winners was declared off today by Robert B. McRoy, representing the National Baseball Commission. Inability to come to an agreement on a financial arrangement is the cause for the abandonment of the trip.

The Philadelphia players' share of the world's series money was divided into twenty-four parts and each of the twenty-three men eligible to participate in the series was given a check for $2,492.23.

The twentyfourth share was divided into three parts, one of which went to Pitcher Oeschger, who rejoined the Phillies in September, and the other two parts were divided among Mike Dee, the trainer, and several others.

MAYORS ACCEPT HOME-RULE, NOT WHAT THEY WANTED

Albany.—Corporation Counsel Arthur L. Andrew has made public the report of the constitutional convention committee of the New York State Conference of Mayors and Other City Officials in reference to the home rule amendment in the proposed Constitution.

A small minority believed that it is no better than the present municipal article.

The majority report says that while the home rule amendment "does not meet our enthusiastic support, it nevertheless is worth something, for the cities have secured recognition in the Constitution of the principle of prohibiting special legislation on city affairs by the State Legislature and of consulting the people of the various cities in the formulation and adoption of their city charters."

WARNING TO BOYS ISSUED BY POLICE

Auburn.—The horse chestnut crop this year is a good one and the small boy in the city streets has been making the most of it; the net result being broken windows, men, women and children struck and sometimes badly hurt, horses hit and made to run away, and sundry damage and annoyance.

All of which has a sequal in stringent action by the Police Department. Boys must not throw horse chestnuts said Chief of Police Bell today. If they persist in thep ractice they will not be leniently dealth with when apprehended.

Etiquette of Letters.

Eighty years ago the etiquette of letters was far more rigid than now. Even the twopenny post was not considered good enough for correspondence addressed to persons of any standing. In her "Reminiscences of an Octogenarian" Miss Louisa Packe tells us that when her father had occasion to write to Londoners in his own class of life the letter was always conveyed by a servant not for any reasons of urgency, but because the post was considered a vulgar medium of communication for persons residing in the same city and only to be used for the conveyance of letters to the country.—London Chronicle.

Whitman Takes Up Today Investigation of Sing Sing

New York.—Governor Whitman is making a personal inquiry today into the charge that Warden Thomas Mott Osborne, of Sing Sing, has rebuffed, to the point of definance, the efforts of Dr. Rudolph Diedling to inspect the prison.

Superintendent of Prisons John B. Riley, after consulting with members of the Prison Commission yesterday, called a number of witnesses to Albany who will be made available if the Governor desires to, question them.

Before leaving New York for Albany the Governor announced he would in no way interfere with the investigations already under way. He said District Attorney Weeks, of Westchester, was entirely within the law in presenting to a Grand Jury any evidence showing that crimes have bzeen committed by inmates of the prison.

Judges Complain

More than one judge is known to have informed the Governor that the lack of discipline in Sing Sing under the rule of Mr. Osborne's Mutual Welfair League has greatly hampered them in the orderly administration of justice.

Judge Malone, of the Court of Aperal Sessions, has refused to make a public statement, because, he says, he does not believe in "preaching judges," but he has said privately he considers conditions at Sing Sing so bad they should be remedied.

In the present year Judge Malone sentenced Frederick Spence to Sing Sing for anatrocious murder, for which he was given a twenty-year to life sentence. Spence was in the prison only a short time when he was made an honor man in the Mutual Welfare League. As such he obtained extraordinary privileges, which permitted him to escape. He has never been caught.

This is one of the cases which the Westchester Grand Jury is to take up next week. District Attorney Weeks let it be known yesterday that he was experiencing great difficulty in getting the information he needed for the investigation. He said:

Goldstein Demands Reform

Assistant District Attorney Louis Goldstein of Kingsc ounty, assembling evidence which will be presented to the Prison Commission. He takes the ground that the rules of the Mutual Walfare League which permits free intercourse between first offenders and hardened criminals serving a second or third term represents a serious obstacle to reform.

Theb rief which Mr. Goldstein will file with his application for the removal of Warden Osbornew ill say in part:

"The new order of things inaugurated in them anagement of Sing Sing under Warden Osborne has brought about in many quarters severe criticism—some of which I am forced to believe is justified.

"The courts send offenders to Sing Sing only where serious crimes have been committed and it the law that every man sentenced to this prison must be confined to hard labor.

"The law specifically prescribes that the warden of every prison shall exercise general supervision of tend to theb usiness affairs of the prison and enforce the rules and regulations of the Superintendent of Prisons.

"The Warden and not the inmates should give the necessary instructions to the subordinate officers.

Denounces Welfare Court

"Under Warden Osborne a court has been established, the members of which are prisoners who try other prisoners, as well as the keepers on charges of misconduct.

"The keepers thereby are restricted and reluctant to make any complaint of inmates for any infraction against the rules because of what might happen to them before the court of convicts."

The New York American is enabled to state that Mr. Goldstein's application to the prison Commission will be supported by statements from keepers and other responsible individuals, in addition to the testimony of many convicts.

EDWARD JOSE

Whose picture "The Beloved Vagabond" on the Pathe program has been pronounced by eminent critics to represent the very highest art in photoplays and which will have the unusual distinction of being the first American feature to be colored.

SCENES IN "VIA WIRELESS" FOOL SEASONED CRITICS.

George Fitzmaurice, whose picture, "Via Wireless" has just been released by Pathe, has been reading with much interest the many complimentary reviews which have been written about the picture. One thing in particular has interested him,—almost without exception the critics have praised the remarkable scenes in the gun foundry, showing the casting of a gun. "The highest compliment I could get," says Fitz, "those foundry scenes were all taken in the Pathe studio in Jersey City."

Marriage and Mathematics.

"Yes," said the old mathematician, with a gleam in his eyes, "I've always looked at it that way. Marriage is addition; when the little ones come it's multiplication; when dissension looms up to cloud the horizon of their happiness it's division, and when the final parting comes it's subtraction!"

"And how about divorce?" asked the listener.

"Oh, that would come under the denomination of fractions!"—London Telegraph.

WILLYS-OVERLAND STOCKS SOAR HIGH

New York.—Eliminating some of the highly speculative war issues and other shares indirectly related thereto, today's market wasd istinctly irregular, when not reactionary. Rails as a whole were heavy, a fact attributed to further foreign selling. The same reason applied to United States Steel which held its place as leader, but showed decided pressure, every effort to elevate the stock being met by increased offerings.

Coppers, Tennessee and American Smelting excepted, also met the same fate and other issues of recent prominences suggested liquidation.

Motor stocks were the only features of strength, with the following new records: Willys-Overland up 9 to 253, Maxwellfirst and second preferred up 1 1-4 and 2 at 99 1-4 and 55, respectively and Studebaker, 3 to 167.

FORMER GOVERNOR MAY BECOME ENVOY

Washington, Oct. 15.—Secretary Lansing and Counsellor Polk of the State department today were completing the programme for the recognition of the Carsanza government in Mexico. These are the steps that will be taken in bringing Mexico back into the brotherhood of nations:

1.—The issuance of a proclamation to the governments of the world with which the United States has diplomatic relations announcing its intention to deal with Carranza as the de facto head of Mexican affair.

2.—A formal notification to Carranza that the United States is ready to send an ambassador to the Mexican capital, followed by the usual inquiries whether the proposed envoy is persona grata in Mexico.

3.—The selection of an ambasador from a list of those known to be acceptable to Carranza.

Salt and Health.

Few persons understand the therapeutic value of salt. A little salt in one's drinking water is "good medicine." Salt applications to the skin are wonderfully soothing and wholesome. There is nothing better as a wash for the throat and the nasal passages to prevent or to cure catarrhal troubles than a solution of common salt in plain water—the cheapest remedy one can find. Many persons give their eyes a daily bath of cold salt water with satisfactory results.

GENERAL BOTHA STUMPS THE HOSTILE DISTRICTS

Cape Town, South Africa.—A lively campaign for the election of members of the House of Assembly of the Union of South Africa, is being waged. The chief fight is between the followers of the Premier, General Louis Botha, and the Nationalists, who opposed the operations against German Southwest Africa and are against the dispatch of Union forces to Europe.

Many of the meetings degenerate into free fights, and General Botha, who is speaking in districts where his policy is strongly opposed, is accompanied by mounted burghers.

The Nationlists have candidates in nearly every constitutency, while the Unionists, who support General Botha, and many independents have withdrawn from the race in order to make it a straight contest between the two principal parties.

COMMISSION MEN PREDICT FIRM MARKET

Syracuse.—A scarcity of potatoes of lasting quality faces the local market. Commission men say prospects are for a firmer market on potatoes and higher prices generally throughout Central New York. This season's crop has been a comparative failure.

The tuber yield is estimated by the experts as something like one-fourth of the normal. This is the result of the continuous downpour of rain during the summer. The best offerings on the North Side public market sold at 85c a bushel yesterday, but gardeners said that within two weeks the price will probable be $1 a bushel.

Commission dealers added that they are afraid to lay in a large supply of potatoes on account of the poor quality. During the week several dealers from outside the state have been in the city to look intoc onditions with the intention of sending large shipments into this city and throughout Central New York.

British Submarines Sink Two Destroyers in Baltic, Driving Ships From Sea

London.—According to despatches received here yesterday from Copenhagen, British submarines operating in the Baltic Sea have sunk two and possibly three German destroyers in the last three days. In one of the attacks an undersea craft was subjected to a violent fire from a German cruiser, which was accompanied by three destroyers. When a torpedo finally hit one of the destroyers her companions fled.

That the British submersibles have driven all German merchant ships from the Baltic and the Gulf of Bothnea is indicated in other despatches from Copenhagen. Every German ship which was south bound from Swedish ports when the submarines entered the Baltic Sea either has been sunk or driven ashore, it is said. Thirty-sever vessels loaded with ore for Germany are tied up in Swedish ports.

The submarine E-19 torpeded one of the destroyers at the southern entrance to the Sound, a narrow strait between Denmark and Sweden. Reports from the town of Faxe, south of Copenhagen, say a German flotilla, one boat of which was sunk on Wednesday, returned with re-inforcements to look for the British craft.

Fishermen along the shore, who were watching the flotilla, heard a loud explosion and saw a destroyer disappear. The flotilla then dashed away to the southward.

From Falsterbo, Sweden, which is almost directly across the Sound from Faxe, came a report of a fight yesterday between a submarine and German craft in which the undersea boat was the victor. Whether this attack was the same as that witnessed by the fishermen on the Danish shore is not made clear.

According to the message from Falsterbo a German cruiser and three destroyers discovered the submarine and all opened fire on her. The German vessels, firing rapidly, steamed in circles to avoid the submarine's torpedoes.

The firing continued for several minutes before the undersea boat discharged a torpedo, which struck one of the destroyers. There was a terrific explosion and the destroyer foundered immediately. The cruiser and the other destroyers then steamed off to the south. The submarine did not follow, but rose to the surface and remained there fors ome time before submerging.

Serbians Trying to Hold Bulgars Back Teuton Line

Paris.—Serbia is fighting desperately to delay the Austro-German advance up the Morava Valley along the railways from Belgrade and Semendria toward Nish. The Austro-Germans have already lost 20,000 killed and 40,000 wounded, according to reports received at Serbian headquarters in Nish.

The Germans themselves admit that the Serbiah resistance exceeded their expectations. The Germans attacked Passarowitz, about twelvem iles southeast of Semendria and only four miles from the Danube, in great fore. The Serbians are holding the Austro-Germans invaders on a strip about four miles south of the river, extending from Passarowitz to Belgrade. They control the junction of the Morava and the Danube and the railway termini.

The Bulgarians are being held in the Timok Valley, where they are endeavoring to cut the railroad that runs from Salonica to Nish and Belgrade. It is the control of these railroads that is of vital importance to Serbia, as they constitute the only route by which the Allies can send the reinforcements which are so urgently needed.

It is this Salonica-Nish railway that the allied troops have used in their attempt to reach Nish before the Bulgarians can isolate the Serbians—in other words, cut off the efforts of the Bulgarions to get in the rear of the Serbians while the latter are facing the Teutons to the northward.

Before the Teutons can hope to continue toward Constantinople Nish must be taken, and Nish promises in the present instance to be the Plevna of the operations in the Balkans.

Sir Percy Scott Commands London's Great Air Defences

Commenting on the report that during the Zepplin raid on last Wednesday night fifteen soldiers were killed and thirteen soldiers wounded, the Daily Telegraph says:—

"To achieve a smaller diminution of British fighting power than would be accomplished by a single effectively placed shell at the front the attack culminated in the sheer murder of twenty-seven men, mine women and five children, and sixty-four men, thirty women and seven children were wounded."

The Telegraph adds that only those who have witnessed the

LEND A HAND

A city of 12,000 may be a little city but its needs are quite as great as those of big places. With the indoor evening close at hand, the question of the possibility of establishing club rooms for the boys to congregate, is again suggesting itself.

At various time the agitation for the purchase or erection of a Y. M. C. A. has been abroad, but the initial expenditure, when looked in the face, has had the effect of weakening many enthusiastic ones. The idea of working out the plan on an elaborate scale would prove a kill-joy if attempted. The beginning if made in one room of good size, and provided with comfortable furnishings, reading tables, a piano, a mat, trapeze, gloves, bars, etc., would be a modest beginning. Such an equipment would furnish clean amusement for dozens of boys, if correctly supervised, and would prove a blessing in manifold ways in countless homes.

The social side of a community is its richest asset if the fact could only be realized sufficiently to arouse interest into action. Out of relations in a social way business relations become more clearly ideal. Tom Brown and Jim Smith should not fail to see into the future. Boys become men; and men with an interest in the community are more likely to help themselves to help others.

Little "Jinny's" sage observation, that "the more we put into things, the more we get out of them," is not at all amiss in this instance. The more interest persons put into their community the more there is to be got out of it. It's a pitiable fact that men of a community are never called together unless to tell them what to do to help some one's pet plan—even though that plan worked out would be a perfect blessing. The mass of people are more interested in being done for than in doing. Working together is secondary to getting together.—Fulton Evening Times, Oct. 6, 1915.

NONDESCRIPT MANAGER TAKING NO CAANCES

To avoid a repetition of last week's occurrence when hundreds of football fans gathered to witness a match between the Nondescripts and the Leavenworths of Syracuse only to be disappointed when the Syracuse team failed to appear, the manager of the local team in booking a game for tomorrow with the Walkovers of Syracuse arranged to meet all the players of the visiting team at the Empire United terminal in Syracuse and escort them here.

The Syracuse team has been booked owing to a misunderstanding on the part of the manager of the soldiers of Oswego. In some unaccountable way the soldier schedule calls for games tomorrow with the local team and the Shakespeare of Oswego, and the manager of the soldiers advises that it is impossible to cancel the game with their opponents at home.

A preliminary game between the Tigers and Goosebones of Oswego is scheduled. The managers of both local teams report their men in good condition and both expect to win. The Tigers will practice at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

In last Sunday's practice game between the Tigers and Nondescripts, the strength of the former team received favorable comment.

In the first home game of the season the local high school team is opposing the Auburn High school team on the Athletic Field today. The lineup of the Fulton High school is as follows:

Barnes	Left End
Kraus	Left Tackle
M. Frawley	Left Guard
Richardson	Center
Gillespie	Right Guard
Holly	Right Tackle
La Point	Right End
O'Brien	Quarterback
Johnson	Left Halfback
E. Frawley, (Capt.)	Fullback
Calkins	Right Halfback

Republican and Democrat Vie One With Another to Secure Vote Privilege

When the polls close tonight, the total registration will show a vast increase over that of last mayoralty year, according to statements made by poll clerks in the eleven districts of the city. The request for an early registration met with response from voters and last Friday and Saturday the polling places were kept extraordinarily busy. Yesterday was a light day and this morning also, but it is expected that there will be a rush to the booths tonight. There are always a large number of men who come into the polling places during the closing hours, but the party leaders have extended every effort to get these men in early and last week's heavy registration is attributed to this interest on the part of the various organizations.

That the next primary election will be of more interest than this year's is evident from the increased number of enrollments and the rumors circulating concerning several prominent men who have been unable to get the indorsement of the organization running separately for office in the next primaries. The large enrollment was expected by followers of politics as it is becoming more evident to the voters that the purpose of enrollment is not, as a number of voters have believed, to allow certain individuals to know a voter's party choice, but to grant him rights to select his party candidate. Many interesting fights took place at the primaries in a number of New York States cities in former years, but in this city, except in one or two cases, the organization's choice of candidates was uncontested. If one judges by discussion taking place among men, there is no doubt but what a few individuals who are unable to get the indorsement of the organization will secure a personal following and wage a fight against the organization at the primaries next spring.

Perfect harmony exists now in the two organizations, report the party leaders. The Republicans announce that all opposition to Victor Lewis, mayoralty candidate, has been squashed and that at the last meeting every one present pledged support to the entire ticket.

A meeting of the Republican organization is scheduled for next Monday night, at which time the first gun in the coming election campaign will no doubt be fired.

PAYMENT ON CLOTHING LEADS TO MAN'S ARREST

Brooklyn.—Battling bravely with a burglar who awakened her at an early hour yesterday, Mrs. Charlotte Arizini, a nurse in the Methodist Episcopal Hospital, in Brooklyn, was severely injured by the intruder in her room in the Nurses' Home, at Eighth avenue and Sixth street, Brooklyn. The fact that the fire escape, by means of which the man entereed and fled from Miss Arizini's room, had been newly painted a bright red color, and the additional fact that Earl Stanley, a doorman at the hospital, wasc overed with paint, led to his arrest by Detective Lohman and Henne on a charge of burglary.

In the struggle the nurse was choked and her ear almost bitten off. S was unable positively to identify him as the man who attacked her.

Acres of Killed Piled High on Field

London, by Mail to New ork.—Acres of dead and dying have covered the blood-soaked sands of the Gallipoli peninsula in the most terrific fighting of the entire war.

Trooper Glutha Mackenzie, son of the high commissioner for New Zealand, who wasm ade blind at the Dardanelles, gave a graphic acount today of the fighting whi h he saw and took part in.

"Whole acres of ground were covered with dead and dying and the dried up water courses were piled high with mounds of corpses," declared Trooper Mackenzie at the New Zealand hospital, near London.

A GARDEN CLUB

Recently the Rochester Garden Club increased its membership limit to 100 and hardly had the announcement been made before the list was filled. This club meets once a month and an account of the October meeting indicates that the gatherings must be most interesting.

Among the points brought out were: The virtues of the yellow garden in spring; how to make the small garden individual; the proper amount of spading to do; the shifting of bulbs to obtain better growth; the reason place in the small garden; how to offset the handicap imposed by the trees of a neighbor; suggestions for planting so the keeper of a garden may have flowers all through the summer and not intermittently; substitution of tobacco dust for spray; plants which should be set out in the autumn and those which should be put out in the spring.

Anyone who has ever pushed a spade into loamy soil knows that a garden, no matter how small, is a fine thing for any person. But among the myriad of ways to make a garden there are few right ways. Study is the best method for finding the right way in garden making. A garden club is a very good way to make the study pleasurable and persistent. —Batavia News.

M'ADOO'S SCHEME

Every executive department which can find an excuse to concern itself with foreign affairs is humming with schemes for overseas trade. To Secretary McAdoo, who seems to have constituted himself the special guardian of commerce with Latin America, the idea occurs of joint agencies of the Federal Reserve banks in the Southern Hemisphere. He writes to President Wilson about it. The president writes back: "These suggestions meet with my entire approval. May I suggest that you bring the question to the attention of the Federal Reserve Board and enlist, if possible, its co-operation."

Secretary McAdoo submits this correspondence to the Federal Reserve Board. On October 12 the board declares itself in opposition to the project. The pith of the reply is that the Federal Reserve Banks should not "do pioneer work" in foreign countries. It will be plenty of time for the reserve banks to go abroad after the commercial banks of the country have established themselves in business in the foreign field.

In contrast to the disturbing complaisance which the Federal Reserve Board exhibited in the mater of Secretary McAdoo's latest cotton loan fund the board has displayed in regard to the most recent endeavor to annex the Federal Reserve system to the ramifications of administration policy a resolute independence and discerning intelligence reassuring and highly gratifying.

The Federal Reserve banks were created primarily to protect the American banking and business community from a collapse of domestic credit and not to stimulate credit expansion at home or abroad.—N. Y. Sun.

GETTING ON THE RIGHT TRACK

Nothing so justly incenses and exasperates the real patriotic citizen of a town as the disposition shown by many persons to fasten responsibility for defects in a municipal organization or a boosting society upon every location except the real one. Abuse may be heaped upon the objects of criticism and censure, but especial care is exercised never to strike a blow at the real offender—which is the people themselves: the voting force of every town in the country and what should constitute the membership of the organization of obosters. Occasionally there may bef ound a man who has the courage, the inclination and the frankness to point out where the real trouble lies. As a rule his inclination receives anything but encouragement, not that his ideas are unwelcome, but rather that he is misunderstood. The truth of the matter lies in the fact that the people neglect to exercise the functions of citizenship with vigilence as a cause for misgovernment; and secondly, in the case of a boosting society, the society too often neglects to take into its confidence the people who are ready and willing to give some measure of knowledge for the benefit of the community.

The plain truth of the matter is that the community spirit has become perverted. Instead of there being an organized effort to apply certain principles to the conduct of a city, the chief idea of altogether too many persons is that the primary object of any exhibited activity is to become a meddlesome factor. This pernicious notion has somehow managed to find its way into many biased minds. Before much headway in municipal and boosting regeneration can be hoped for this pernicious notion must be squashed from the minds of everybody concerned and replaced with something more inspiring. We should give everybody a chance to do something, and every citizen who loves his city and has its welfare at heart should lose no time in deciding to become a participant in such a revival, provided we are to experience one.

A MUNICIPAL EXHIBIT

Dayton, Ohio, has a municipal exhibit, and judging from reports which come from there it is a worth-while affair. It is to emphasize how Dayton does business. They assert they have nothing that cannot be exhibited to the public, and the exhibits are made so plain and appealing that the mind of all can comprehend them. They have sent out a circular which opens with these questions:

Mr. Citizen, what is the death rate in this city?

How much does it cost to have your garbage collected regularly; your ashes and rubbish hauled; your streets cleaned and lighted?

Does your city buy coal at the right price?

Is your child receiving a training that will fit him for his proper place in the world when he leaves school?

Is the county wasting money they should spend for good roads; or in payment of mothers' pensions?

Can you answer all these questions—and a thousand more about your city government, the county government, or the board of education?

The spirit of the entire exhibit is, "Where the money goes to." Men know they pay taxes, they realize that it is necessary to keep up the streets and provide the score and more necessities essential to community life. But they have little definite knowledge of just where their taxes are spent. It is a worth-while educational exhibit for every community. Even New York tried it to advantage a year ago. It gives the taxpayer the same opportunity to see where his municipal taxes go that he now has in reviewing his itemized grocery bill each month, to know where the household allowance has gone.—Watertown Times.

GOOD FOR THE BOYS

If there ever was a movement which looked good at the start, the American Boys' Future Club is such a one. Te main idea seems to be to afford the average boy a much better opportunity for choosing his life work than he now possesses. This will be accomplished by taking boys into many and varied industrial plants and explaining the advantages and disadvantages of the trade involved in a frank manner.

Says the Oswego Palladium in relation to the plan:

There has been a tendency upon the part of boys, especially those of the larger cities, to give the learning of trades the cold shoulder. They scorn the official badge of the artisan—the overalls. They seek the so-called easier and to some more refined pursuits of life until the professions and other soft-hand lines of endeavor are over-crowded, with a few reaching the top and the many making a hard struggle for existence. Parents to a large measure are to blame for this, Their ambitions, while laudable, are in many instances indiscreet and many an excellent mechanic has been spoiled by endeavoring to make a professional man of the boy who has not the ground work for it.

As the name "American Boys' Future Club" suggests, the boys will be organized. They will be placed in classes according to age and after they have visited industrial plants will discuss what they have observed and be nursed along to the point where their discussion as to a trade will not only be sensible but satis factory.—Geneva Times.

$5,000,000

By
I. E. HYDE

I'm one of the work-a-day people
Each morning I walk to my toil,
And then at six in the evening
My tired feet pace of the soil.

I look up and down through the city,
The bosses are riding in cars;
While we who get under the burden
Are let down to hoof it to Mars.

I'm told by my doctor and lawyer
To ease up and rest from my work,
But, when I ask credit for groceries
I'm scowled at, and called a blamed shirk.

So I'm pecking six days of the seven
And each day put by a toad skin
And at a church lecture one evening
I'm told, to save, is a sin.

I should work with my peck and my shovel,
And eat half rations at noon
For the preachers who sport their fine autos,
May be needing my dough quite soon.

His pay would make three of my eagle;
And his rent is as free as the air,
His children are sent to a college,
It really makes one want to swear.

He needs his cash for good reading—
Fine books, bound with leather and gold,
For from them he dopes out his gospel
Ah! but, give me the 'Bible of Old.'

But he says he'll go the poor house
After all he gets he can't save,
This fog don't crawl up my coat sleeve
They slip, when they think I'm a slave.

I say—when they study for preaching
They should study the lay of their land.
It won't hurt them to lay by their pennies
Nor let their feet touch the sand.

We poor devils are asked for five million
To buy the old preacher a home,
While the fellow who owns fifty million
Says, that five is a mighty big sum.

I wonder if God will countenance
The unfairness shown down here.
He'll say— "Just butter your own bread,
Ye servants of mine." I fear.

WITH THE SUFFRAGISTS

A million farmers stand pledged to the cause of votes for women thru the unanimous resolution passed by the thirty-fifth Farmer's National Congress in session at Omaha, Neb. early this month.

* * *

The women of California became voters by a referendum election held October 1, 1911, yet, according to the Woman's Journal, the women of San Francisco had their first chance to participate in a municipal election at the recent primary at which Mayor Rolph overwhelmingly defeated Eugene Schmitz who had been deposed during his third term as mayor as the result of the graft trials of 1906-07.

* * *

The Boston and Maine railroad has been shown up as spending money to defeat woman suffrage. An investigation made by the New Hampshire Public Service Commission revealed an expense item incurred by the publicity agent in working for the defeat of woman suffrage in the last constitutional convention.

A New York City woman, Miss Belle C. Howard, has come forward with a clever suggestion in regard to meeting the extra election expenses so frequently mentioned as a reason for refusing the vote to women.

Miss Howard says, "For years women have been taxed to support jails which are chiefly occupied by men," and she adds, "cannot the money that we women save the state by keeping out of jail be used to pay for our election expenses?"

* * *

The military argument against woman suffrage does not phase Secretary McAdoo for a moment. In his recent public announcement of his intention to vote for the suffrage amendment in New York he said, "Certainly, as the weaker sex, women are entitled to at least an equal opportunity with the stronger sex, and especially in all that concerns intimately the welfare of both."

Moreover, Mr. McAdoo does not consider that the militancy of woman in England is any reason for refusing the vote to women in America, but that the American women have earned the vote because of their fair appeal to intelligence and their avoidance of militant methods.

* * *

If any man in the campaign states is thinking of voting "no" on the suffrage amendment for fear that politics will be too great a strain on the physical resources of women, Dr. Oscar Gilbert, President of the Colorado State Medical Society has a message for him to the effect that there is nothing to worry about.

ANTHRAX CLAIMS AGED LAWYER

New York.—George F. Stackpole, the aged lawyer who has been suffering from anthrax at Bellevue hospital, died early to-day after waging a long fight against death. His heart had been weakened by his illness and he passed away a few hours after the attending physicians had announced that the serum used in his case had conquered the dreaded anthrax.

Mr. Stackpole was conscious almost until the end and met death with the same unperturbed courage and faith which he showed when physicians told him before the serum was used that he could probably not live.

WOMAN KILLS CHILDREN AND SELF

New York.—Grief stricken over the death of her husband, a coal barge captain who was drowned Monday, and fearing to face life pennilness and in ill health, Mrs. Joseph Huntzinger put her three children to bed, turned on all the gas jets in their Brooklyn home, and then went to sleep herself.

To-day all four were found dead. The woman had identified the body of her husband at the morgue and then went home where she planned the tragedy. The children were Alice, Elizabeth and Emma, ranging in ages from 2 to 10.

CONCRETE IN THE BASEMENT

Four-Inch Slab Is Recommended by Expert as Giving Best Possible Results.

Over the entire floor area of the basement a four-inch slab of concrete should be laid after the earth has been firmly tamped down. This slab of concrete should be insisted upon, wether the finished floor is to be of cement, brick, tile, or wood; and it is well to re-enforce it against shrinkage, stresses, and to bridge any soft places in the ground, by imbedding in the concrete some form of coarse wire mesh or expanded metal, says Ernest I. Freese in the House Beautiful.

Where cement finish is desired, this should be not less than three-quarters of an inch in thickness, and it should be applied before the concrete has become "set"—otherwise the cement finish will not properly unite with the concrete base.

In rooms having a cement floor, the cement can be carried up on the walls to a height of six or eight inches above the floor, thus forming a waterproof and sanitary base. Then, if the floor is slightly graded to a sump connected with the underground drainage system, the floor can easily be kept clean by turning the hose on it occasionally.

All cement floor finish should be jointed at regular intervals, not exceeding three feet, so as to concentrate at these jointings any probable shrinkage cracks. Here again, a simple, inexpensive wire mesh imbedded in the cement finish will react against the shrinkage strains and lessen the liability of cracking. For this re-enforcement, common chicken-wire mesh answers admirably.

LOOKING TO CIVIC BEAUTY

Builders Have Come to Recognize Value of Good Appearance of Buildings and Streets.

Gradually all phases of commercial industry are coming under the influence of the city-beautiful movement, comments the San Francisco Call. Factories erected today secure sufficient ground area to have some landscape gardening round-about the building or buildings. Even railroads, those supposed "soulless corporations," are now quite generally embellishing station grounds and rights of way. The schoolhouses, both rural and city, are being much improved in surrounds, being much helped by the school gardens, and the whole land is becoming, each year, more deeply engrossed in making a more beautiful America, and California is well up in the list. Let us not grow faint-hearted in the work.

IMPROVING NEIGHBORHOOD

There's much talk of conservation
Of the trees and rivers grand,
For we know their preservation
Helps to beautify the land.

We admit that talk like this will
Benefit the public good,
But at present your first job is
To improve your neighborhood.

Small beginnings have big endings,
And if you will make the start,
You will see how quick your neighbor
Pitches in and does his part.

Then you'll find that it's contagious;
Every house upon your street
Will be vying with each other
To keep looking clean and neat.

Paint and varnish are conserving,
You can prove beyond a doubt,
They're the best for the preserving
Of the house, inside and out.

New School Architecture.

A one-story schoolhouse, built in the form of a square around a courtyard, and so constructed that, by raising a series of sashes, it can be converted into what will be practically an open-air school, is the type of structure that marks a new departure in modern school architecture. It provides healthful surroundings for the children, keeps them near the ground, so that the danger of fire and panic is reduced to a minimum, and at the same time affords exercise.

The open-air sashes face on an inner corridor, which will eventually form a sort of cloister around the courtyard. As the needs of the community require, other wings will be added on the three remaining sides of the central square. It is intended eventually to have a gymnasium and swimming pool in a basement under the courtyard.

Gophers in the Garden.

Gophers still infest gardens except in the central portions of large cities, and are hard to exterminate where many vacant lots are found. Garden owners do not care to keep poison and traps on hand, and how easily to accomplish the death of the gopher becomes a problem. Last week one threw up a little mound in the writer's garden, having burrowed under the fence from an adjoining vacant lot. A messenger was hastily sent to a nearby drug store for a bottle of carbon bisulphid. The hole was opened, a half cupful poured in, the hole closed and firmed with damp soil. The next day the soil was dug out and the hole followed but three feet into the vacant lot, and there his gophership reposed, dead.

BEST HOUSING OF WORKMEN

Subject to Which City Planners Are Giving Deserved and Increasing Attention.

Work done in uncomfortable surroundings and under mental protest is poor work, and work done under unhealthful conditions is likely to be of a still lower order. Therefore, the big manufacturer has given his earnest attention to the housing of his plant. Besides laying his plans for the greatest floor space, lowest cost and highest efficiency of arrangement, he has kept the health and well being of his employes in mind in the erection of factory buildings. This has paid him large returns in dollars and cents.

Despite the decided advantage of a healthy, contented force of operatives, however, there is still a large class of manufacturers in this country who persist in regarding their workingmen as machines, to be run as cheaply as possible with the least possible attention. They forget that the machine is not an inspired thing, that its output of a certain quality of work is known and that it either can or cannot come up to this known output; while, on the other hand, the output of the employe throughout the year can be, at best, aproximated, and, in ill health or when ill at ease, the employe may fall far short of his best, both in quality and amount of work done, without bringing the notice of his employer or next superior upon him.

The humanitarian factory is merely a matter of education.

It is not only a thing to be wished for by sentimental well wishers of the race, but it is good business for the individual and good economy and better politics for society. Foremost engaged in the work of educating the backward manufacturer is the United States department of labor, aided by a legion of writers, sociologists and labor organizations. By process of competition even the sweatshop must succumb before the sanitary factory.—Frederic J. Haskin.

HOW FINE BUILDINGS HELP

Best Possible Form of Advertising—Some Examples Given Us by the Old World.

Everybody will talk about New York's circular courthouse. Immediately this building will pay for itself in the delight it will furnish that city and in the interest it will create outside of it.

While St. Mark's square was not constructed as an advertisement, it has taken thousands of travelers to Venice.

The Ringstrasse, that matchless circular thoroughfare, attracts the whole world to Vienna.

I suppose that everybody in Italy walked to Rome in the old days to see the Coliseum, and if anyone in Greece failed to visit the Acropolis he was no patriot.

"THE GALLOPER" A REMARKABLE PICTURE

FIRST RELEASE IN NEW GOLD ROOSTER SERIES SCORES BIG SUCCESS.

CLIFTON CRAWFORD HAS LEAD

Broadway Favorite Realizes Success in Photoplay Debut—Comedy With Dramatic Situations.

"The Galloper", the first of Pathe's new Gold Rooster Plays to be released, is worthy of the honor thus given to it. Richard Harding Davis, the author, is too well known both as author and dramatist to require any comment, therefore let it suffice to say that "The Galloper" is written in his best style and enjoyed a fine run on the stage. George Brackett Seitz adapted it for a five reel comedy-drama.

Two things in particular strike the observer as he views this fine production—first, the excellent direction—apparent in every scene—of Donald MacKenzie, the producer, and secondly, the really brilliant work done by Clifton Crawford, the famous comedian, in the title role. A character not in the original play, that of "The Unknown" has been inserted by Mr. Mackenzie, with excellent results. "The Unknown" is a Turkish spy, and he adds wonderfully to the humor of the play. He was Mr. Mackenzie's own conception and forms merely one of a number of examples of the producer's care and ability. Clifton Crawford proves himself to be an artist of the first rank and worth the very large salary which it is understood he received for appearing in this, his first picture. Without detracting from the fine ability shown by the rest of this really excellent cast, second honors go to Melville Stewart and Jessie Ralph, the first mentioned playing the part of a much married correspondent and the latter as a rich and unlovely widow with matrimonial designs. Fania Marinoff, Rhye Alexander and Sam Ryan give worthy support.

The story deals with a divorced war correspondent who divides his time between dodging alimony hunting divorced wives and various creditors. As a means of relief from his financial troubles he makes love to a brewer's widow, proposes and is accepted. War breaks out between Turkey and Greece, and he seizes the opportunity to dodge his troubles and a fiancee who does not appeal to him by going out as a war correspondent to Greece. It happens that a young American millionaire at the same time is sailing for Africa to hunt big game. On the same steamer are two charming girls who are going to the front as Red Cross nurses. One of them turns out to be the war correspondent's last wife; the millionaire immediately falls in love with the other. Arriving in Greece, the war correspondent finds dodging his former wife too strenuous and resigns his position. The millionaire offers to take his name and act as correspondent for him. From then on there are all sorts of comical misunderstandings, and situations. Scene after scene is a riot of laughter up to the very end where misunderstandings are cleared up, the millionaire is accepted by the Red Cross nurse, and the war correspondent re-united with his former wife.

Despite the fact that "The Galloper" is primarily a comedy, there is plenty of drama and much thrill to it. Pathe is to be congratulated on its first Gold Rooster Play, and Donald Mackenzie upon such a sterling production.

PATHE PITCHER SIGNED BY FEDS

Harry Crandall, Jr., crack pitcher on the Pathe baseball team, has been grabbed by the Federal League for next season. Manager Stallings of the Boston Braves was after him, but the Feds offered better inducements. Young Crandall has been combining working in Pathe pictures with pitching on the movie concern's baseball team, and has made a success of both. For the last four or five weeks he has been letting down opposing teams, which have been the strongest semi-pro organizations around New York, with two or three hits a game.

CRAZED IN GRAND CANYON.

New Hampshire Tourist Wanders Without Food or Drink.

Grand Canyon, Ariz.—After wandering for three days in the depths of the Grand Canyon without food or water W. H. Harvey, a retired merchant of Manchester, N. H., was rescued in Hell's Half Acre, one of the most perilous parts of the canyon. Mr. Harvey was crazed from thirst and hunger. He was rescued by Rudolph Reimer, Jr., of Brooklyn, N. Y., a Grand Canyon guide.

Mr. Harvey and James H. Hyde of New York started down Hermit Trail, eight miles west of Grand Canyon hotel. They took neither food, water nor guide, intending to follow the river along the bottom of the canyon back to the foot of Bright Angel Trail, which leads to the canyon bottom from here.

Soon after leaving the foot of Hermit Trail they became lost in the waste of rock formations. The alkali water which they were forced to drink caused both men to lose their minds temporarily. Mr. Hyde became separated from Mr. Harvey and found his way out of the canyon, but was unable to direct searchers to the spot where he had left his companion.

Parties searched the canyon for two days and found no trace of Mr. Harvey. Finally he was discovered in a delirious condition, his outer clothing gone. He was brought out of the canyon on a pack burro. He is recovering from his hardships.

FLAG ISLAND AERIAL BASE.

Property Owned by Peary Recommended For Maine Coast Station.

Portland, Me.—A report favoring Flag island, in Casco bay, the property of Rear Admiral Robert T. Peary, as one of the stations of the proposed aerial coast patrol was made by Henry A. Wise Wood, vice president of the Aero Club of America, to Alan Hawley, its president. The use of the island already has been tendered to the club by Rear Admiral Peary. The report says:

"With a minimum of effort and time aerial observers working from Flag island may command the offshore approaches to Portland and Bath and the inner waters of Casco bay, which lie behind the Portland defenses. The importance of a constant aerial surveillance of Casco bay in the event of hostilities cannot be overestimated, as the bay provides perhaps one of the best hiding places for submarine vessels to be found anywhere along the New England coast."

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Open Air Exercise.

"Walk, walk, walk!" urged Benjamin Franklin. The United States public health service gives the same advice in a bulletin addressed particularly to persons who are more than forty years old. "Take daily exercise," says the bulletin. "Have a hobby that gets you out of doors. Walk to your business or to your dressmaker. Walk just for the sake of walking. Join a walking club and keep your weekly score of miles. Keep chickens, make a garden, play golf—anything to get two hours of outdoor exercise every day." The advice is not new, but it is sound and useful.

FUN RAYS

THE COUNTRY STORE

WANT to know who'll win the war? Go to Cornseed's country store. It's the greatest view exchange east of the old Rocky range. Village fathers gather there, from Pop Green to Deacon Blair. And they talk with zest and ire as they sit beside the fire. There's a flash in ev'ry eye as the talk runs loud and high. Ev'ry topic's on the slate from the war to fishing bait. Satan, I believe, would choke from the dense tobacco smoke. Doc Spriggs says the democrats have no brains beneath their hats. That's the spark that starts the flame. Up jump six with shouts of "Shame!" Then they argue loud and long—try to sift the right from wrong. Owner Cornseed spills the salt—said it was Cy Plantem's fault. Judson Martin burns his ear when he tries to prove that beer is more nourishing than tea—'course, the others won't agree. Ben Spanks says the time's remote when the women folk will vote. Pop Green says they ought to now. Then that starts another row. Oh, they talk from morn till late! Life is just one long debate. Durn it! It would be just grand if these fellows ruled our land. Ev'rything would be O. K. from Cape Cod to San José. Ev'rything would be just fine from St. Paul to Brandywine. Wilson sure would get a tip if he'd pack his leather grip, steal away from Washington—go to Oatville on the run. Hunt up the old country store—listen to advice galore. Ev'ryone would do his share, from Pop Green to Deacon Blair. Country stores win in a walk when it comes to slinging talk.

SO DOES THE OSTRICH

WE HAVE all read of the ostrich, that extraordinary bird of the desert, which dines on scrap iron, lunches on stones and when danger threatens thrusts his head in the sand and believes himself safe from harm, because he cannot see the danger.

Picture to yourself this gigantic bird, taller than a man, resting in fancied security, because his head is hidden from view, although his body can be seen for miles around.

There are too many of us who adopt the tactics of the foolish ostrich. We are told of an impending danger and think that we can escape it or avoid it by refusing to face it.

We are informed that there is great danger of restriction of our facilities for local trade if our local business men are not given better support; that we may find ourselves deprived of the opportunities for marketing our farm produce in our home town if our storekeepers find themselves stocked up with goods, but with no adequate volume of local business.

What is more natural than that this may be the case if we do not stop sending our money away from home to the mail order houses in the big cities? We must realize such possibilities and take steps to prevent them. If we don't, we will find out, in all probability, that our local merchants will look for other locations than in our town.

Which is the wisest thing to do—to look the conditions squarely in the face and take the steps necessary to counteract them or shall we, like the foolish ostrich, refuse to face the conditions and decline to take cognizance of them?

We can permit matters to drift along until the inevitable occurs, or we can think things over, carefully and with judgment, and take the steps necessary to protect our interests—the interests of ourselves and those who will come after us.

Our community is built up as the result of various interests, not the least of which is the tributary farming population. Our town was created because of the various interests that center here and because this is a natural point for the distribution of farm products and merchandise. The sale of the farm products brings the money for the buying of the merchandise, while the merchandise supplies the necessities of those who raise the crops.

It therefore follows, naturally as one of the unfailing laws of civilization, that IF IT WERE NOT FOR THE FARMERS AND OTHERS WHO PRODUCE THINGS FOR THE MARKET, THERE WOULD BE NO OCCASION FOR THIS COMMUNITY, THERE WOULD BE NO NECESSITY FOR STORES AND SHOPS.

On the other hand, were it not for the stores that are the mediums for the marketing of the crops, there would be a great lack of facilities for marketing and farming would not be as profitable as we now find it in our community.

If the business men of our town do not afford the requisite facilities for marketing such crops as must be handled locally in order to give full advantage to the farmers, then the farmers will find out that they must look for a market elsewhere or accept a much smaller profit on that which they have to sell.

On the other hand, if the farmers do not do their share toward the support of the business men, by spending their money locally and keeping it in circulation in our own town, instead of sending it to the mail order houses, then the local storekeepers will find it necessary to restrict their investments in goods for the local market, thereby resulting in a diminishing of the facilities for getting what we need at home.

This is a point we must not fail to observe. We must look the conditions squarely in the face and arrive at a conclusion as to what steps are necessary to preserve and to maintain the conditions which make for prosperity.

If we fail to do this, or if we temporize and let matters drift, we will find that we have emulated the silly ostrich, until the worst happens.

SPEND THE MONEY AT HOME. PATRONIZE THE LOCAL BUSINESS MEN. KEEP THE MONEY IN CIRCULATION IN OUR HOME TOWN. WE NEED EVERY DOLLAR AT HOME TO HELP THE COMMUNITY.

Let the ostriches do as they will and send their money to the mail order houses, but let us hope that we have but few of these foolish birds in this community.

MRS. SMITH SAW GIRLHOOD HOME

She Says Western Towns Manifest Intense Civic Pride---Brings Back Many Lessons to Ponder Over.

Mrs. L. P. Smith, who with her son, has just returned from an extended western trip, gives an interesting report of the places visited.

The first stop in the westward journey was made at Madelia, southern Minnesota, the childhood home of Mrs. Smith. It was at this place that the Jesse James and Younger brothers, famous robber gangs, were captured. Mrs. Smith's father, as attorney pleaded the case of Cole Younger and succeeded in saving his life, and giving in addition to the world a noted lecturer.

The next stop was made at St. Paul and Minnehaha Park, and too the Falls made famous in Longfellow's poems, were visited. In the Canadian Rochkies, Banff, with its wonderful buildings of white granite erected by the government at the baths, proved highly interesting. It was here the cave with its hot sulphur pool proved a curious sight.

Lake Louise and its surrounding country in the Canadian Rockies, known as little Switzerland, was a delightful revelation to the travelers. The ride through the immense Canadaan wheat fields was termed a wonderful sight, for as far as the eye could carry there was nothing but wheat, wheat, wheat.

Mrs. Smith was enthusiastic over Vancouver and Seattle. Everywhere in Seattle, in the park, boulevards and drives, was found the manifestation of a high degree of civic pride. Later, Tacoma was visted, and Mt. Renier was ascended by automobile. The nights were spent by the wayside in tents and the moon lighting up the mountain peaks and glacier section was described as a glorious sight. It is in this section that spring arrives during July and August. Spring flowers of three hundred varieties bloom in profusion. Here, too, blue berries grow luxuriantly and are peculiarly sweet and tasteful.

Shasta Springs in California with its different mineral waters, and sylvan surrounding was enjoyed, and later San Francisco with the exposition proved full of diversity as to amusement and instruction.

Mrs. Smith had the honor of attending the First Congress of Women which was held in conjunction with the exposition. The experience, Mrs. Smith stated, is one she will not soon forget. It was there she heard the noblest women in the intellectual world give expression on the foremost movements of the day.

Stanford University and its seat was visited, also, Monteray and Santa Barbara. The latter, a beautiful winter resort, with its magnificent homes built by eastern people, was enjoyed, and from here Mrs. Smith went to her old home at San Rosa, where old time acquaintances were renewed.

Los Angeles received the unstinted admiration of the travelers, and the Mission Play at San Gabriel, near Pasadena, where the early mission life was portrayed, was described as one of the most beautiful inspirations possible. The Mission Inn at Riverside, Cal., was also portrayed as redolent with the atmosphere of old mission days; restful and peaceful and full of the dreams of early times.

Or the homeward trip Salt Lake City and its splendors were reviewed. Mrs. Smith and her son reached this city last Sunday morning, fully pleased with seeing "America First."

WATERTOWN WAY OF KILLING HOUSE FLIES

Watertown. — The recent mild weather has brought out a new crop of voracious house flies and the swat-the-fly campaign, which generally quiets down this time of the year, was actively carried on. Yesterday the rains had driven the pests inside of homes and offices. At the office of F. M. Williams in Park Place several hundred came in when the rainstorm was severe. Mr. Williams did not believe in the campaign which advocates the slaughter of the solitary fly, but he did adopt a measure which shortly disposed of the whole swarm. A little formaldehyde evaporated over a flame killed every fly and the time taken to effect this was about five minutes.

AMARANTHS HONOR OFFICERS

Jewels Presented to Past Royal Matron and Past Royal Patron; Musical and Literary Entertainment.

One of the homiest of homey times was participated in last night by the members of the Mary Patterson Court, Order of Amaranth, at the Masonic headquarters, when a reception was accorded Mrs. J. Fred Scholz Past Royal Matron, and Mr. W. H. Spanswick, Past Royal Patron. The objects of the honors were presented with handsome jewel emblems in keeping with their high offices.

An important part of the program was the installation of Mr. Spanswick as assistant Grand Lecturer of the 14th District. He made a pleasing response, as did Mrs. Scholz to the greeting extended upon her return from New York where she represented the Court at last week's convention.

The work of installing the assistant Grand Lecturer was in the hands of Mr. E. S. Roberts of Oswego, who is the Royal Patron of the Court of this city.

An orchestra furnished pleasing music at intervals and Miss Wilcox recited a few choice selections which were received with a great deal of approbation. Refreshments were served at the close of the ceremonies and entertainment.

MRS. CHARLES THOMPSON IN AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENT

Yesterday afternoon Mrs. C. W. Thompson, a teacher in district number five, and three of her pupils were hit by an automobile while driving on the Emery road. The horse was injured severely, but the occupants of the carriage escaped with minor bruises.

The accident occurred near the Chaffer residence on the Emery road. Mrs. Thompson with her pupils, Miss Nellie Cole, and the Misses Chaffee, saw the approach of the automobile and turned out allowing plenty of room, but when the car was directly in front of the horse the driver seemed to lose control. The result was that the car crashed into the carriage which it wrecked completely.

The name of the driver of the automobile was not learned but the number was taken and the information was handed in at the police station this morning.

The occupant of the car offered to make restitution after the accident, but this morning at a late hour had not been heard from.

W. C. T. U. NOTES

(Compiled by Local Union)

The press is today stressing the economic argument for prohibition, and that alone ought to be sufficient to convince every right-minded voter. However, just at this time of the year, the public has brought to its attention approximately twenty million other arguments for the total annihilation of the liquor traffic, every one of them forceful and appealing. This army of good and sufficient reasons why we should abolish John Barleycorn is this very month wending its happy way to the public schools. No one disputes the fact that these twenty million boys and girls are the most important part of our population, on whom, in great part, rests the weal or the woe of the United States in the coming years. On their clearness of vision, their rectitude of conduct, their wise and sagacious handling of affairs of state depends the place which this government is to occupy twenty-five, fifty, or a hundred years hence. These prospective patriots are to be our educators and philanthropists, the mayors of our great cities, the lawmakers in our states, the Congressmen and Senators in our United States Congress, the judges in our courts, and from them will be selected the men who shall occupy the President's chair.

Is it not the part of wisdom to protect these valuable citizens from anything which shall be detrimental to their health, which may retard their growth, stunt their development or prevent them from coming into their full heritage of usefulness? Nay, is it not shortsighted to the point of foolhardiness to tolerate in their midst an institution which has been proven to be fatally detrimental to human life?

There can be no plea for prohibition so unanswerable as the child, and it is not tobe wondered that the liquorites protest vehemently at what they are pleased to term "the injection of the children into the prohibition question." As if the children were not already in it! Think of the boys and girls who enter life defective in body and in mind because of alcoholic parents, and the half-starved, poorly clothed children who, because of irresponsible fathers, are deprived of comfortable homes and educational advantages. Then remember that even the lads and lassies more happily circumstanced who live in license territory are liable to be contaminated by the vicious atmosphere the saloon creates and that from them must come many of the victims who make the continuance of the commercialized drink evil possible.

In the face of these well known facts can we say that we are dealing fairly with the twenty million boys and girls in our schools, from whom we are expecting in the future such great achievements, if we do not, at the earliest possible moment remove from their pathway the ever present temptation of the legalized liquor traffic?

BALDHEAD CLUB PUTS PRESIDENT ON THE LIST

Winsted, Conn.—The Bald Head Club of America, two hundred pates strong, tonight read an earnest letter of acceptance from former President Taft and elected President Wilson an honorary member—on the waiting list. It was the annual conference and banquet.

The Taft letter, written to John Redeneyer, founder of the club, reads in part:

"I am an honorary member of that club, I observe, and as I understand it, an honorary member is one who may be given the honor of association with the active members, but upon whom no duties are imposed and, in respect to whom no qualifications are enforced. It is only on this ground that I was willing to accept honorary membership with you, because I deny that I could pass any examination which membership in your club would necessarily involve.

I observe that some hair-tonics are advertised with the kindly statement (for the purpose of encouraging belief in their other claims) that they will not cure shining bald heads. I should think that that feature of shinyness was essential to good and regular standing of an active member of your association—and I am sure I do not possess it.

The resolutions to President Wilson were adopted unanimously as follows:

"Whereas, all the world loves a lover, and whereas, the Bald Head Club of America is in full accord with the Scriptural injunction that "it is not good for man to be alone" and

"Whereas, This Club views with sincere satisfaction the praise worthy purpose of the honored President of the United States, Woodrow Wilson, to take unto himself a wife to preside over the destinies of the White House therefore be it

"Resolved, That the name of President Woodrow Wilson be placed at the head of the waiting list for honorary membership in the Bald Head Club of America."

POPE TO LEAD LEAGUE TO ENFORCE WAR LAW

Rome.—"A League of Christian nations, headed by the Pope, to insure respect for moral principles and enforce them, even with arms," is advocated by the English Cardinal Gasquet in an article published today, in the Corriere d'Italia.

This article is regarded as expressing the Holy Father's viewpoint.

The necessity of giving the Pope enough authority to regulate the articles of international law which regulate war, is emphasized. The article declares such action would guarantee the observance of these laws and thus "save human civilization."

BOY, AT 19, MUST PAY $1,500 IN LOVE SUIT

New York.—A jury in the City Court decided yesterday Albert Raucher, a waiter, No. 522 East Twelfth street, is not too young to pay $1,500 damages to Miss Anna D. Duchner, although he claimed he was too young to marry her.

He is nineteen and she is twenty-eight. She sued for breach of promise.

GO TO CHURCH

Who's business is it where you go? Yours.

There's this much about it. You will get a world of good from a service. You will be better fitted for your week's work.

You owe it to yourself.

You certainly owe it to your family, if you have one.

Even from a business standpoint, sum it up the way---

IT WILL INCREASE YOUR EFFICIENCY

LET'S GET ACQUAINTED

If I knew you and you knew me,
'Tis seldom we would disagree;
But, never having yet clasped hands,
Doth often fail to understand
That each intends to do what's right,
And treat each other "honor bright,"
How little to complain there'd be
If I knew you and you knew me!

Whenever we send you by mistake,
Or in your bill some error make,
From irritation you'd be free,
If I knew you and you knew me.
Or when the checks don't come on time,
And customers send us "nary" a line,
We'd wait without anxiety
If I knew you and you knew me.

Or when some goods you "don't like"
Or make a "kick" on first sight,
We'd take in good part, you see,
If I knew you and you knew me
With customers ten thousand strong,
Occasionally things go wrong—
Sometimes our fault, sometimes theirs—
Forbearance would decrease all cares.
Kind friend, how pleasant things would be
If I knew you and knew you me.

Then let no doubting thoughts abide,
Of firm good faith on either side;
Confidence to each other give,
Living ourselves, let others live;
But any time you come this way,
That you will call we hope and pray;
Then face to face we each shall see,
And I'll know you and you'll know me.

LUCK

Is just another name for good, hard, persistent plugging. Luck is with the merchant who Advertises, not because he advertises, but because he keeps on advertising indefinitely --- Which Means Success.

YOUR SUCCESS

Means the success of your town. Now, honestly, are you doing what you can for your town? Are you "A Herald of Progress"? Do you realize that by doing what you can—which means as much or more than you are doing now, you will be helping yourself—Which Means Success.

If you cannot now be placed where you belong, it is time to right about face, read the words by Ella Wheeler Wilcox, and say to the publishers of your home newspapers—

"I'LL DO WHAT I CAN"

Who takes for his motto "I'll do what I can,"
Shall be better the world as he goes down life's hill;
The willing young heart makes the capable man.
And who does what he can, oft can do what he will,
There's strength in the impulse to help things along,
And forces undreamed of will come to the aid
Of one who, tho' weak, yet believes he is strong,
And offers himself to the task unafraid.

"I'll do what I can" is a challenge to fate,
And fate must succumb when it's put to the test;
A heart that is willing to labor and wait
In its tussle with life ever comes out the best;
It puts the blue imps of depression to route
And makes many difficult problems seem plain,
It mounts over obstacles, dissipates doubt,
And unravels kinks in life's curious chain.

"I'll do what I can" keeps the progress machine
In good working order as centuries roll;
And civilization would perish, I ween,
Were not those words written on many a soul,
They fell the great forests, they furrow the soil,
They seek new inventions to benefit man,
They fear no exertion, make pastime of toil—
Oh, great is earth's debt to "I'll do what I can."

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

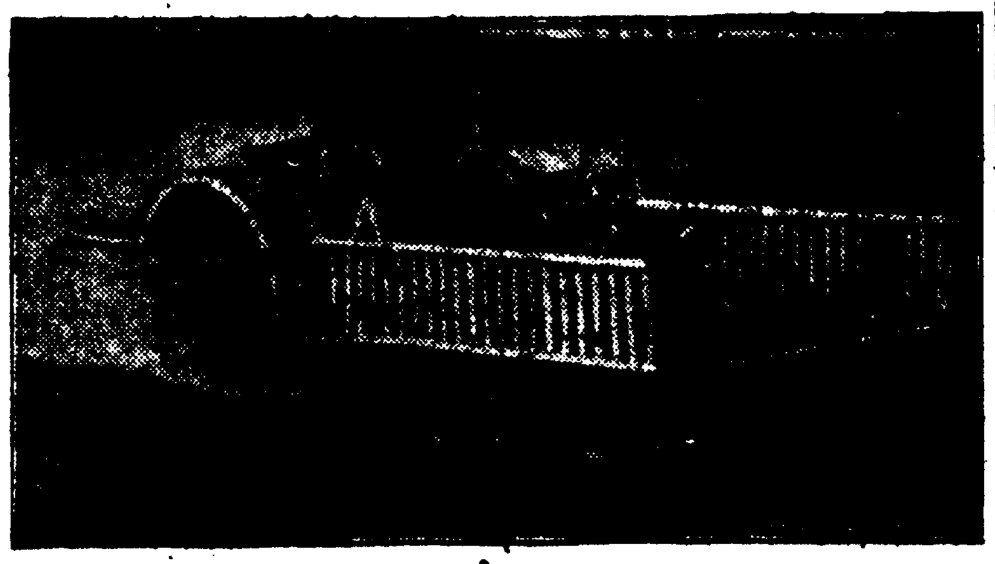
BARGE PROPELLED BY AUTOMOBILE



For crossing a bay 20 miles wide connected at each end with a fine driving beach along the seashore, a motorist of Aberdeen, Wash., uses a barge built for less than $100 and so equipped that it can be driven by the automobile that it transports across the water. A propeller wheel, that is housed for safety, is located at each side of the barge near the stern. The axle of each wheel is at the right height to come in line with the rear car axle when the end of the car is raised a few inches above the deck of the barge, and is capped with a hardwood wheel, 18 inches in diameter and 3 inches thick. On each wheel are leather clamps for securing it to the spokes of the car wheel. With the rear of the car raised so that the wheels are clear of the deck and these wheels connected with the propellers by the straps, the barge is ready for operation by the engine of the automobile. The work of placing the car aboard the barge and making it ready for use requires about eight minutes. The barge can easily make eight miles an hour when propelled by a light car and considerably more than that rate of speed, when it is driven with a high-power car.

Difference Between Amusing and Convincing

By HERBERT KAUFMAN

Author of "Do Something! Be Something!"

AN ADVERTISER must realize that there is a vast difference between amusing people and convincing them. It does not pay to be "smart" at the line rate of the average first-class paper. I suppose that I could draw the attention of everybody on the street by painting half of my face red and donning a suit of motley. I might have a sincere purpose in wishing to attract the crowd, but I would be deluding myself if I mistook the nature of their attention.

The new advertiser is especially prone to misjudge between amusing and convincing copy. A humorous picture may catch the eye of every reader, but it won't pay as well as an illustration of some piece of merchandise which will strike the eye of every buyer. Merchants secure varying results from the same advertising space. The publisher delivers to each the same quality of readers, but the advertiser who plants flippancy in the minds of the community won't attain the benefit that is secured by the merchant who imprints clinching arguments there.

Always remember that the advertising sections of newspapers are no different than farming lands. And it is as preposterous to hold the publisher responsible for the outcome of unintelligent copy as it would be unjust to blame the soil for bad seed and poor culture. Every advertiser gets exactly the same number of readers from a publisher and the same readers—after that it's up to him—the results fluctuate in accordance with the intelligence and the pulling power of the copy which is inserted.

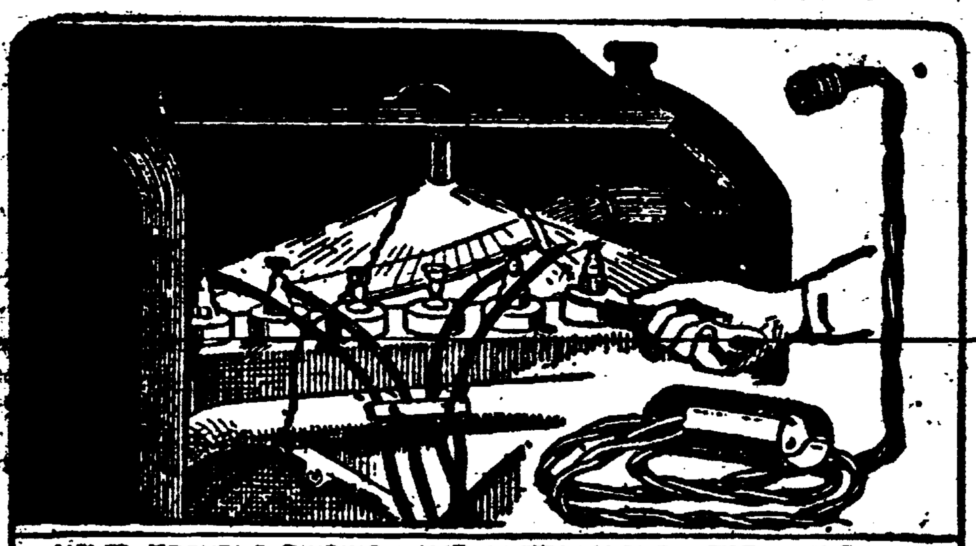
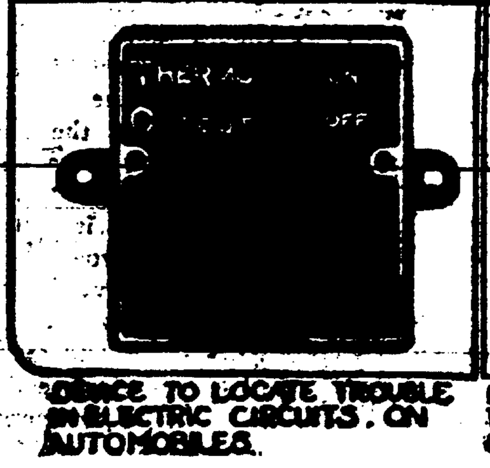
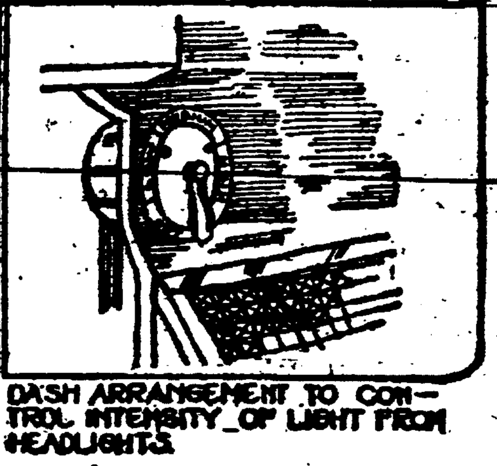
HANDY HELPS FOR THE AUTO TOURIST



NOVEL TROUBLE FINDING LAMP, WITH MAGNET FOR HOLDING IT IN PLACE ON THE CAR.



DEVICE TO LOCATE TROUBLE IN ELECTRIC CIRCUITS ON AUTOMOBILES.



DASH ARRANGEMENT TO CONTROL INTENSITY OF LIGHT FROM HEADLIGHTS.

An Indianapolis concern has brought out what is termed a thermo cutout, which is attached to the dash of the car and which is designed to indicate whether a circuit is complete or whether there is a leak or short. Crossed wires or a ground will cause the cutout to turn off all circuits. Difficulty on any circuit may be found by resetting the cutout so that when the switch is turned to the various circuits the faulty one will operate the cutout.

With the proper use of electric headlights there should be no objection on the part of pedestrians, and there need be no glaring headlights, for several devices have been brought out to use smaller lights when desired. The use of electric lights permits the operator to turn the lights on or off at will, and so while using the side lights to conform to the law's requirements it is only necessary to switch on the headlights for an instant if a particularly dark piece of roadway is encountered and turn them off at once their work is done.

In the use of the headlights an improvement has come whereby a switch is located on the dash and the lever may be operated by the foot. This is designed to regulate the intensity of the light and may be set at low, medium, high, or out, thus permitting the operator to regulate the lights according to road conditions or the necessity for having more or less light.

Those who have electric lights have no excuse for using glaring headlights in the city except occasionally when a light circuit is out of commission, which is seldom and usually only for a few hours after a severe storm. The streets and boulevards are generally speaking so well lighted as to require only the side lights, and their use alone would go a long way toward the ultimate end of the "safety first" crusade.

Another handy little device which can be used in connection with the electric system is what is called a sticklite lamp, which has a magnet attachment to secure the lamp to any steel part of the car while adjustments are being made or a tire is being changed. This operates from an ordinary six volt storage battery such as is used for ignition purposes. It is only one inch in diameter, has a reflector tube which acts as a protector to the bulb, and weighs but three ounces.—Chicago Tribune.

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT.

Johnny Evers, Captain of the Boston Braves.

John J. Evers, captain of the Boston Braves and rated as one of the brainiest players in baseball, has reconsidered his determination to quit the game and will stick the season out. Evers attributes his recent breakdown to the attack of pneumonia he suffered last winter and the subsequent fracture of his leg this season. Evers began his baseball career with Troy in 1902 and joined the Cubs in 1903. He was Frank Chance's lieutenant during the days of the Cub successes, and his quick thinking gained a pennant for the team in 1908. In 1913 he managed the Cubs, but a break with Charley Murphy resulted in his going to Boston. That his acquisition made the Braves a pennant winner in 1914 is generally admitted.

Hoppe to Be Handicapped.

Willie Hoppe must now pay the penalty of success. The wonderful little player who has proved himself so far superior to all other professionals in the world at every kind of balk line billiards that he has a strong grip on three titles is now to be handicapped to make the play interesting. The authorities in charge of this sport are making a study of the field in order to arrange a series of handicaps that will virtually put all of the billiard players on the same plane. The idea is to make conditions so nearly equal that any of the players can give Hoppe a sound battle and actually attract spectators, while the runaway matches of the present do not interest billiard fans.

When Walter Weakens.

There never has been a time since Walter Johnson joined the Washington team that he has not been pounded hard if he happened to hit some player with a pitched ball and the latter was injured. Some years ago Walter "beaned" a player named Martin, who was with the Yanks, and became so wild after the accident that he could not finish the game. It was the same recently when he laid Vitt low. Vitt and Johnson were warm friends, and the latter could not get the ball over the plate after he had hit the batsman.

Astor Offers Auto Cup.

Vincent Astor has announced that he will offer a cup for the inaugural race meeting of the new Sheepshead Bay (N. Y.) speedway and sports arena on Oct. 2. The trophy is to be known as the Vincent Astor cup and will be awarded in addition to $50,000 in cash prizes already offered by the speedway promoters. In order to qualify for this cup drivers will have to show that their cars are capable of a speed of at least eighty-five miles an hour, which will insure probably the fastest motor race ever staged.

Cutshaw of Brooklyn.

George Cutshaw can thank Bill Dahlen for his success. When George joined the Brooklyn team the managers of the coast clubs, where he had been playing, including Harry Wolverton, predicted that Cutshaw would fail. Bill admitted that the lad might not set the world on fire as a sticker, but decided he would make good generally and hung on to him. Cutshaw is hitting around the 270 mark.

Detroit Buys Outfielder.

Manager Bill Coughlin of the Scranton club in the New York State league has sold Outfielder George Maisel to the Detroit Americans. It is understood the price is $3,500. The outfielder is a brother of Fred Maisel, third baseman for the New York Americans.

Old Associates.

Jack Barry and Manager Bill Carrigan of the Boston Red Sox ought to be able to get along together in fine style. They both played together at Holy Cross during their college days.

Pipp Considered Big "Find."

The impression is growing rapidly that the most promising youngster uncovered by either major leagues this season is playing with the Yankees. His name is Walter Pipp.

MODERN RIP VAN WINKLE RETURNS

George W. Cram at Eighty-five Marvels at Sights.

PRISONER TWENTY YEARS.

Electric Cars, Autos and Women's Styles Amaze Pardoned Wife Slayer—Remembers Seeing Henry Clay Playing Game of Poker—Praises Warden Osborne's Mutual Welfare League.

New York.—George W. Cram, a modern Rip Van Winkle, awoke here after hibernating over twenty years near the foothills of the Catskills. But unlike his legendary predecessor, Cram's exile was involuntary. He has been a prisoner in Sing Sing and was the patriarch of the grim prison's convicts. At eighty-five he was freed by a pardon from Governor Whitman after escaping death in the electric chair to which he had been sentenced for killing his wife.

On his return here the aged man, who, despite his years, was known in prison as "Kid" Cram, rode for the first time in an automobile and an electric train.

A long drawn "A-h-h!" was the only exclamation he uttered as he emerged from the Grand Central station and gazed with bewilderment at the busy scenes.

"Gosh, how it's grown!" he said as soon as he got his breath. "That's one of the electric street cars, eh? They are big things, all right. Gee, when I went away they had just got cable cars, and we thought them wonderful."

Cram had left the prison after bidding goodby to all his old cronies and the officers at Sing Sing.

On the train the old man became reminiscent.

"The old rum is no good for any one," he said, "and my advice to a boy is, don't take your first drink. I remember my first drink, all right. It was way back in 1848, on a Mississippi river steamboat.

"I was a young lad then, and I saw Henry Clay playing a game of poker with some other men. He took me between his knees and gave me his hand to play. After it was over he gave me his glass of wine to drink. I don't remember whether I won the game or not, but I know I've played many games since then.

"Say, boys," he began suddenly, steering his conversation to Sing Sing, "Warden Osborne's Mutual Welfare league is the greatest thing that was ever instituted in a prison. When I first went into the prison it was a hell on earth. Now it is a paradise."

Reverting to his own case, he said:

"When I was fighting in the Indian campaign near the California line in 1846 I was hit in the nose with an Indian musket. I think that old wound was the direct cause of my trouble. You know, I served in three wars—the Mexican, Indian and civil wars.

"I had been out of work for some time and I began to worry. After that I don't remember a thing, until I woke up to find I had been in the death house at Sing Sing for over a week and was under sentence of death for killing my wife. I never quarreled with my wife."

Cram took a walk along Fifth avenue before going to the home of his granddaughter.

"Gee," he whispered, "how the women dress nowadays! In my time they would have been locked up if they went about with as little clothes on as that.

"I don't think I'll go down to Coney Island yet. It's thirty-five years since I was there. I'm going to California after a few days here. I haven't been there since the days of '49."

Cram was given $10 when he left Sing Sing. He had earned one and a half cents per day.

"I sent that to my family," he said. "Altogether I earned $138 while I was there. I think they ought to pay convicts a dollar a day. They earn it."

ALLIGATORS' BILL.

Worries the Town Council of Anderson, Ind.

Anderson, Ind.—Two small alligators, each about three feet long, but nearly twenty-five years old, are causing the city water department some concern because of their meat bill, although the cost has averaged not more than $20 a year.

The last bill just presented for meat was $15, and because that bill was for only one feed City Clerk Collins and City Comptroller Richter were astonished. It was explained, however, that the alligators had fasted since October last. It is regarded doubtful whether the alligators will again manifest hunger until next spring, but the records show that perfectly good meat for the two alligators has cost the city about $400.

Throwing Men Overboard.

In ancient Scotland the barbarous custom existed which cost Jonah so much inconvenience. When a ship became unmanageable it was usual to [illegible] for the purpose of discovering who was responsible for the trouble, and the man upon whom the lot fell was condemned. Instead of human beings [illegible] to be thrown [illegible].

WILL ENABLE STATE TO COMPLETE CANAL.

If I vote "Yes" on the canal referendum and it should be approved, what will be the result?

(a) The state will issue its bonds and raise the necessary money to complete the construction work and to meet all the obligations of the state which have arisen from land damages, riparian rights, railroad bridges and other extraordinary expenses unforeseen at the time the original estimates were made in 1903.

(b) The construction work yet to be done on the barge canal will be proceeded with, and the improvement will be completed and opened to commerce within two years.

(c) The payments will be spread over a long period up to fifty years, and the state and all property within it will be receiving the great benefits from the canal and will therefore be better able to meet the payments before they fall due during the fifty years to come.

TRIED TO BE POLITE.

And Now He Vows That He Will Never Again Beg Pardon.

Jones had just trod on the toe of an old gentleman, after getting into the street car.

"I beg your pardon," he said.

"Hey? Speak louder. I'm a trifle deaf."

"I beg your pardon," repeated Jones.

"H'm! Peggy starving? Well, I'm sorry. Who's Peggy?"

Jones was red in the face now, and the other passengers began to take notice.

"You misunderstand, sir!" he shouted.

"Hey?"

"You misunderstood!"

"Miss Underwood, is she? Peggy, who is starving, is Miss Underwood? Well?"

"I didn't say anything about Miss Underwood!" screamed Jones. "I begged your pardon, and you misunderstood."

"Oh, now I see!" said the old man sympathetically. "It is your Aunt Peggy who is starving Miss Underwood. Well, why don't you report the case at once to the police?"—Pearson's Weekly

Easy & Practical Home Dress Making Lessons

Prepared Especially For This Newspaper by Pictorial Review

VELVET REDINGOTE FOR SATIN SKIRT.

A smart redingote in dark velvet, with slightly raised waist-line and two-piece circular skirt that may be made with open or closed front.

The redingote is one of the most fashionable of the season's fashions, being an original expression of the long coat. The model illustrated here is made of dark velvet and worn with a skirt and blouse of satin in the same shade.

In medium size the costume requires 4⅝ yards 44-inch velvet, while the skirt and underblouse require 5 yards 36-inch satin. For the underbody ⅝ yard of lining will be needed, and for the vest ⅝ yard lace.

The underbody must be made first to serve as a foundation for the waist. First, pleat lower edge of front, placing "T" on corresponding small "o" perforations. Turn under upper edge of shield on small "o" perforations; stitch ½ inch from folded edge, inserting cord; arrange on front, center-fronts even; stitch upper edge along line of single small "o" perforations, drawing cord to fit. Stitch the shoulder edges together and stitch lower edge along line of double "oo" perforations, easing any fulness. Close under-arm and shoulder seams as notched. Turn hem in back at notches; large "O" perforations indicate center-back.

The waist may now be attempted. Begin by taking up dart in front as perforated. Turn hem in front at notches, center-front indicated by large "O" perforations. Close underarm and shoulder seams as notched; underface upper and armhole edges.

Next, pleat the sleeve, placing "T" on corresponding small "o" perforations. Close seam as notched. Leave seam of sleeve free below large "O" perforation; pleat, creasing on slot perforations, lap to small "o" perforations and stitch. Sew sleeve in armhole as notched, small "o" perforation at shoulder seam, easing in any fulness.

Now, turn hem at front edge of the skirt as perforated, close center-back seam and sew to lower edge of waist. If desired the skirt may be closed in the front.

EXILE IN ARCTIC PRISON.

"Grandmother of Russian Revolution" Is Given a Transfer.

Mme. Catherine Breshkovskaya, known the world over eight years ago as "the grandmother of the Russian revolution," now serving a life exile in Siberia, has been transferred to the far northern city of Yakutsk, on the edge of the arctic circle, according to a letter received from her by Miss Alice Stone Blackwell.

Mme. Breshkovskaya is seventy-one years old and is suffering from cataracts of both eyes, so that she cannot read. Her banishment to Yakutsk, least desirable of all towns in Siberia, came at the end of eighteen months' solitary imprisonment at Irkutsk for trying to escape from Siberia, where she had been sent for life. She served two additional months in prison, the letter says, because no caravan was to start for Yakutsk when her term ended.

About ten years ago Mme. Breshkovskaya came to America and made many friends in this country, among them Miss Jane Addams and Julia Ward Howe. After her return to Russia she was arrested, found guilty of distributing arms and sentenced to life exile.

Pike's Error.

Lieutenant Pike, whose name adorns a lofty peak, was once sent to build a fort near our Mexican (Texas) border. He slipped up on his geography so badly as to place the structure well within foreign territory. It has been believed by many that his orders made ample allowance for such an error.

Entertaining.

Willis—Did they have a good time at your reception last night? Gillis—Yes, the guests enjoyed it hugely. All my wife's arrangements went wrong.—Boston Journal.

PINE ENRICHES INDIANS.

Chippewas Get Property Valued at $820,500.

Ashland, Wis.—Pine timber valued at $820,500 on the Bad River reservation, near Ashland, will be distributed among 547 Indians, many of whom are children, according to official notice received by the Indian office from the secretary of the interior.

In addition to the timber each Indian will have title to the land on which the timber stands, averaging about eighty acres for each person.

It is claimed by government experts that the Chippewa Indians of the Bad River reservation are the richest tribe in America, with one exception. They have more than $1,500,000 to their credit in the vaults of Ashland and Duluth from the sale of pine from former allotments.

If silk is preferred as lining it will add to this garment's comfort.

YOUNG FOLKS' CORNER

An Apple "Stunt."

When you wish to mystify and amuse one of your friends try the trick of cutting an apple into quarters without apparently breaking the skin. It is so old a trick that it will probably be quite new to many of the people you know.

Select a large red apple. Thread a long, slender darning needle with about a yard of strong white linen thread and, beginning near the stem of the apple, take a shallow stitch an inch or so in length toward the blow end.

Draw about two-thirds of the thread through, and be careful to make the break in the skin as small as possible, and when you take the second stitch set the needle exactly in the place out of which it came. Sew entirely round the apple to the opposite side of the stem from where you started.

Now, hold the apple firmly between your knees and, crossing the ends of the thread, take one in each hand and give a strong, steady pull. The thread will cut its way through the fruit and come free in your hand. Repeat the process, beginning again at the stem, but going at right angles to the first cut.

When your friend peels the fruit she will find it neatly quartered. The small punctures that your needle makes in the skin will pass unnoticed, unless the apple is very closely examined.—Youth's Companion.

Jumbled Animals.

To make the game of animals interesting about four persons should play. Of course, the more persons the better the game.

Say, if six persons play, write on six slips of paper the name of an animal—that is, a different animal on each slip, but change the letters all around. For instance, if one animal was to be monkey it should be changed like this: komeyn (2), or if it were hyena it should be changed like this: eynah (3).

Give each one a slip and a pencil, and also a larger piece of paper. The slips should be numbered—that is, from 1 to 6, when six play. Then on the larger slip have numbers from 1 to 6. Then tell the players to pin their slips to their waists or coats. Then each one must go around to each player and try to guess the name of the animal on his or her slip. Each player must guess his own too. When they have guessed the animal they must write the name of it alongside of the corresponding number on the large sheet. For instance, if 3 was donkey they would write donkey alongside of No. 3. Time the players, giving about twenty minutes if six play and more time for more people. At the end of the allotted time the one having the most names correct should receive a prize.

The Useful Owl.

A family of barn owls will number from three to seven birds. It is hard to believe what an amount of vermin a family of owls will consume. An old owl will capture as much food as a dozen cats in a night, or more. The owlets are always hungry. They will eat their own weight in food every night, and more, if they can get it. A case is on record where a half grown owl was given all the mice it could eat. It swallowed eight, one after the other. The rapid digestion of birds of prey is shown by the fact that in three hours the little glutton was ready for a second meal and swallowed four more mice. If this can be done by a single bird, what effect must a whole family of owls have on the vermin of a community?

It would be difficult to point out a more useful bird than the barn owl in any farming country. Like many other birds, it deserves the fullest protection, but man is often its worst enemy.—American Birds.

Game of Pictures.

A large paper curtain is hung up near the end of the room. There are square holes in it, gilded around the edges like picture frames. Half of the players go in back of the curtain and each puts his or her head in a frame. The rest are seated in front of the curtain, and each takes it in turn to criticise the pictures. As soon as a picture laughs he or she must immediately withdraw his or her head from the frame. When all the pictures are gone it is the other side's turn. The two that keep up longest on either side receive a prize.

DUTY OF UNIONISTS.

The principles of unionism must become the principles of the life of a true trade unionist, for they are founded upon fundamental concepts of justice. He must think unionism, feel it, live it, bring it into the lives of those with whom he works, for unionism is human welfare. He must read, study, talk, act, for the cause of unionism.

This is a question that must come home to the consciences of all those who labor. Are you doing your part?

Are you able to defend the cause of labor, to explain its principles, or do you avoid discussions because you have not prepared yourself to maintain your position?

Let each member of organized labor and every labor organization take up the intensive work of a labor forward movement for America.—Samuel Gompers.

TASTY PICKLES.

MUSTARD PICKLES.—One quart of onions (small), one quart of cucumbers, one quart green tomatoes, one cauliflower picked in pieces, three green peppers. Stand overnight in weak salt water, set on fire and let heat through in morning and drain. Be sure to not let them boil.

Mustard.—Six tablespoonfuls of mustard, one-half cupful of flour, one and one-half cupfuls of sugar (and turmeric if liked), two or more cupfuls of vinegar. Place pickles in jars and pour the dressing boiling hot over them, filling jars brim full; then seal. When cooking the dressing if it seems too thick add more vinegar.

Chow Chow.—One peck green tomatoes, one bunch of celery, six onions, two green peppers, two pounds of brown sugar, one tablespoonful allspice, cloves, cinnamon, pepper and salt, vinegar to cover (two or three quarts). Slice tomatoes, sprinkle with salt and let stand twenty-four hours. Drain off and rinse in cold water. Chop tomatoes, celery, onions and peppers, put in sugar and spices and cook two hours slowly.

Mixed Pickles.—Six green peppers and two red ones, one pint of small onions, one pint lima beans, one quarter peck string beans, one pint of celery, one pint of cauliflower, one pint of tiny cucumbers. Boil half gallon of cider vinegar, to which has been added a quarter of a pound of white sugar, a little turmeric and a little celery seed. Boil all together for about twenty minutes, or until it is thick.

Variety Pickles.—One gallon of cabbage chopped very fine, half gallon green tomatoes, one quart onions, all chopped fine; four tablespoonfuls of mustard, two tablespoonfuls ginger, one tablespoonful of cloves, one tablespoonful turmeric, one ounce of celery seed, two pounds of sugar, a little salt and a half gallon of good cider vinegar. Mix well and boil for thirty minutes.

LUCK

Is just another name for good, hard, persistent plugging. Luck is with the merchant who Advertises, not because he advertises, but because he keeps on advertising indefinitely --- Which Means Success.

YOUR SUCCESS

Means the success of your town. Now, honestly, are you doing what you can for your town? Are you "A Herald of Progress"? Do you realize that by doing what you can—which means as much or more than you are doing now, you will be helping yourself—Which Means Success.

If you cannot now be placed where you belong, it is time to right about face, read the words by Ella Wheeler Wilcox, and say to the publishers of your home newspapers—

"I'LL DO WHAT I CAN"

Who takes for his motto "I'll do what I can,"
  Shall be better the world as he goes down life's hill;
The willing young heart makes the capable man.
  And who does what he can, oft can do what he will,
There's strength in the impulse to help things along,
  And forces undreamed of will come to the aid
Of one who, tho' weak, yet believes he is strong,
  And offers himself to the task unafraid.

"I'll do what I can" is a challenge to fate,
  And fate must succumb when it's put to the test;
A heart that is willing to labor and wait.
  In its tussle with life ever comes out the best;
It puts the blue imps of depression to route
  And makes many difficult problems seem plain,
It mounts over obstacles, dissipates doubt,
  And unravels kinks in life's curious chain.

"I'll do what I can" keeps the progress machine
  In good working order as centuries roll;
And civilization would perish, I ween,
  Were not those words written on many a soul,
They fell the great forests, they furrow the soil,
  They seek new inventions to benefit man,
They fear no exertion, make pastime of toil—
  Oh, great is earth's debt to "I'll do what I can."

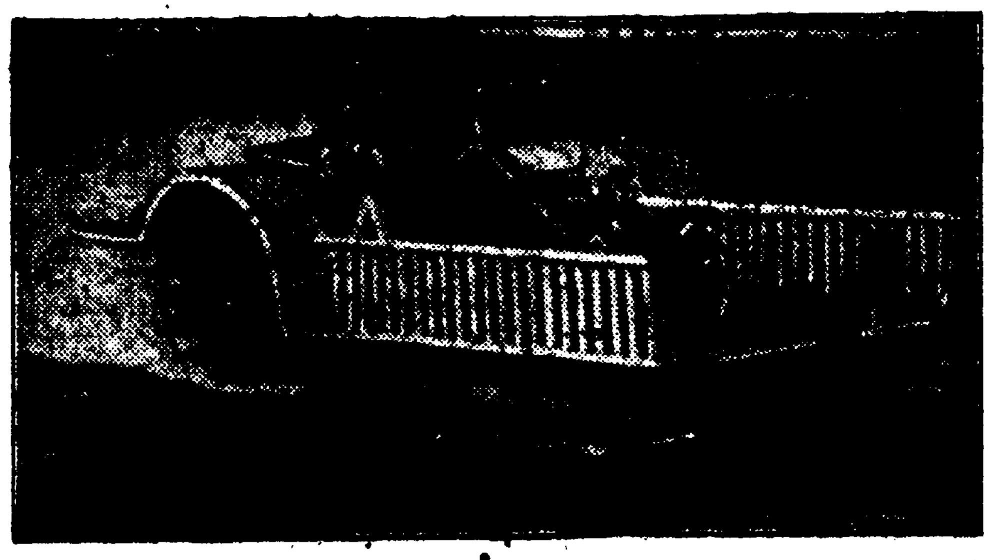
BARGE PROPELLED BY AUTOMOBILE



For crossing a bay 20 miles wide connected at each end with a fine driving beach along the seashore, a motorist of Aberdeen, Wash., uses a barge built for less than $100 and so equipped that it can be driven by the automobile that it transports across the water. A propeller wheel, that is housed for safety, is located at each side of the barge near the stern. The axle of each wheel is at the right height to come in line with the rear car axle when the end of the car is raised a few inches above the deck of the barge, and is capped with a hardwood wheel, 18 inches in diameter and 2 inches thick. On each wheel are leather clamps for securing it to the spokes of the car wheel. With the rear of the car raised so that the wheels are clear of the deck and these wheels connected with the propellers by the straps, the barge is ready for operation by the engine of the automobile. The work of placing the car aboard the barge and making it ready for use requires about eight minutes. The barge can easily make eight miles an hour when propelled by a light car and considerably more than that rate of speed, when it is driven with a high-power car.

Difference Between Amusing and Convincing

By HERBERT KAUFMAN

Author of "Do Something! Be Something!"

AN ADVERTISER must realize that there is a vast difference between amusing people and convincing them. It does not pay to be "smart" at the line rate of the average first-class paper. I suppose that I could draw the attention of everybody on the street by painting half of my face red and donning a suit of motley. I might have a sincere purpose in wishing to attract the crowd, but I would be deluding myself if I mistook the nature of their attention.

The new advertiser is especially prone to misjudge between amusing and convincing copy. A humorous picture may catch the eye of every reader, but it won't pay as well as an illustration of some piece of merchandise which will strike the eye of every buyer. Merchants secure varying results from the same advertising space. The publisher delivers to each the same quality of readers, but the advertiser who plants flippancy in the minds of the community won't attain the benefit that is secured by the merchant who imprints clinching arguments there.

Always remember that the advertising sections of newspapers are no different than farming lands. And it is as preposterous to hold the publisher responsible for the outcome of unintelligent copy as it would be unjust to blame the soil for bad seed and poor culture. Every advertiser gets exactly the same number of readers from a publisher and the same readers—after that it's up to him—the results fluctuate in accordance with the intelligence and the pulling power of the copy which is inserted.

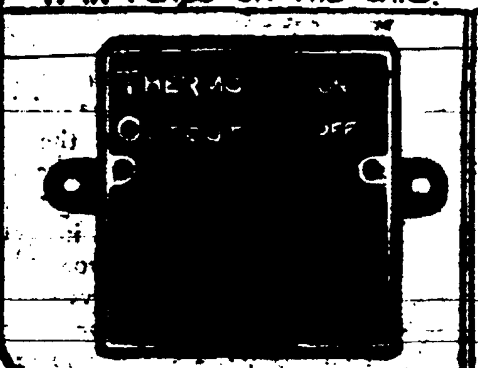
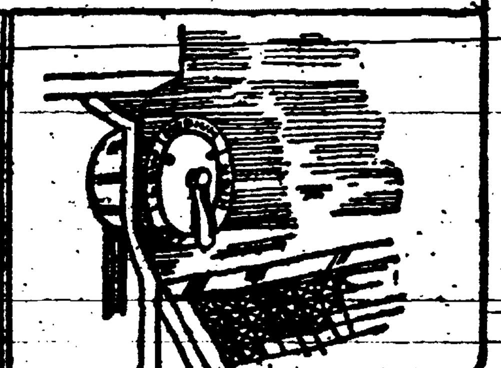
HANDY HELPS FOR THE AUTO TOURIST

NOVEL TROUBLE FINDING LAMP WITH MAGNET FOR HOLDING IT IN PLACE ON THE CAR.



DEVICE TO LOCATE TROUBLE IN ELECTRIC CIRCUITS. ON AUTOMOBILES.



DASH ARRANGEMENT TO CONTROL INTENSITY OF LIGHT FROM HEADLIGHTS.

An Indianapolis concern has brought out what is termed a thermo cutout, which is attached to the dash of the car and which is designed to indicate whether a circuit is complete or whether there is a leak or short. Crossed wires or a ground will cause the cutout to turn off all circuits. Difficulty on any circuit may be found by resetting the cutout so that when the switch is turned to the various circuits the faulty one will operate the cutout.

With the proper use of electric headlights there should be no objection on the part of pedestrians, and there need be no glaring headlights, for several devices have been brought out to use smaller lights when desired. The use of electric lights permits the operator to turn the lights on or off at will, and so while using the side lights to conform to the law's requirements it is only necessary to switch on the headlights for an instant if a particularly dark piece of roadway is encountered and turn them off at once their work is done.

In the use of the headlights an improvement has come whereby a switch is located on the dash and the lever may be operated by the foot. This is designed to regulate the intensity of the light and may be set at low, medium, high, or out, thus permitting the operator to regulate the lights according to road conditions or the necessity for having more or less light.

Those who have electric lights have no excuse for using glaring headlights in the city except occasionally when a light circuit is out of commission, which is seldom and usually only for a few hours after a severe storm. The streets and boulevards are generally speaking so well lighted as to require only the side lights, and their use alone would go a long way toward the ultimate end of the "safety first" crusade.

Another handy little device which can be used in connection with the electric system is what is called a stickalite lamp, which has a magnet attachment to secure the lamp to any steel part of the car while adjustments are being made or a tire is being changed. This operates from an ordinary six volt storage battery such as is used for ignition purposes. It is only one inch in diameter, has a reflector tube which acts as a protector to the bulb, and weighs but three ounces.—Chicago Tribune.

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT.

Johnny Evers, Captain of the Boston Braves.

John J. Evers, captain of the Boston Braves and rated as one of the brainiest players in baseball, has reconsidered his determination to quit the game and will stick the season out. Evers attributes his recent breakdown to the attack of pneumonia he suffered last winter and the subsequent fracture of his leg this season. Evers began his baseball career with Troy in 1902 and joined the Cubs in 1903. He was Frank Chance's lieutenant during the days of the Cub successes, and his quick thinking gained a pennant for the team in 1908. In 1913 he managed the Cubs, but a break with Charley Murphy resulted in his going to Boston. That his acquisition made the Braves a pennant winner in 1914 is generally admitted.

Hoppe to Be Handicapped.

Willie Hoppe must now pay the penalty of success. The wonderful little player who has proved himself so far superior to all other professionals in the world at every kind of balk line billiards that he has a strong grip on three titles is now to be handicapped to make the play interesting. The authorities in charge of this sport are making a study of the field in order to arrange a series of handicaps that will virtually put all of the billiard players on the same plane. The idea is to make conditions so nearly equal that any of the players can give Hoppe a sound battle and actually attract spectators, while the runaway matches of the present do not interest billiard fans.

When Walter Weakens.

There never has been a time since Walter Johnson joined the Washington team that he has not been pounded hard if he happened to hit some player with a pitched ball and the latter was injured. Some years ago Walter "beaned" a player named Martin, who was with the Yanks, and became so wild after the accident that he could not finish the game. It was the same recently when he laid Vitt low. Vitt and Johnson were warm friends, and the latter could not get the ball over the plate after he had hit the batsman.

Astor Offers Auto Cup.

Vincent Astor has announced that he will offer a cup for the inaugural race meeting of the new Sheepshead Bay (N. Y.) speedway and sports arena on Oct. 2. The trophy is to be known as the Vincent Astor cup and will be awarded in addition to $50,000 in cash prizes already offered by the speedway promoters. In order to qualify for this cup drivers will have to show that their cars are capable of a speed of at least eighty-five miles an hour, which will insure probably the fastest motor race ever staged.

Cutshaw of Brooklyn.

George Cutshaw can thank Bill Dahlen for his success. When George joined the Brooklyn team the managers of the coast clubs, where he had been playing, including Harry Wolverton, predicted that Cutshaw would fail. Bill admitted that the lad might not set the world on fire as a sticker, but decided he would make good generally and hung on to him. Cutshaw is hitting around the 270 mark.

Detroit Buys Outfielder.

Manager Bill Coughlin of the Scranton club in the New York State league has sold Outfielder George Maisel to the Detroit Americans. It is understood the price is $3,500. The outfielder is a brother of Fred Maisel, third baseman for the New York Americans.

Old Associates.

Jack Barry and Manager Bill Carrigan of the Boston Red Sox ought to be able to get along together in fine style. They both played together at Holy Cross during their college days.

MODERN RIP VAN WINKLE RETURNS

George W. Cram at Eighty-five Marvels at Sights.

PRISONER TWENTY YEARS.

Electric Cars, Autos and Women's Styles Amaze Pardoned Wife Slayer Remembers Seeing Henry Clay Playing Game of Poker—Praises Warden Osborne's Mutual Welfare League.

New York.—George W. Cram, a modern Rip Van Winkle, awoke here after hibernating over twenty years near the foothills of the Catskills. But unlike his legendary predecessor, Cram's exile was involuntary. He has been a prisoner in Sing Sing and was the patriarch of the grim prison's convicts. At eighty-five he was freed by a pardon from Governor Whitman after escaping death in the electric chair, to which he had been sentenced for killing his wife.

On his return here the aged man, who, despite his years, was known in prison as "Kid" Cram, rode for the first time in an automobile and an electric train.

A long drawn "A-h-h!" was the only exclamation he uttered as he emerged from the Grand Central station and gazed with bewilderment at the busy scenes.

"Gosh, how it's grown!" he said as soon as he got his breath. "That's one of the electric street cars, eh? They are big things, all right. Gee, when I went away they had just got cable cars, and we thought them wonderful."

Cram had left the prison after bidding goodby to all his old cronies and the officers at Sing Sing.

On the train the old man became reminiscent.

"The old rum is no good for any one," he said, "and my advice to a boy is, don't take your first drink. I remember my first drink, all right. It was way back in 1848, on a Mississippi river steamboat.

"I was a young lad then, and I saw Henry Clay playing a game of poker with some other men. He took me between his knees and gave me his hand to play. After it was over he gave me his glass of wine to drink. I don't remember whether I won the game or not, but I know I've played many games since then.

"Say, boys," he began suddenly, veering his conversation to Sing Sing. "Warden Osborne's Mutual Welfare league is the greatest thing that was ever instituted in a prison. When I first went into the prison it was a hell on earth. Now it is a paradise."

Reverting to his own case, he said:

"When I was fighting in the Indian campaign near the California line in 1846 I was hit in the nose with an Indian musket. I think that old wound was the direct cause of my trouble. You know, I served in three wars—the Mexican, Indian and civil wars.

"I had been out of work for some time and I began to worry. After that I don't remember a thing, until I woke up to find I had been in the death house at Sing Sing for over a week and was under sentence of death for killing my wife. I never quarreled with my wife."

Cram took a walk along Fifth avenue before going to the home of his granddaughter.

"Gee," he whispered, "how the women dress nowadays! In my time they would have been locked up if they went about with as little clothes on as that.

"I don't think I'll go down to Coney Island yet. It's thirty-five years since I was there. I'm going to California after a few days here. I haven't been there since the days of '49."

Cram was given $10 when he left Sing Sing. He had earned one and a half cents per day.

"I sent that to my family," he said. "Altogether I earned $126 while I was there. I think they ought to pay convicts a dollar a day. They earn it."

ALLIGATORS' BILL.

Worries the Town Council of Anderson, Ind.

Anderson, Ind.—Two small alligators, each about three feet long, but nearly twenty-five years old, are causing the city water department some concern because of their meat bill, although the cost has averaged not more than $20 a year.

The last bill just presented for meat was $15, and because that bill was for only one feed City Clerk Collins and City Comptroller Richter were astonished. It was explained, however, that the alligators had fasted since October last. It is regarded doubtful whether the alligators will again manifest hunger until next spring, but the records show that perfectly good meat for the two alligators has cost the city about $400.

Throwing Men Overboard.

In ancient Scotland the barbarous custom existed which cost Jonah so much inconvenience. When a ship became unmanageable it was usual to draw lots for the purpose of discovering who was responsible for the trouble, and the man upon whom the lot fell was condemned. Instead of human beings dogs used sometimes to be thrown [illegible]

WILL ENABLE STATE TO COMPLETE CANAL.

If I vote "Yes" on the canal referendum and it should be approved, what will be the result?

(a) The state will issue its bonds and raise the necessary money to complete the construction work and to meet all the obligations of the state which have arisen from land damages, riparian rights, railroad bridges and other extraordinary expenses unforeseen at the time the original estimates were made in 1903.

(b) The construction work yet to be done on the barge canal will be proceeded with, and the improvement will be completed and opened to commerce within two years.

(c) The payments will be spread over a long period up to fifty years, and the state and all property within it will be receiving the great benefits from the canal and will therefore be better able to meet the payments before they fall due during the fifty years to come.

TRIED TO BE POLITE.

And Now He Vows That He Will Never Again Beg Pardon.

Jones had just trod on the toe of an old gentleman, after getting into the street car.

"I beg your pardon," he said.

"Hey? Speak louder. I'm a trifle deaf."

"I beg your pardon," repeated Jones.

"H'm! Peggy starving? Well, I'm sorry. Who's Peggy?"

Jones was red in the face now, and the other passengers began to take notice.

"You misunderstand, sir!" he shouted.

"Hey?"

"You misunderstood!"

"Miss Underwood, is she? Peggy, who is starving, is Miss Underwood? Well?"

"I didn't say anything about Miss Underwood!" screamed Jones. "I begged your pardon, and you misunderstood."

"Oh, now I see!" said the old man sympathetically. "It is your Aunt Peggy who is starving Miss Underwood. Well, why don't you report the case at once to the police?"—Pearson's Weekly

Prepared Especially For This Newspaper by Pictorial Review

VELVET REDINGOTE FOR SATIN SKIRT.

A smart redingote in dark velvet, with slightly raised waist-line and two-piece circular skirt that may be made with open or closed front.

The redingote is one of the most fashionable of the season's fashions, being an original expression of the long coat. The model illustrated here is made of dark velvet and worn with a skirt and blouse of satin in the same shade.

In medium size the costume requires 4⅝ yards 44-inch velvet, while the skirt and underblouse require 5 yards 36-inch satin. For the underbody ⅝ yard of lining will be needed, and for the vest ⅜ yard lace.

The underbody must be made first to serve as a foundation for the waist. First, pleat lower edge of front, placing "T" on corresponding small "o" perforations. Turn under upper edge of shield on small "o" perforations; stitch ⅛ inch from folded edge, inserting cord; arrange on front, center-fronts even; stitch upper edge along line of single small "o" perforations, drawing cord to fit. Stitch the shoulder edges together and stitch lower edge along line of double "oo" perforations, easing any fulness. Close under-arm and shoulder seams as notched. Turn hem in back at notches; large "O" perforations indicate center-back.

The waist may now be attempted. Begin by taking up dart in front as perforated. Turn hem in front at notches, center-front indicated by large "O" perforations. Close under-arm and shoulder seams as notched; underface upper and armhole edges.

Next, pleat the sleeve, placing "T" on corresponding small "o" perforations. Close seam as notched. Leave seam of sleeve free below large "O" perforation; pleat, creasing on slot perforations, lap to small "o" perforations and stitch. Sew sleeve in armhole as notched, small "o" perforation at shoulder seam, easing in any fulness.

Now, turn hem at front edge of the skirt as perforated, close center-back seam and sew to lower edge of waist.

If desired the skirt may be closed in the front.

EXILE IN ARCTIC PRISON.

"Grandmother of Russian Revolution" Is Given a Transfer.

Mme. Catherine Breshkovskaya, known the world over eight years ago as "the grandmother of the Russian revolution," now serving a life exile in Siberia, has been transferred to the far northern city of Yakutsk, on the edge of the arctic circle, according to a letter received from her by Miss Alice Stone Blackwell.

Mme. Breshkovskaya is seventy-one years old and is suffering from cataracts of both eyes, so that she cannot read. Her banishment to Yakutsk, least desirable of all towns in Siberia, came at the end of eighteen months' solitary imprisonment at Irkutsk for trying to escape from Siberia, where she had been sent for life. She served two additional months in prison, the letter says, because no caravan was to start for Yakutsk when her term ended.

About ten years ago Mme. Breshkovskaya came to America and made many friends in this country, among them Miss Jane Addams and Julia Ward Howe. After her return to Russia she was arrested, found guilty of distributing arms and sentenced to life exile.

Pike's Error.

Lieutenant Pike, whose name adorns a lofty peak, was once sent to build a fort near our Mexican (Texas) border. He slipped up on his geography so badly as to place the structure well within foreign territory. It has been believed by many that his orders made ample allowance for such an error.

PINE ENRICHES INDIANS.

Chippewas Get Property Valued at $820,500.

Ashland, Wis.—Pine timber valued at $820,500 on the Bad River reservation, near Ashland, will be distributed among 547 Indians, many of whom are children, according to official notice received by the Indian office from the secretary of the interior.

In addition to the timber each Indian will have title to the land on which the timber stands, averaging about eighty acres for each person.

It is claimed by government experts that the Chippewa Indians of the Bad River reservation are the richest tribe in America, with one exception. They have more than $1,500,000 to their credit in the vaults of Ashland and Duluth from the sale of pine from former allotments.

AN AFTERNOON WRAP.

A Charming Design in Faille Silk and Ball Buttons.

FOR EARLY AUTUMN.

This attractive maternity wrap is featured in black faille silk, but broadcloth or gabardine would be equally suitable. With adjustable belt, deep cuffs and roll collar, the coat is high necked and fastens with ball buttons, which also serve to trim the cuffs. If silk is preferred as lining it will add to this garment's comfort.

YOUNG FOLKS' CORNER

An Apple "Stunt."

When you wish to mystify and amuse one of your friends try the trick of cutting an apple into quarters without apparently breaking the skin. It is so old a trick that it will probably be quite new to many of the people you know.

Select a large red apple. Thread a long, slender darning needle with about a yard of strong white linen thread and, beginning near the stem of the apple, take a shallow stitch an inch or so in length toward the blow end.

Draw about two-thirds of the thread through, and be careful to make the break in the skin as small as possible, and when you take the second stitch set the needle exactly in the place out of which it came. Sew entirely round the apple to the opposite side of the stem from where you started.

Now, hold the apple firmly between your knees and, crossing the ends of the thread, take one in each hand and give a strong, steady pull. The thread will cut its way through the fruit and come free in your hand. Repeat the process, beginning again at the stem, but going at right angles to the first cut.

When your friend peels the fruit she will find it neatly quartered. The small punctures that your needle makes in the skin will pass unnoticed, unless the apple is very closely examined.—Youth's Companion.

Jumbled Animals.

To make the game of animals interesting about four persons should play. Of course, the more persons the better the game.

Say, if six persons play, write on six slips of paper the name of an animal—that is, a different animal on each slip, but change the letters all around. For instance, if one animal was to be monkey it should be changed like this: komeyn (2), or if it were hyena it should be changed like this: eynah (3).

Give each one a slip and a pencil, and also a larger piece of paper. The slips should be numbered—that is, from 1 to 6, when six play. Then on the larger slip have numbers from 1 to 6. Then tell the players to pin their slips to their waists or coats. Then each one must go around to each player and try to guess the name of the animal on his or her slip. Each player must guess his own too. When they have guessed the animal they must write the name of it alongside of the corresponding number on the large sheet. For instance, if 3 was donkey they would write donkey alongside of No. 3. Time the players, giving about twenty minutes if six play and more time for more people. At the end of the allotted time the one having the most names correct should receive a prize.

The Useful Owl.

A family of barn owls will number from three to seven birds. It is hard to believe what an amount of vermin a family of owls will consume. An old owl will capture as much food as a dozen cats in a night, or more. The owlets are always hungry. They will eat their own weight in food every night, and more, if they can get it. A case is on record where a half grown owl was given all the mice it could eat. It swallowed eight, one after the other. The rapid digestion of birds of prey is shown by the fact that in three hours the little glutton was ready for a second meal and swallowed four more mice. If this can be done by a single bird, what effect must a whole family of owls have on the vermin of a community?

It would be difficult to point out a more useful bird than the barn owl in any farming country. Like many other birds, it deserves the fullest protection, but man is often its worst enemy.—American Birds.

Game of Pictures.

A large paper curtain is hung up near the end of the room. There are square holes in it, gilded around the edges like picture frames. Half of the players go in back of the curtain and each puts his or her head in a frame.

The rest are seated in front of the curtain, and each takes it in turn to criticise the pictures. As soon as a picture laughs he or she must immediately withdraw his or her head from the frame. When all the pictures are gone it is the other side's turn. The two that keep up longest on either side receive a prize.

DUTY OF UNIONISTS.

The principles of unionism must become the principles of the life of a true trade unionist, for they are founded upon fundamental concepts of justice. He must think unionism, feel it, live it, bring it into the lives of those with whom he works, for unionism is human welfare. He must read, study, talk, act, for the cause of unionism.

This is a question that must come home to the consciences of all those who labor. Are you doing your part?

Are you able to defend the cause of labor, to explain its principles, or do you avoid discussions because you have not prepared yourself to maintain your position?

Let each member of organized labor and every labor organization take up the intensive work of a labor forward movement for America.—Samuel Gompers.

RELIGIOUS EXHIBIT TO TOUR COUNTRY'S CITIES

New York.—So successful is the religious exhibit at the Panama-Pacific Exposition in San Francisco considered to have been that Guy B. St. John, of this city, who arranged it and managed it in the Palace of Education, will take it on a tour of the big cities of the country, remaining a week in each place. Mr. St. John has arranged an itinerary extending over two years. Missionary exercises will be conducted in connection with the exhibit.

The first will be Seattle, Wash., where the exhibit will open early in January.

THE QUIRK

For tomorrow, a big ten-reel program has been prepared that is in full keeping with the ones that have become so popular in the last few weeks. Charlie Chaplin in "Dough and Dynamite," a new two-reel Keystone Comedy; the second episode of the J. R. Wallingford serial, in two parts. "A Bogus Earl," with Pincus ainbow, Charlie Chaplin's double, is a corker and will be a revelation in character impersonation. "Stanley's Search for the Hidden City," a two reel Bostock Animal drama. frightful scenes after the air raid murderers have dropped their bombs can form any conception of the character of the crimes against humanity which are being committed in the name of Germany.

"In the interest of humanity we must not cloak the horror of such acts," it declares.

Lord Northcliffe's Times, supported strangely enough by the Daily Chronicle, turns its battery on Rear Admiral Sir Percy Scott because the Zeppelins were not brought down, and says nastily:—

When Admiral Scott was named it was thought his mere appointment would frighten the Zeppelins away. Unfortunately, we are mistaken. In addition, the Evening News has demanded the head of Lord Haldane, and the Daily Mail attacks Sir Edward Grey because treacherous Bulgaria has joined forces with the Central Empires.

The Times assails Mr. Balfour because he did not reassure the public. Instead, he permitted Sir John Simon, of the Home Office, to issue the Zeppelin raid bulletin.

The Daily Telegraph publishes the inspiring information that since the beginning of the war seventeen Zeppelins and ten other German airships have been destroyed or captured and that 126 of the crews have been killed and 138 taken prisoners. The Telegraph adds that London's offensive and defensive arrangements against the sky murderers soon will be effectively organized and that if fair play and a reasonable chance be given to Rear Admiral Scott the man who made his name by surmounting gunnery difficulties, will not rest tamely under defeat and will not be satisfied with protecting London. More than that, he will forward the day when aerial reprisals will bring home to German cities a realization of the murderous brutality of the course adopted by the Kaiser's squadrons.

ADMIRAL LITTLE TO BE TRIED

Washington.—Secretary Daniels ordered the trial by court-martial of Rear-Admiral William N. Little, retired, who was inspector for the navy at the Fore River Works, Quincy, Mass., until December 31, 1914.

The general charges against Admiral Little are "neglect and careless methods in the conduct of his duties while inspector."

One of the specific and gravest charges against Admiral Little relates to the passing of submarine K-2. It is stated by officials that Admiral Little knew that the construction of the vessel was defective. It is alleged that he entered into an agreement with officials of the company to pass the vessel on condition that defects in the storage batteries, which persisted in grounding, would be remedied later by the company.

Battery trouble has been declared by experts to make the American submarines perilous to their crews, and useless for emergency tasks.

All officials know that there has been constant trouble with submarines, and it has been charged openly that scarcely any of the older types are of value to the navy.

Submarines Unsafe Says High Officer

Today's New York American contains an article of a sensational nature, which is as follows:

The trial of thec harges against Rear-Admiral Little surely will result in proving how ineffective our undersea craft are. Therefore the New York American feels that it is privileged to make public the report made to it at that time, eliminating names of naval officers and craft. The report follows:

"I am told on the highest authority that practically every submarine in the United States navy is defective. "Not only this, but every man —officer and crew—is in danger of death every time one of our undersea boats submerger.

"I saw four men hoisted, unconscious, with ropes from a submarine of our latest type, during the manoeuvers at Newport last week. They were overcome with fumes from gasolene, Only vigorous use of pudmotors saved their lives.

Mishaps are Constant

"Almost every time a United States submarine dives, I am reliably informed, officers and members of the crew are overcome by such fumes. There have been constant accidents and constant near fatalities. Just what the toll has been cannot be definitely established until the suppressed reports of submarine commanders are examined.

"Often the submarines—after remaining under water for less than an hour—come to the surface with half the crew unconscious.

"Lieutenant —— and two other officers were in the conning tower of the ——. The ballast tanks were filled with water and the vessel slowly sank beneath the waves.

"The odor aboard the submarine became so unbearable after the vessel had been down thirty minutes that Lieutenant Deen ordered the boat to the surface. He threw open a steel hatch and with senses reeling, drank in great drafts of grateful air.

"In my presence four sailors were hauled out of a lower compartment (near the motors), attached to ropes. They were rushed ashore. I thought they were dead. But their hearts were beating, and for a few minutes strenuous work with the pulmotors brought them around.

"This happens almost every time we go down.'" said one of the grasping sailors.

"'Can't you stay under five days as the German submarine do?' I asked

"'Five days?' he replied. 'If we stayed down twelve hours, we'd all be dead.'

"An Instrument of Murder"

"That evening I talked with a high naval officer. He said to me:

"'It is absolutely impossible to do any sort of effective work with submarines equipped with gasoline motors. Any submarine with gasoline motors is an instrument of murder.'

"'Congress must give us money to experiment and build safe submarines. We must model our boats on the German plan.'

"'The Germans have evolved a new steel composition, too, for their submarines. This steel is very light, is absolutely non-corrosive and cannot be touched even by nitric acid.

"'The submarine has proved able to accomplish results never before imagined. It has impressed itself on all the navies of the world. All we need to produce a submarine equal to any in the world is an approprition for experiment.

Germans Hold Patents

"'We cannot buy the best German motors. They will not sell them to us. We cannot even build the kind of submarines we want here because certain parts are patented by Germans The holders of these patents can dictate plans of construction. Our submarine construction is absolutely at the mercy of Germany.

"'There are certain parts of English submarines even which can be made nowhere else but in Germany.

Rural Co-operative Societies

The most recent official figures available of co-operative distributive societies in Russia show that out of 6,730 associations of this kind, there were no less than 4,716 that is 70 per cent. of the whole number, placed under the head of rural co-operative societies.

This proportion, not found anywhere else, would alone suffice to show the unique part occupied by co-operative distributive societies in the economy of the country districts in the empire of the Czars.

According to the Bulletin of Economic and Social Intelligence, published by the International Institute of Agriculture, the beginning of Russian distributive co-operation must be sought as far back as 1865. At first their progress was slow and difficult. During the 20 years from 1865 to 1885 in all the empire only 180 had been formed.

The following 20 years constituted a second advance, notably more favorable to their development, for the total number authorized in Russia from 1880 to 1905 rose to 1,879.

A third chapter began with the year 1908, more remarkable still for the development of these associations, if we judge by the fact that during the first six years thereafter the number of the societies of which we possess particulars rose to 5,567.—Buffalo Times.

ELIHU ROOT PLEADS FOR STATES' RIGHTS

New York.—Elihu Root, in the first issue of Prosperity, which describes itself as "the Republican National Magazine," makes a plea for "American individuality," and incidentally an attack upon the tendency of the federal government to usurp the rights of the States.

"Unless we wilfully close our eyes," says Mr. Root, "we cannot disguise the fact, that our government has, step by step, during recent years been making long strides in the direction of accomplishing two things— one the complete substitution of the power and agency of the United States government for State governments, and the other the substitution of State socialism for that system of individual enterprise which built up our land and made America the freest and greatest country on earth."

Continuing, Mr. Root, says:—"It was not so that our people was born and grew. It was not in reliance upon any government that our fathers faced the terrors of the sea and the forest, and fought with hunger and cold and poverty and savage foes and felled the forests and tilled the soil and settled the farms and built the afctories and the railroads and the great public works, and illustrated and glorified humanity by their works of charity and benevolence. It was not in reliance upon any government that the American people grew to full stature, the most self-reliant, adaptable, competent, fate compelling people the world ever knew.

"Underlying all this great structure, of more value than all our possessions all the possessions of all the millionaires and all the corporations, is the one great quality of a free, self-governing people, independent and self-reliant character based upon that Anglo-Saxin liberty that has grown for a thousand years, that independence of character that knows no superior, that bows to no power—strong, self-helping independence. That is the richest possession of our country; but we can lose it. We are beginning to lose it. Every step by which the central government is overwhelming the governments of the States, every step by which the government is reaching out its paternal hand to help those who are too weak or idle or lazy or indifferent to help themselves, is washing away and reducing that great and vital quality of individual character on which the perpetuity of our liberty, our freedom, depends."

A Change at Least.

A change of tenors had been made in the church choirs. Eight-year-old Jessie, returning from the morning service, was anxious to tell the news.

"Oh, mother," she exclaimed, "we have a new terror in the choir!"—Woman's Home Companion.

BARGE CANAL TO SAVE MILLIONS

People of State Will Yearly Gain $15,000,000.

WILL LOWER FREIGHT COSTS.

Completing the Barge Canal Plus Good Roads and the Motor Truck Will Give the Shippers of the State Minimum Cost Routes to All Markets.

Vote "yes" on the barge canal referendum at the coming election. Two factors have appeared since the canal's improvement was started which will extend the advantages of using the canals for the movement of freight at a minimum cost, miles beyond the canal's routes in either direction.

Motor Trucks as Carriers.

These factors are the improved state highways and the introduction of the modern motor truck as carriers of supplies and products to and from farms and communities, many miles back from the route of the canals.

Every individual farmer or community that is located within 50 to 70 miles of the Erie, the Oswego, the Champlain or the Cayuga-Seneca canals may use the canals to advantage, by means of the motor truck and the state highways, to ship products to or receive supplies from upwards of 90 per cent of the state's population.

On average highways 3½ and two-ton trucks may be operated to advantage to the distance of a day's run in conjunction with the low rates that will be available via the large boats on the barge canals. On improved highways it is figured five and three-ton trucks may be used to advantage.

Each city and village along the canals will have public docks available to all shippers and equipped with loading and unloading mechanism that may be used at a fractional cost.

Conservative waterway rates will make it possible for the farmer, merchant and factory to effect savings in freight amounting to $7,500,000 to $15,000,000 per year.

Vote "Yes" on Canal Referendum.

The saving of but two years will more than equal the amount of money needed to complete the barge canals, pay all of the damage claims and reimburse the state treasury with the money advanced on the contracts now underway.

To put the canals to work reducing costs on supplies in and out of every section of the state vote "yes" on the canal referendum.

$1,000,000 AMERICAN SHIP FOR THE PACIFIC

San Francisco.—A new million-dollar steamer, flying the American flag on the Pacific between San Francisco and Honolulu, was announced as contracted for today by William Matson, head of the Matson Navigation company, which runs and operates six vessels between the two ports now.

The vessel will be built at the yards of the Union Iron Works here, the first of the Matson fleet to be built on the Pacific coast, and is to be ready for operation in 1917.

SCANDINAVIA LOOKS TO U. S. FOR ITS OIL

New York.—The United States is to replace Russia in supplying fuel and lubricating oil to the Scandinavian countries, so says Curt Ebstein, representative of a large oil importing firm of Copenhagen, who arrived yesterday on the steamship Oscar II.

"Russia is not exporting oil now," said Mr. Ebstein, "and even if she were it would be uncertain whether we coulld get it through. The fields in Gallicia, captured by the Germans in their last drive, are, I understand, being worked to almost full capacity, the output going to supply military needs."

THE FULTON EVENING TIMES

"A Herald of Progress"

Volume 1, No. 257. MONDAY, OCTOBER 18, 1915. Price One Cent

W. H Hornibrook Sees In Evening Times' Editorial and "A Friend's" Offer of $25 Some Incentive to Work for Boys' and Girls' Club

The Fulton Evening Times:

Your editorial of October 6th, 1915, on "Lend a Hand," and the offer of a "Friend" to subscribe $25 toward a boys' club rooms prompts me to let you know what I am and have been trying to bring about for the boys and girls of this community. For sometime I have been quietly at work to make it possible so that the boys and girls of this city could have a place to congregate and enjoy clean amusement, not on one or two days of the week, but every afternoon and evening, when they so desired. From private talks with several fathers and mothers, I am assured of the giving of their time to correctly supervise a boys' and a girls' club, open to all boys and girls regardless of their religous belief. At this time it is rather early to make a definite announcement as all plans are not complete, but for the reason above given, it seems proper to state that a start has been made to do something for the betterment of the young people of our City.

The Vestry of Zion church, in authorizing the construction of a modern guild home, in the rear of the present church, have given the community evidence of their interest in the welfare of the young people of the city.

There will be no rents to pay but funds will be needed for equipment and proper maintenance of same. Would be very glad to hear from and discuss the proposition with those of our good citizens, who are willing to support the proposition, earlier the better.

Respectfully yours,

W. H. HORNIBROOK.

DEMONSTRATION TRAIN HERE TODAY; RECORD COWS ARE EXHIBITED

The dairy and poultry demonstration train, of the O. & W. R. R., consisting of three cars, two for demonstration purposes and the third car occupied as living quarters, drew up at Seneca street early this morning and before leaving at noon was visited by a large number of people.

The operation of the train was commenced today and will continue for two weeks, meantime stopping at practically every station on the O. & W. Railroad. The State College of Agriculture and the Farm Bureau managers located along the line are co-operating with the railroad in running the train.

One car of the train contained exhibits of interest to dairymen, including alfalfa, vetch, soy beans and other products of importance. In the same car is a poultry exhibit in charge of an expert from the State college, F. E. Andrews, instructor of poultry husbandry at Cornell. In another car, two cows, the property of E. E. Risley, of Walton, Delaware County, N. Y., are shown. Both animals have been in a cow testing demonstration; one is profitable and the other unprofitable. In the other end of the same car there is a display of interest to the fruit men. A practical apple grader is shown in operation, as well as sample packs of apples in barrels done according to the New York State Apple Packing and Grading Law.

One of the Risley cows, Delta Johanna Pontiac, a three year old, has a record of 27.48 pounds of butter for seven days and 94.64 pounds for thirty days, with a milk record of 572 for seven days. The other cow, a two year old, Mollis Johanna Beets, shows 17.87 pounds of butter and 422 of milk.

The expert in charge of the two animals asks visitors for comment on the bodily structure of the two cows, so that farmers in this way can become more learned in picking a good milk giver by sight. Size of neck and head, length of legs, etc., are some of the points which must be taken into consideration in picking a valuable cow.

The apple grader, operated by hand, will sort out from two to five sizes of apples and has a capacity of from two to five hundred barrels a day.

The poultry exhibit is indeed interesting; variety of eggs being shown as well as preserved specimens contained in bottles. Most of the apple exhibit comes from the farm of E. W. Hathaway, of Port Ewen, N. Y.

R. W. Quackenbush, Industrial Agent of the O. & W. R. A. has charge of the train and the following men are assisting him:

E. V. Underwood, Manager of the Oswego County Farm Bureau who is accompanying the car; Floyd S. Barlow, Manager of the Otsego County Farm Bureau; E. P. Smith, manager of the Chenango County Farm Bureau, and R. F. Pollard, manager of the Oneida County Farm Bureau.

THOMAS A. EDISON

One of Fulton's Merchants Entered in Window Contest

William C. Morgan, jeweler, in the Quirk building, is one of the entries in the International Window Display contest which the Edison Diamond Disc Jobbers' Association is conducting during this entire week all over the country and Canada. During this week each window in every city in the two countries the contestants' show windows will contain a display of the Edison Diamond Disc—Thomas A. Edison's new invention for the re-creation of sound. Mr. Morgan being a contestant his show windows will be treated the same as those of his colleagues elsewhere.

The conditions of the contest have been ingeniously framed to bring about a good contest. The following is quoted from the conditions circulated by the Jobbers' Association:

"The jury's decision will not be influenced by the number of instruments displayed but by the attractiveness and impressiveness of the display, and in particular by the graphicness with which are presented the superior and distinctive musical qualities of the Edison Diamond Disc Phonograph and its special features, such as the permanent diamond reproducing point, the non-wearing and unbreakable records, etc. The fact that the Edison Diamond Disc Phonograph and record give a laboratory re-creation of music, as opposed to a mere mechanical reproduction, and that the Edison Diamond Disc Phonograph has no tone of its own (proven by ton comparisons with the living artists). are features that should be emphasized. The jury will pay no attention to the shape or size of a dealer's window. In other words, the dealer with a small window will have just as good a chance as the dealer with a big window. The awards will be based on the originality with which it is carried out in the arrangement of the display."

Mr. Morgan's window was made ready this morning. It is entered for the prizes offered for Edison dealers in this State and also for the championship prize that is to be awarded for the best display in the United States and Canada.

ITALY TO COOPERATE IN DEFENCE OF SERBIA

London.—Dr. E. J. Dillon, telegraphing to the Daily Telegraph from Rome, says that the position of Italy with respect to the Balkan expedition is satisfactory to the Triple Entente, as it is capable of adaption to future conditions. This is interpreted here to mean that the Italians will co-operate in the defence of Serbia when the moment is opportune.

Dr. Dillon adds:—"Italian military experts express the fervent hope that the Entente will organize the Balkan expedition with an eye to coherency of schemes and adequacy of means with the closest attention to concrete details. Miscalculations like those which have characterized the Dardnelles expedition would entail much more sinister consequenees if repeated in the Balkans. The British nation should be apprised of this significant fact."

A Malta despatch to Reuter's Telegram Company says:—

"Signs are not wanting that the Allies in the course of the next few days will be landing strong new forces at Salonica.

"The view is expressed by persons arriving from Italy that there is every probability that an Italian expeditionary force will be desptached to help the Serbians."

BRITISH USED U. S. FLAG TO SINK GERMAN U-BOAT

Washington.—A series of six affidavits, alleging that on August 19 a British patrol boat, the Baralong, flying the American flag, sank a German submarine, has been filed with the Department of State by Ambassador Bernstoff. Fifteen members of the crew, including the commander, it is stated, were shot down after they surrendered or were swimming in the sea.

The act is alleged to have taken place forty miles off the Irish coast, in the same vicinity and only a little mile after the White Star liner Arabic was sunk by a German submarine. If the statements in the affidavits are truthful, it is evident that two German submarines were in the neighborhood when the Arabicsunk. The undersea boat which sank the Arabic returned in safety to Germany.

The Baralong had received a wireless stating that the Arabic had been sunk and the Leyland liner Nicosian attacked. She wash urrying to the rescue of the latter ship when the tragedy occurred. Five of the affiadavits agree that not only did the Baralong fly the American flag but that the Stars and Stripes were painted large upon her sides.

Those making the affidavits are: Larimore Holland, eighteen years old, of Chattanooga, Tenn.; James G. Curran, of No. 4653 Sheridan road, Chicago; Edward Clark and Bud Amersan Palen, of No. 235 Division street, Detroit; and R. H. Crosby and Charles D. Hightower, ofCrystal city, Texas All are American citizens.

TRIALS OF MOONSHINERS HAVE BEGAN

Fort Smith, Ark.—Trials of a number of defendants in the called "moonshiner" whiskey conspiracy case in which more than twenty men residents of various states, have been indicted, were set for today in the United States District court here. It was expected upwards of o dozen men would appear for trial. Some of the men indicted have not yet been arrested, a few are fugitives from justice and others successfully have resisted extradition to the Arkansas district from their native states.

AUTO WITHOUT LIGHTS RUNS DOWN CYCLIST

$2,000,000 MASONIC TEMPLE DEDICATED

Washington.—The new two-million dollar Masonic Temple, headquarters of the Supreme Council of Scottish Rite Freemasonary for the Southern Jurisdiction of the United States, which also is called the Mother Council of the World, was dedicated here today with elaborate ceremonies and in the presence of a large assemblage of distinguished Masons from many parts of the country.

'OXYDONOR' IS FRAUD, FEDERAL ORDER SAYS

Rochester.—According to a fraud order issued by the Postoffice Department in Washington against the Oxydonor Sales Company, of Rochester, and agencies in other cities, they will be greatly restricted in doing business. They sell an article known as an "oxydonor," which retails at $25. It has been advertised as capable of curing practically any ill by causing the body to take up oxygen through the skin.

SUFFRAGE STRENGTH CAUSES LEADERS TO KEEP QUIET

New York.—An extension poll taken by the Herald of this morning among political leaders of all parties in New York State shows a majority of these men believe the woman suffrage amendment will be defeated. Fronm the same source the prediction was made that the proposed new constitution would win.

The Citizens' Union and various political bodies are in an active campaign for the adoption of the proposed new constitution.

In New Jersey, where the vote on the suffrage amendment will be had tomorrow, it was predicted by political leaders that the amendment would be lost, although a tremendous sentiment in favor of it was admitted.

Extending to all but six counties of the State, a canvas of the members of the Democratic and Republican States committees indicates that a majority of the party leaders believe the woman suffrage amendment will be defeated.

It shows much uncertainty in many quarters, however, on the exact situation. It finds many active politicians studiously silent. Others confidentially said they expect either a heavy vote against the amendment—sufficient to overwhelm it—or an astonishing large vote for it among men who give the impression that they are hostile.

Thirty-one committee members, both republican and democratic, say they look for majorities for suffrage in their Assembly districts. Seventy-eight declare they look for a majority against.

New York city leaders were resitant about expressing their opinion. Many refused to make any prediction. Several intimated—not for publication—that the outcome of the suffrage fight in New York city will hinge upon the eleventh hour attitude of the democratic organization.

Of twenty-five New York city leaders who consented to go on record eighteen predict a majority in their particular districts the amendment. Four see a possible majority for and four say, they are unable to size up the situation either way,

"SHOOTING UP" FUN COST KOPECK $25; WAS HIS WAY OF CELEBRATING

Telling friends that he was a "regular" cowboy, Thomas Kopeck, immediately started demonstrating last night the fact by "shooting up" the west side. Kopeck, before being lassoed by Officer Alnutt, ran through Pine, Beach, 1st and 2nd streets, forcing pedestrians under cover and badly frightening the entire community.

When arraigned in Police Court before Judge Wilson this morning Kopeck admitting firing shots from a revolver. Kopeck did not have the revolver when arrested, but a woman in the neighborhood informed the patrolman that she had seen the man throw the gun at the side of a nearby house. The officer found the gun, also several cartridges which had been thrown away.

A number of complaints have been made recently of promiscuous shooting in then eighborhood of West Broadway.

Kopeck was released upon payment of a fine of $25. He explained to Judge Wilson that on account of a christening in his home hec ould not resist the temptation to go out and celebrate. He denied that he had told anybody of his intention to impersonate a cowboy.

A "Type of Modern Man" in War

Miss Jane Addams has undertaken to explain and amplify her curious and instructive observations on the use of alcohol in modern armies. It appears that in the address that caused so much commotion she was concerned only to lay before her audience certain facts indicating "a revolt against war taking place in the midst of war itself." Now, as she intimates in the current "Independent," she is not satisfied that this revolt is general and fears that in expressing her own views on the extent to which alcoholic stimulants are used she "unfortunately gave a mistaken impression." Her desire, therefore, is to make clear exactly what she meant on that occasion.

To begin with, it never occurred to her for a moment that the doses were administered "because the men lacked courage." Besides, she was not thinking of the common run of men. On the contrary, "one of the hideous results of the war," she says, "is the inveterate tendency of the 'average' man to fall into the spirit of hot retaliation." It may be gathered that Miss Addams has rather more respect than less for exceptional men, the men who have to be whipped up with spirits before they will fix bayonets. These are the more refined modern sort, and it is evidently in these that Miss Addams sees indications of the great revolt against war. She is thinking of "a type of sensitive man doubtless found in each army," and for this type, she still holds, "stimulants might be necessary." When, therefore, she heard that rum, ether and other spirits were in fact used, she concluded, not that the imbibers were timid or cowardly, but "that the stimulants inhibited the sensibilities of a certain type of modern man."

This is all extremely interesting, only, considering how strongly the old way of distributing spirits to soldiers has been condemned by army men of experience, the proper distribution of alcohol on these critical occasions must call for very nice discrimination. When it is considered, moreover, how very uncertain the action of alcohol is, the task must be enormously complex. However, it is obviously encouraging to the pacifists to see that the chiefs of modern armies in spite of their opposition to alcohol are obliged to use it in the field. It shows that the sensitive modern type of man is already too strong for them, and when the revolt is general they will be at their wits' end. To keep whole armies perpetually drunk would be a task beyond the greatest of generals. —N. Y. Tribune.

Keep the Bench Out of Politics

When Justice Hughes made public announcement that he would not under any circumstance be a candidate for the presidency, he gave one more illustration of the high standard of ethics maintained by men who have won for the Supreme Court the confidence and respect of the American people. For his ability and integrity, Mr. Hughes is rightly held in high esteem, not only by Republicans but by members of all other parties. His character and accomplishments have added strength to the Republican Party through all the years of his active affiliation therewith. His decision in 1910 to accept a position on the supreme bench and retire from partisan politics was in one sense a loss to the party, but in another way it was a gain, for it gave opportunity for a member of that party to demonstrate devotion to public duty and sacrifice of personal interest.

A man with a standard of ethics not so high as that of Justice Hughes might quibble with his conscience and resign the judgeship upon receiving a party nomination. But Mr. Hughes can see, as the American people have always known, that if there shall be established the precedent of selecting partisan candidates from the supreme bench, the judicial mind will never again be free from partisan ambition, partisan criticism and partisan influence. Under the unwritten law which this nation has adopted by common acclaim, no justice of the Supreme Court has ever been elected to any other office. Even to admit the possibility of such election would be to divert the judicial mind from judicial duties, and direct partisan discussion toward occupants of the supreme bench, their decisions and their political principles.

Recognizing these facts and fully appreciating the effect of his course upon the future of the court and the country, Justice Hughes promptly put an end to speculation as to his availability as a candidate. In doing this at a time when his popularity was great and when his nomination would be probable but for his judicial position, Mr. Hughes achieves for himself a still higher place in the esteem of his countrymen, regardless of party or fraction.—Auburn Citizen.

A Part Against the Whole

It is a most interesting observation that most of those who oppose the bulk of the proposed constitution do so because of a dislike for a single provision. At the vote in the convention the few members who voted nay and offered reasons, generally said they were opposed because of one provision or another. On the other hand, those who favor the instrument usually say that while there are some things about the proposed fundamental law which they do not approve, they like the general improvement that the new constitution provides. They are unwilling to judge and condemn the whole by a part. Very objectionable, indeed, would a single provision have to be in order to outweigh the good in the rest.—Utica Observer.

"CLOSE UP---CLOSE UP IN THE REAR"

To the man who has served his country or state, in the regular army or militia, the above caption must be familiar. It will bring back the sight of a long legged sergeant pounding forward, thirty inches to the step, one hundred twenty steps to the minute—the army laws requiring never swerving, never slackening steps. It is addressed to the laggards who must not hold the columns back.

Holding the columns back is no worse than holding your town back. In any event, the progress of a town depends upon keeping up the pace steadily, and the sergeant's command should be kept ringing in the ears of every man in our town—especially now that gossip concerning the Chamber of Commerce is running rife. It matters little whether there is any truth in the gossip, or whether the Chamber of Commerce is right or wrong in keeping behind the doors its intentions for the future, if we want to build up the old Fulton and develop the new, secure new and permanent things for the city, then we must imitate the long legged sergeant.

Of what consequence is it that the Chamber of Commerce has not pleased everybody? The principle lying back of it is right. It is designed right. It is designed by the American City Bureau, whose method is to employ experts in city building. The Bureau being right it does not often fail. It aims to "close up in the rear," and to give us something essential to growth besides great smoking stacks, huge mechanisms, etc. It aims at preparedness and trains us to imitate the methods of big business and big manufacturing plants by using the brains of experts for all matters that are summed up in the term, "municipal improvements." The old rule-of-thumb way, with one exception, is out of date, the exception being that the old way is a get-together way. The rule-of-thumb way is slow and costly and gets nowhere. As a result of it towns in this state, which might easily have a national reputation for beauty, are ugly beyond description. Fulton is not ugly beyond description, but its beauty is undeveloped. It is rich in so many ways that to mention them would be a waste of space. One thing has been demonstrated, this city is rich in patriotic spirit. Within the past year it has contributed thousands of dollars for the improvement of conditions and the entertainment of its people. It has not been too poor to capitalize the present Chamber of Commerce that its future might be provided for. A contract exists with the experts and now we need results. In order to secure results we must keep eyes upon the long legged sergeant, and "Close up—close up in the rear." If the laggards will not keep up to the pace, they should be dropped by the wayside or given a quiet spot in one of the commodious cemeteries.

A BIG QUESTION

Man is profoundly interested in all scientific subjects. He delights in the wireless, in electric power, in radium. But he fails to study the forces within himself. He neglects to know of himself. Often the lowest force—fear—is the predominating power within him. He fails to fully appreciate the full factors of ambition, hope and courage. He knows all about modern machinery, technical training; but if you should ask him of his greatest failing, he would flunk with the answer. Hed oesn't know himself.

To my mind, the most important knowledge a man can have is self-knowledge. A man may excuse himself for not having it, but the world never will.

Let me ask you a straightforward question right now while the iron is hot: What is holding you back?

If you fail to analyze yourself, fail to answer this question correctly, who is at fault?

If you do not know what is holding you back, and you are man enough, and strong enough in purpose to try to fix this weak part, you are some fixer.—The Silent Parner.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE

Washington.—Juggling with the figures in the accounts of a national bank is a serious matter in the eye of the Treasury officials, but juggling with the figures in the accounts of the Treasury itself is—as Abe Potash would say—"something else yet again." At any rate this must be the opinion of Secretary McAdoo, because, by a mere change in the form of the treasury statement, the net cash balance in the treasury has been increased by $85,000,000, although not one additional dollar has been placed in the treasury.

This has been accomplished by removing from the liabilities of the treasury the balances of disbursing officers and adding these balances to the net cash balance.

In removing theb alances from the liability column, however, Secretary McAdoo did not have the courage to place them in the assets column. Yet the net cash balance in the treasury is a real asset and, therefore, if these disbursing officers' balances are to be included in the net cash balance, they are also presented as assets of the treasury, the balance being the difference between treasury assets and treasury liabilities.

Liabilities of the treasury are created by appropriations made by congress. All expenditures by the government are made by disbursing officers, whether in the payment of bills on account of government contracts or the salaries of many thousands of government employes. The disbursing officers make statements of the immediate bills that must be settled, and the money is placed to their credit against which they draw their checks. The secretary of treasury himself signs the document which places the money at the disposal of the disbursing officers for immediate expenditure.

Once those documents are signed, the money is as far removed from the control of the treasury as if it had been taken by the secretary from the vaults and handed over to the disbursing officers. In the treasury department these accounts are carried as balanees of the disbursing officers. But they are balances of the disbursing officers because the disbursing officers need the money for immediate necessities.

In the accounts of the disbursing officers every dollar placed to their credit is matched by a debt of the government, which these officers are called upon to pay. These debts of the government do not show in the accounts of the treasury department, and therefore the amounts placed to the credit of the disbursing officers have always heretofore been carried as liabilities of the treasury because they represent liabilities which the government is to meet through its disbursing officers.

Hence the balances of disbursing officers in the treasury statement are exactly like the list of cashiers' checks in the statement of a bank, and are such previous liabilities that their removal from the liabilities column by the secretary of the treasury is exactly similar in all respects to the removal of outstanding cashiers' checks from the liabilities of a bank, in a bank statement.

Secretary McAdoo further increases his net cash balance statement by removing from the liabilities column the amount of national bank notes for the retirement of which money has been deposited in the treasury. He transfers these items to the public debt statement, but by so doing is able to transfer the money deposited for the retirement of the notes to the net cash balance although it is plain that every dollar of it is pledged to pay for outstanding bank notes, the moment those notes are presented.

Yet with these deposits showing as assets in the net balance, there is no showing of the liability which they have been deposited to meet.

HOME TOWN HELPS

HARD TO MAKE OVER CITY

Experiences of Centuries Old Towns Should Be Lesson to the Builders of Today.

The most hurried traveler along the tourist routes of Europe allows himself time to note with a smile that the "gates" which were once the veritable entrance through the walls into the city are now in the very heart of the city's bustling life.

Who does not know "Lud Gate" in London, now Ludgate Hill? Lud is the name of a mythical king of Britain.

The legend has it that this Lud laid the foundation of London. Shakespeare preserves his memory in "Cymbeline:" "And on the gates of Lud's town set your heads." This strong gate in the western part of the city is far enough removed from the west and is one of the busiest streets in the world.

Bishopsgate—the bishop gate; Aldgate—the old gate; Newgate—the new gate, all tell the same story. The "gates" are found in the innermost recesses of the city. The real entrances to the city are many miles away.

And what a higgledy-piggledy business it is! Boxes of brick and stone, in bewildering squares and parallelograms and shapeless shapes of every fashion, stretch away into dim distance, to straggle, to jostle, or to decay, as fate or fortune wills. There is not a city of any age in all Europe, now touched by the progressive spirit, which has not been for the last 30 years or will not be for the next 30 engaged in the titanic task of widening its old streets and constructing new ones.

But at what cost must the men and women of an unwalled and ungated city today make the place of their habitation habitable!

ADVANCE IN CITY LIGHTING

Hanging Arc Lamps so Installed That They Add to Instead of Detracting From Appearance.

Many of the old installations of hanging arc lamps are even uglier than the incandescents. The old arcs are usually suspended above the street on a tangle of wires and cables where they glare and sputter the long night through. But modern engineering and modern love of the beautiful, as well as the utility of a lighting system, have changed all this. The new systems of arc lighting are nothing like the old. The lamps are not hung above the street but crown the tops of ornamental standards placed alternately up and down the street. There are no hanging wires in sight, no sharp points of light to dazzle the eyes, no flicker and sputter. Instead of sharp, penetrating rays of bluish light the new luminous arc lamps give a flood of soft, white light which is many times more efficient and more economical than the light from the old lamps. The wire and cables are all underground, where they are safe and do not mar the natural beauty of the street. Shade trees do not have to be cut down or trimmed until they die.

Hints on Concrete Road Building.

Sprinkling the wearing surface of concrete roads during the construction period must be practically continuous on hot days unless there is some moisture-retaining medium present. Recent observations of a number of pieces of road construction, on which contractors new to the work were engaged, indicate that the inspector is having his hands full in getting the "wetting-down" specifications properly adhered to. Where earth is available a generous layer thrown on makes an excellent cover and holds water well. Some careful road builders in the West, recognizing the value of curing concrete under water, have made earth dams along the edges of concrete roads and divided the road longitudinally into a series of pools.—Engineering Record.

Boy Scouts Guarding Trees.

Philadelphia boy scouts are doing yeoman service in guarding the trees of the city from the caterpillar pest and other harm for which laws can be enforced to prevent mischief to forests and trees. The same plan is also being carried on in Burlington, Vt. It is an excellent idea to enlist the services of the boys in these preservative methods and teach them by this means to love and care for the trees, which the average city boy only enjoys for shade or as a convenient object from which to obtain a stick.

No Cause for Interference.

However brave the policemen are, they are careful about not breaking the laws and ordinances. A patrol man was kicking his feet down on the lake front in Chicago, so a story runs, when an excited citizen ran up to him and cried: "Say, hurry up! A man has just jumped off the pier!"

"With his clothes on?" asked the officer.

"Yes—fully dressed. Hurry!"

"What do you want me to do? There ain't no ordinance against a man swimmin' as long as he's properly dressed."

GOOD BUSINESS SAYS YOU SHOULD VOTE 'YES'

Matter of Completing Barge Canal by Bond Issue Urged.

The state of New York has asked the voters of the entire commonwealth at the coming election to sanction or reject an issue of $27,000,000 of bonds for the purpose of completing the barge canal system.

It is a business proposition purely and simply. The state, like a stock company or corporation, is putting up to its stockholders, the citizen voters of the state, the matter of the best business policy to be pursued in order to meet the costs, growing out of a gigantic waterway development, originally authorized by an overwhelming majority of the voters of the state.

Canal Enlargement Big Undertaking.

The enlargement of the canal to barge canal size is so nearly completed that hardly more than a third of the $27,000,000 to be voted upon will be needed to complete the work.

Of this $27,000,000 the state is bound by court rule to pay fully $13,500,000 to cover land and other consequential damages, and an additional $3,654,000 will have to be paid back to the state treasury to reimburse funds advanced by acts of legislature to continue canal construction contracts now being completed.

There then remains less than $10,000,000 to cover the letting of new contracts that will complete the entire barge canal system. About $600,000 of this money will be spent on work east of Syracuse, while the bulk of the money for actual construction will go into work west of Syracuse and principally in the Tonawanda-Rochester zone.

That is the basis of the bond issue to be voted upon. The work of building the barge canals will have to be completed and the cost will have to be paid.

The business proposition for the voters to decide is the method in which the payment is to be met.

What Negative Vote Will Do.

By voting "yes" on the canal referendum the voters will decide that this payment is to be extended over a period of years making the cost of completing the canal a simple and easy matter for the taxpayers of the state to meet.

A negative vote on the canal referendum will mean that the $27,000,000 will have to be met as a lump sum burden imposed upon the taxpayers.

By voting "yes" on the canal referendum the most business-like method will be adopted. The cost will be an easy one to be met by the taxpayers of the state.

Open to Conviction.

"I understand," said Mr. Dolan, "that you declared there should be no more fightin'."

"I said that," replied Mr. Rafferty. "But I never was obstinate, an' mebbe a few words of argument from you can make me change my mind."—Washington Star.

With the exception of the British parliament, the Swedish riksdag is the oldest of existing legislative bodies.

THE UNREALIZED HOPE OF AN AGED MOTHER

In "Our Own Page" of the November Woman's Home Companion appears a very interesting, but yet pathetic, story written by an aged mother whose life was ruined by the last great war. Following is an extract from her article:

"I am an old woman, and I live in a little country town. Perhaps no one will be very much interested in the thoughts of a plain woman of seventy-three. But there is one subject that I know more about than my children, and more than any of the brilliant young men who are running the world to-day. That subject is war.

"I married a soldier who came back from the Civil War. He died only ten years ago, forty years and more after the close of the war—but it was the war that killed him. In his last years he used to tell the same stories over and over again, so that after a while I didn't need to listen any more.

"And what I thought was this: Isn't there some way that this country can be sure it will never, never have another war?

"There are only a few thousand of us old women and men in the country now whose lives were ruined by the last war. Mine was ruined; that is what gives me courage to write this. But there are only a few of us. We do not count.

"What counts is this: In 1940, say, will there be several hundred thousand women in America like me, whose lives were blasted by war? Or, will we few remaining old women be the last war widows this country will ever have?

"I think we may be, if the men of this country do what they ought to do. Don't be content just to pray for peace. My mother prayed for peace; I prayed for peace. It wasn't enough. If we had had as much influence as women have today, I think we could have preventd war. Perhaps I am wrong."

NEW TAX BILLS BY MILLS COMMITTEE

New York.—Substitutes for the personal property tax were discussed Saturday by Senator Ogden Mills' legislative committee, which met in executive session. Tentative plans will be announced early in November, hearings in New York and in the principal upstate cities. He issued this statement:

"The committee at its executive session this morning decided to have the principal suggestions as to possible substitutes for the personal property tax put into the shape of definite bills and amendments to the present law. It is impossible to judge the merits or demerits of any plan, perfect though it may be in theory, until it has been worked out in all its details, and the committee, before coming to any definite or final conclusion, desires the benefit which will accrue from a discussion and criticism of suggestions that have been made when the suggestions have been reduced to concrete and definite shape.

SCRAP WIRE BRINGS $25,000; NEEDED IN WAR

Rochester.—The soaring of the prices of metals, due to the insatiate demand of the European war, is realized somewhat in a recent sale of scrap aluminum by the Rochester Railway and Light Company.

About four years ago the H. S. Kerbaugh Construction Company, of Philadelphia, contracted with the lighting company for electric power to run its big dredge in excavation wor kon the Barge canal in a section at Macedon. Steel towers were erected and an aluminum line was stretched from Pittsford, a distance of twenty miles, at an initial cost of $28,000.

For three years the line was in use but for a year since the fulfilling of the contract the line has not been used, and was regarded by the company as a partial loss. The war and its high prices came to the rescue, however, and the lighting company has now sold the aluminum wire for scrap at $25,000, reducing the initial investment to $3,000. The steel towers, which supported the wire, are still left to be disposed of.

Gallipoli.

Athens colonized the peninsula of Gallipoli more than 2,500 years ago Its inhabitants, the Dolonkian Thracians, asked Athenian aid against savage neighbors, and Miltiades walled off the isthmus near Bulair.

KANSAS FARMERS OUT FOR DOLLAR WHEAT

Great Bend, Kan.—A meeting of wheat growers was held here Saturday to organize a union, the members of which pledge themselves not to sell their wheat at less than $1 a bushel.

The promoters of the union, all Kansas wheat men, assert that in the last four years Kansas growers sold 231,088,694 bushels of wheat for $117,177,754, or about 50 cents a bushel.

"Thus Kansas raised and gave away more than $60,000,000 in four years and was fined $2,000,000 for her generosity," a committee reported.

"The wheat growers' union is to remedy this injustice by securing for Kansas a proportionately larger income for larger crops. During the last twenty five years the average price of wheat has been 69 cents. Had the farmers received $1 for it, the price of production, they would have received $512,176,583 more, or $20,487,063 yearly average.

A declaration of the wheat growers' union is to fix a minmum price for wheat based upon the average cost of production, estimated to be at least $1 a bushel, and enforce it through concerted non-delivery.

The Tone of the New Edison

Music lovers have hoped for years that some day a genius would make possible an artificial tone that would actually sound like the original. This Mr. Edison has done, at last, in the New Edison Diamond Disc Phonograph. With the wonderful Diamond Stylus (no needles to change) he has created a tone so true, so life-like, that one can scarcely distinguish it from the original.

A REVELATION:

This seems almost too good to be true. Come in and hear it. Judge for yourself. We will be glad to play the New Edison for you without obligation. It will be a revelation to you as it has been to others.

BATTLE FILMS TO BE SHOWN HERE

Real War Pictures Coming to The Quirk Under the Auspices of The Fulton Evening Times.

The Evening Times has arranged to exhibit at The Quirk theatre, Friday, Oct. 22, the New York Sun's authentic reproduction in motion pictures of the war in Europe. Full realization of what the neutral Americans have to be thankful for is shown in these wonderful battle films which have created a sensation wherever shown.

The motion picture camera as a means of recording warfare brings the scenes of strife right to our door and makes it possible for us, in our secure position, undisturbed by calamities to visit the turmoil.

When the New York Sun's pictures were shown at Carnegie hall, New York, for an extended season, the greath all was often inadequate to accommodate the greate rowds that sought admission.

The scenes shown on the 7000 feet of film would require columns to describe. Among the features shown are the flying Zeppelins over the outskirts of Paris, civil panic in the form of a run on a national bank of Brussels, artillery battle outside Louvain, the engagement of German and British ships, German army entering Brussels, Belgian-German flight at Namur, surrender of Brussels to the Germans, field guns in action near Antwerp, the blowing up of the bridge at Lys, terror stricken inhabitants fleeing from city, the speeding armoured motorcars, which have done so much damage to German Uhlans, the armored train at Arvin firing broadsides as it passes (the daring photographer was standing on the cab of the engine unprotected), the bombardment of Ghent, motor busses of all nations passing Ypres on the way to Roulers and several hundred other details of the great strife.

For the first time in history noncombatants can sit in the comfort of a theatre chair and witness all the details of civilization in convulsions and history in the making.

Cavalry and infantry charges are shown with desperate men storming trenches held by an equally desperate enemy, artillery duels and earth-works filled with soldiers firing up each other, lighter touches are also shown.

The entire story of the war is given in a sequence of events which makes the entertainment a liberal education and full report of the terrible conflict across the water.

There are 7000 feet of film and over 100 stirring events are pictured. A lecturer will explain the pictures and there will be music.

MRS. EDWARD GEIS

Mrs. Edward Geis, 34, wife of Edward Geis, died early this afternoon after an illness of several years duration. Besides her husband, Mrs. Geis is survived by one 7 year old son Edward Geis, a brother Otto Malone, of this city, and three sisters, Mrs. George Doughterty of West Granby, and Mrs. Sophie Kessel and Katherins Rumasch, both residing in Germany.

Mrs. Geis' maiden name was Miss Minnie Malone, and she was born in Germany. She came to this country in 1898 and settled in Fulton. Later she moved to New York city where she was married to Edward Geis. Mr. and Mrs. Geis came to Fulton 10 years ago and Mr. Geis engaged in business on the west side.

Mrs. Geis was a member of the Pocohontas lodge.

Burial will be made in St. Mary's cemetery Wednesday morning. The funeral will be held from the home and at 9:30 services will be held in the Church of the Immaculate Conception, Rev. John Lindsman, officiating.

Young & Hill, undertakers, have charge of the funeral arrangements.

FAMOUS CIRCUS ENTERTAINED

Came Here With Brother's Body, Which Was Buried Yesterday---Was World's Greatest Hurdle Rider.

Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Darleigh entertained a guest yesterday of distinction, one who is known to the lovers of the old time circus ring, and who is the last of five brothers known to the professional world as the "Costella Brothers."

The guest was Mr. David Laughlin who came here with the body of his brother, Arthur J. Laughlin, whose funeral occurred yesterday afternoon, burial being made in the B. P. O. E. plot in Mt. Adnah cemetery. Mr. Laughlin was one of the original founders of the Barnum & Bailey circus, and which he accompanied to Europe on the memorable trip. Another distinction accorded to Mr. Laughlin is that he holds the record as the greatest hurdle rider in the world. In 1905 he visited this city as one of the proprietors of the Costello & Graves' circus. On this occasion "Our Own Daniel" was the principal clown in that circus.

At present Mr. Laughlin is a prominent business man of Henderson, N. C., where he is engaged as a real estate broker and in training circus ring horses and acrobats and gymnasts. He left on the 9:30 train last night for his southern home, but will stop in Philadelphia, Pa., where his daughter-in-law is confined in a hospital, ill with typhoid fever.

MR. AND MRS. W. J. HAWKES CELEBRATED ANNIVERSARY

Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Hawkes at their pretty home, 823 Emery st., on Friday night celebrated their silver wedding anniversary. The rooms were prettily decorated with cut flowers and potted plants, the color scheme being green and white. Thirty friends and relatives of the genial people were present to aid in observing the occasion.

The hostess, prettily gowned in white, with the assistance of her three daughters and husband, bade the guests welcome. Little Miss Eunice, the six-year old daughter, sang in a charming manner the welcome to the company. An orchestra furnished music throughout the evening. Old songs were sung and the piano selections rendered with bones accompaniment were especial features of enjoyment.

During the course of the evening the guests were ushered into the dining room where the consummate skill of the hostess' twenty-five years of training in the culinary department of her home was exhibited in a rich assortment of goodies.

The oldest guest of the evening was Mrs. Evelyn Griswold, who stated she was "92 years young." She entered into the pleasures of the evening with keen interest. The youngest guest present was Harry Sweet, just sixteen months old.

GOOD FRIENDS AIDED IN HER 74th ANNIVERSARY

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Horton, in Emery st., was enlivened Saturday evening by a large number of relatives and friends who were there to honor Mrs. Horton's mother, Mrs. Mercy Locke. It was the occasion of the lady's 74th birthday and she could not have been more surprised and pleased at any previous anniversary. The guests of the evening came laden with gifts, and the big cake served at the close of the dinner was made just the right size to accommodate the three score and four candles that blazed in honor of the event.

The guests were: Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Phillips and daughter of Watertown; Mr. and Mrs. Van Broklin and daughter Lillian of Carthage; Mrs. John Dyer, Mrs. Willington Hastings, Mrs. Isaac Simons, Mrs. Silas Merritt, Mrs. Grisoll, Mrs. James Van Alstyne and Mr. and Mrs. Horton.

KNOWLTON—FAILING

Two young persons arrived here Saturday, to visit at the home of the Rev. and Mrs. Balch, but more especially to become man and wife, the nuptial knot to be tied by the pastor of the Free Methodist church, the same eveining.

With a kindly interest in the young guests, who were Mr. William Ross Knowlton and Miss Alta N. Failing, both of Watertown, the pastor and his wife caused a number of young members of the local congregation to meet and witness the marriage of the Watertown people, who will return to their home in the northern city tonight. There a splendid reception awaits them, to be extended by the young people connected with Mr. Balch's former charge.

CANAL CLOSES TO NAVIGATION NOV. 30

Myron Strahlman, superintendent of the Oswego canal, has received notice from the office of Maj. Gen. W. W. Wotherspoon, State Superintendent of Public Works, that navigation on the Oswego canal will close at midnight, November 30th.

The issuing of clearances for through boats will cease November 27th.

As no icebreaking boat is maintained on the canal, it is believed boat owners will not risk having their boats held up in the canal for the winter, provided severe weather sets in before the date of closing, so that there should be few boats operating during the latter part of November.

STATE CITIES MAKE INCREASES

Large Centers Gain at Expense of Country---Two New State Cities Created Since June.

Albany.—The cities of New York state now contain a fraction over 75 per cent of the total population. Five years ago the cities claimed 74.3 prr cent of the total residents of the Empire State. In 1900 sixty-eight per cent of New York's millions were classed as urban residents. Out of the 9,700,000, which in round numbers makes up New York's State's population at the present time, approximatelly two and a half million men, women and children have their homes in the villages and rural sections.

Barring a half dozen exceptions, every city in New York state has made a gain in population during the last five years. In the exceptions the decrease has been small. In at least one instance the loss was due to the removal of a large manufacturing con cern to another city.

As the outcome of the June census taken under the direction of Secretary of State Francis M. Hugo, two more cities have been created, Saratoga and Mechanicsville becoming such in June, while a third, White Plains, enters into the city column on January next.

Greater New York with its population of over five millions becomes the home of over one half of the state's total residents. Its very size, its deversified means of a livelihood and hundreds of other reasons attract thousands each year compared to the hundreds who flock from the smaller communities to the lesser cities in the interior of the state, each of which in its turn contributes its quota year after year in further swelling the metropolitan population.

The tabulation of the June census has revealed many hamlets with decreased populations. A neighboring city, magnet to the country boy, has shown a corresponding gain.

The census also shows that New York City was hit harder by the war than many had supposed. Thousands of immigrants were cut off from coming here. Other thousands already domiciled in New York and its environs have harried back to Europe in response to their country's calll to arms.

ANDERSON HAS NO STANDING

That's What Betts Says of Anti-Saloon League Man —Adds That His Support is a Blight.

W. H. Anderson's weakness as a political factor again comes under the observation of Editor Charles H. Betts of the Lyons Republican. Mr. Betts says in Saturday's issue of his newspaper as follows:

For the information of the public and the enlightment of the benighted we wish to call attention to the fact that our position has again been vindicated. We have all along contended that the opposition of William H. Anderson is a source of strength and popularity and that his support is a blight which leads to inevitable defeat. Our position has again been vindicated on this point. We have repeatedly called attention to the fact that his opposition to Speaker Thaddeus C. Sweet of Oswego county and the dishonorable methods and political trickery employed in that campaign resulted in the re-election of Speaker Sweet by an increased plurality of 2,000. We have repeatedly called attention to the fact that Mr. Anderson has never been able to defeat a single candidate whom he opposed and that every candidate who has enjoyed the distinction of his opposition has been nominated or elected as the case might be with an increased plurality.

Our position has again been vindicated on this subject. In the county of Jefferson Mr. Anderson and Mr. Burke made a strenuous effort to defeat Hon. H. Edmund Machold; one of the ablest, one of the cleanest and one of the best members in the state Assembly. After waging a fierce and noisy campaign against Mr. Machold he was nominated by a splendid plurality, receiving more than two votes to his opponent's one. Not only this, but a letter from a prominent citizen in Jefferson county conveys to us the following information:

"The result of the primaries are hard to understand to one not familiar with what took place. The fact is that the whole campaign against Machold took place in the southern end of the county where he lives. Wherever they (Anderson and Burke) went he carried the primary by a vote of 10 to 1."

Thus it will be seen that the opposition of Anderson as we have all along contended, is theg reatest source ofpopularity that any candidate can have. The people are intelligent, they are honest and they are fast discovering that Mr. Anderson is a political trickster, a religious impostor and a curse to the cause of temperance. This is the reason that he is being so universally repudiated by the people and by all intelligent mininters whose minds are capable of comprehending the truth.

STRANGER DISAPPEARS WITH LIVERY OUTFIT

Charles Washburh, manager of the Fulton Livery, yesterday reported the the police the theft of a horse and buggy belonging to the firm which was hired by a stranger last Friday.

The description furnished the police says the man was about 5 ft. 7 inches tall, wore a new blue suit, black skirt, and a brown soft hat. The buggy was rubber tired, with red running gear, and top.

The horse is a light bay mare, weighs about 950 pounds, has a white strip in face, heavy mane and tail and the right hind foot is white.

The police have notified neighboring towns of the theft.

ARMY MEN AND WOMAN HELD UP

Attacked Owner of Car at Mexico, Fled to Rochester Where They Are Held by the Police.

Rochester.—The two soldiers, members of the Third U. S. Infantry, stationed at Madison Barracks, Sacketts Harbor, and who assaulted a driver of an automobile in the village of Mexico, last Friday, may be returned to this county by the officers of the law. At present the two men and a woman who was with them are under arrest at headquarters on charges of being fugitives from justice, and detained with them under the same charge is Maud Durant-Lipman, 19 years old, of Watertown. All three are accused by the Watertown police of having stolen an automobile and assaulted the driver. Throwing him out and driving away with the machine. They were on their way to Fort Niagara, near Buffalo, when arrested here.

Shortly before noon yesterday Chief Quigley received a message from Chief Bell of Auburn, asking him to watch out for the automobile and its occupants. They had passed through Auburn, Bell said, and were believed to be on the way to Rochester.

The soldiers were taken before Detective-Captain Whaley. Whitten admitted that they were absent without leave from their post at Sackett's Harbor and supposed too free use of liquor explained the fact. Whitten said he and Cross went to Watertown on Friday and on Saturday met the Durant girl. She rented the automobile for them, he said, and they rode into the country, where the owner of the car "fell over the back seat," as he put it. He denied that any one struck the man. They drove to Syracuse and thence to Auburn. West of the latter city the automobile struck an obstacle and was ditched. They could not get the car out of the ditch, so they slept in it the rest of the night. When daylight came they got the car out into the road.

Not Deserters, Says Whitten

Whitten insisted that they had not stolen the car. He said they intended to drive on to Buffalo and finally to Fort Niagara, where they would report for duty.

When Cross talked with Captain Whaley he appeared to think his rights had been interfered with. He denied that the owner of the car had been attacked. He said the girl rented the car and asked them to take a ride. Cross corroborated Whitten regarding the accident. He said they had only a little money, but enough to buy gasoline.

The Durant-Lipman girl denied having hired the car, but insisted that someone had rented it and that it had not been stolen. She said Alfonsa Antony, of Watertown, drove the car as a taxicab. She did not see him struck, she said, although she knew he had been left behind somewhere along the road to Syracuse.

The girl said she was married to a soldier, Phillip Lipman, of Company H., last Monday by Rev. Mr. Johnson of Trinity church, Watertown. When asked what her husband would think of her escapade she said she didn't intend to be a vegetable. She wore a shabby blue suit and a black velvet hat.

After the three were locked up the Syracuse and Auburn police chiefs were notified. From Syracuse came word last night that the soldiers stole the car or held up the driver of it at Mexico on Saturday. The driver made his way to Syracuse and is under the care of a physician in that city.

MAKES BIG PROFIT ON STOCK EXCHANGE SEAT

New York.—The sale of the Stock Exchange seat of Edward Popper last week marked the passing from membership of one of the famous "forty" who bought their seats in 1879. Mr. Popper paid only $15,000 for his seat and has just sold it for $70,000, realizing a profit on the two transactions of $55,000. Concerning the period in which Mr. Popper's membership was obtained Robert Lossing Niles, the Stock Exchange historian, wrote in 1914:

"In December, 1879, to provide funds for the erection of a new building, forty memberships were offered to competitive sealed bids, which brought on an average of about $14,000. This brought the total membership to 1,100, at which figure it has ever since remained.

"Edward Popper was the highest bidder and secured the first seat, paying $15,000 for it. The lowest seat was purchased by James Barnes, who paid $13,450 and was at that time the youngest member of the exchange. Of these forty memberships the 'Alpha' and the 'Omega,' Mr. Popper and Mr. Barnes, are with George Arents at this date the only survivors."

Mr. Popper, with his son-in-law, Sidney M. Sternbach, and Arthur Popper, conducted the brokerage firm of Popper & Sternbach. It was through this concern that the late James R. Keene caried out some of the most brillant of his speculative coups.

SENATOR SAYS TARIFF IN GERMANY'S PROP

Providence, — Senator Boies Penrose, of Pennsylvania, in an address at a dinner of the Southern New England Textile Club here Saturday discussed the tariff situation in the light of the European war, urging a return to a permanent protective tariff with an anti-dumping clause.

"We abandoned the protective policy in the election of 1912, when every other civilized country had adopted a protective system with the exception of England," re said. "Bismarck attributed the prosperity of the United States and its quick recovery after what was up to that time the greatest war in history to our protective policy.

"It is significant that in the present war Germany, cut off from the rest of the world by encircling hostile nations, seems able to feed, clothe and support her people. It is argued, with reason, that she finds herself in this position on account of her protective tariff legislation on agricultural products at the instance of the agrarian interests of Germany.

"What would have been the position of Germany today had she adopted a policy of free trade and relied on South America and the United States for foodstuffs and raw materials, as Englland has done?" It is evident, as far as Germany is concerned, that the war rapidly would be drawing to a close, because Germany would be in about the same position in the matter of food as the United States is today in the matter of dyestuffs and many of the other chemical staples entering into manufacture and agriculture.

"Let us make no mistake about the necessity of a permanent protective tariff with an anti-dumping clause, such as is contained in the tariff laws of Canada and other countries. Such a law is necessary to protect this country from the conditions which are likely to exist at the close of the war in Europe."

Deep Silence.

"Still got your automobile?"

"Yep."

"How is it I never hear you praising it any more?"

"Our cook has bought another make."

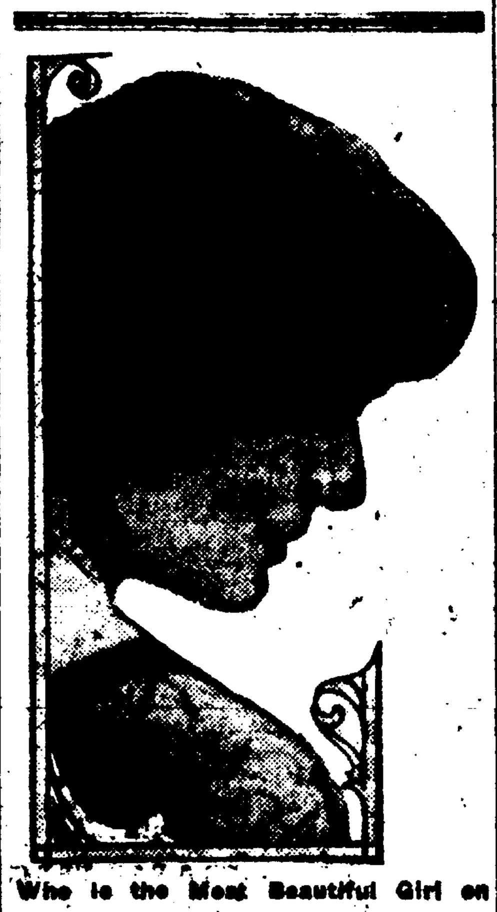
GAIL KANE



Who is the Most Beautiful Girl on The Screen?—Many Say Gail Kane.

Every now and then the old argument breaks out afresh as to who is the most beautiful girl acting in motion pictures. Rival film manufacturers through their various publicity men argue vehemently as to the merits of their respective candidates, for on a delicate question like this, bias is the publicity man's middle name. Let us whisper it gently,—some of those very ladies whose charms are so loudly extolled are not the raving beauties in real life that we are led to believe. In the case of one of them, however, "the half has not yet been told," as the Queen of Sheba said,—Miss Gail Kane, who stars in "Via Wireless," the well known play by Paul Armstrong and Winchell Smith, now being put into pictures by Pathe, is a stunning beauty whose charms need no qualification.

Miss Kane was born in Philadelphia and if there were many more at home like her, Philadelphia would soon have a vast increase in its male population. Tall, beautifully figured, splendidly gowned and with a peaches and cream complexion mere man can be reckoned upon to follow her in droves like the famous rats of the Pied Piper of Hamlin.

This is Miss Kane's first engagement with Pathe. She comes to her picture work with a splendid reputation gained from leading parts in "The Model", "Anatol", "Seven Keys to Baldpate", "The Miracle Man", and "The Hyphen", all Broadway successes.

CLIFTON CRAWFORD

Noted Broadway Star Joins Pathe Forces—To Star in "The Galloper."

Another famous Broadway favorite has cast his lot to moving pictures. Donald Mackenzie announces that he has signed Clifton Crawford to play the lead in "The Galloper", the great Broadway success of Richard Harding Davis, which is now being produced for Pathe at their Jersey City Studios.

Melville Stewart, who is now playing in the "Follies of 1915," will support Mr. Crawford. The rest of the cast is also decidedly strong.

Mr. Crawford held off a long time before consenting to sign up for the silent drama, but it was the tempting contract offered by Mr. Mackenzie which caused him to decide to enter the field.

Born of actor parents in Edinburgh, Scotland, Mr. Crawford took up the stage at an early age, and after appearing in small parts for some time, became a great favorite in the English music halls. Later he came to America and played in vaudeville, where he always appeared as a headliner. Later he appeared in such noteworthy successes as "The Peasant Girl", "The Quaker Girl", and "The Three Twins." After starring for three seasons in the last named production, he made a tour of the world, and thereby earned the sobriquet of "the man who put a belt of smiles around the world."

Mr. Mackenzie's production will be released in the early Fall, and will be in five reels.

SPAIN WANTS OUR COAL.

Turns Here For Her Supply as Result of British Embargo.

Washington.—The British embargo on coal is giving the coal operators of Spain and other countries concern as to the source of future supply. In a report received at the department of commerce Consul Dawson, at Valencia, Spain, says that, while the coal deposits in northern Spain will this year be called on for larger shipments, the low value of the product is such that an outside supply must be had. Railroads and manufactories rely on the imported coal, and of late there have been large importations of American gas coal for railroad use with good results.

The quantity required for heating purposes among the people is comparatively limited, as the climate is not severe and much charcoal is used. Gas heating is, however, becoming more general, and therefore outside coal is necessary. Before the war England had this trade entirely to herself, but now American coal is being imported in considerable quantities. Whatever gains American coal may make in the Spanish market will, in all probability be only temporary, as England takes nearly all the output of many industries in Spain.

Leading shipping and commercial interests have advocated the creation of a federal marine commission having authority in its special field equal to that which the interstate commerce commission has within its particular sphere. Such a commission would deal finally with all shipping matters and recommend from time to time changes in the nation's navigation laws. Bills providing for such a body are likely to be submitted to the next session of congress.

The pressing necessity of rehabilitating the merchant marine of the United States is already well understood by the mass of business men. The referendum that was taken some months ago by the chamber of commerce of the United States has a good deal of significance as a symptom of public feeling. While the local associations and chambers affiliated with that organization decisively rejected government purchase and construction of ships, they approved an alternative plan of a corporation backed and financed by the national government that should be empowered to encourage by loans and subventions the building and operation of merchant ships. Presumably a measure of this general nature will be urged before congress.

When the Hatteras Shoals breakwater, upon which work has been started, shall be completed there will be a sheltered refuge deep enough to accommodate the largest ocean going ships and big enough to anchor twenty ships at once. The refuge harbor is to be created inside Cape Lookout, to include one mile square. The cost of building the breakwater and of protecting the entrance channel to the harbor may reach $3,526,000. The records show that during the past ten years 131 lives have been lost and $2,500,000 worth of shipping has been destroyed off the Hatteras section of the Atlantic coast. With the opening of the Panama route and the consequent increase of shipping that will move across Hatteras the providing of a refuge for shipping below the region of the notorious marine graveyard has become imperative.

In recent years football went through a reform period and in the refining process eliminated almost entirely the brutalities which twenty years ago were supposedly absolutely essential to the development of the sport. Practically all unnecessary roughness has been taken out, and manners and methods on the field have been revolutionized. Coachers have discovered that the club which coaches its men to harry the opposing team and resort to roughness not contemplated in the rules loses both time and efficiency as compared with a club that sticks closely to business. Wise trainers tell their men to ignore all attempts of opponents to provoke them to anger and even advise players to take abuse and blows without retaliation, because no team can play football and carry on a fight at the same time.

Some clearsighted business men are saying that local business depressions reported to exist are not fairly traceable to direct results of the European war. Eating and getting clothed, buying and selling, go on here just the same. But the war condition, especially in view of uncertainty as to when and where it will stop, makes the merchant investor cautious and conservative. Sharp changes of value are to be expected. Whether by a slump or a boom is a wild gamble.

Our Shrinking Earth.

Professor Rollin D. Salisbury of the University of Chicago says a continuous process of contraction is going on inside the earth and will continue until all the chemicals within it have been transformed into the densest compounds, millions of years hence. Earthquakes are a result of the contracting process.

CARE FOR YOUR CAR

Some Facts That Will Help in the Direction of Practical Economy.

LOOK OUT FOR DRY BATTERY

Removal of Wheels Easily Accomplished by Aid of Simple Tool—Small Hand Vise is Valuable Addition to Tool Kit—Emergency Valve Lifter.

During the last few weeks automobilists utilizing dry cells for ignition or lighting have noted that the price has advanced. The standard type of dry cell formerly retailed for 25 cents. It now sells for 30 cents, and in some cities the price is 35 cents.

This increase in cost is due to the war abroad as a certain material utilized in the cell is imported. And it is not unlikely that a still further advance will be made in the price of batteries. For this reason the material should be as economical as possible of the battery. When employed for supplying current for ignition, the vibrator should be adjusted as lightly as possible so that the minimum amount of current will be drawn. If dry cells be utilized for lighting, using as small candlepower lamps as possible will effect a saving in current. Unfortunately, dry cells cannot be utilized as other automobile material for they depreciate in time, even when not used. Care should be taken in installing the cells to avoid the possibility of a short circuit. The high cost of dry cells will boom the storage battery industry, as storage batteries may be recharged at a nominal cost.

The rear wheels of some cars cannot be easily displaced without the aid of a wheel puller. The tool is simple and easily operated, provided a few precautions are observed. Displace the wheel or hub, cap, and if the puller be provided with arms or jaws, these are slipped between the spokes and clamped to the brake drum. Care must be taken that the jaws do not grip or come in contact with the flags of the axle housing. Set the point of the screw member of the puller in the center of the axle, and set up the screw. By tapping the head of the screw with a hammer, the wheel may be started, after which it is an easy matter to displace it. If the wheel puller be of the hub cap type, the set screw should be set up snugly before tapping it with the hammer.

Owners of brand-new cars should examine the brake drums after operating the car a short distance to note if the bands drag. If the drum be unduly warm it indicates a dragging lining which not only wears the material but takes a certain amount of power to overcome the resistance.

A small hand vise, one that can be clamped to the running board of the car, is a valuable addition to the tool kit. It can be employed for a number of useful purposes on the road, and does not take any room to speak of in the tool kit. The vise can be utilized for clamping a patch to a tube while the cement is drying, for holding small material to be filed, and for many other purposes. Hand vises are not expensive. A certain type marketed is very useful for assisting in replacing a bent or twisted locking ring of the quick demountable type of rim. It has jaws four inches wide with an opening of one and one-fourth inches. Sufficient to meet ordinary road requirements. In selecting a hand vise one having hardened jaws is preferable to ordinary material.

If caught upon the road with a broken valve, and it is necessary to displace it, and no lifter is handy, take a good sized file and a block of wood. By using the wood as the fulcrom and the file as the lever, the valve spring may be easily compressed. The writer employs this method when removing valves and finds that it is adaptable to practically every type and size of motors employing poppet valves. The tang of the file is placed between the coils close to the collar. A little practice will demonstrate the practicability of the method.

Shade Trees Improve Property.

It has been estimated that within the cities of New York state there are 20,000 miles of streets capable of sustaining a growth of 5,000,000 shade trees, which can be made worth $100,000,000 in increased property value.

An Original Scheme.

A tramp who drifted into Elkhart and "registered" as Pat Mahoney put over a clever deal in a crowded street in the business district, until the police got wise and locked him up for public intoxication.

Pat noticed a woman in modest attire and timid demeanor as she stood holding her baby in front of a barber shop, waiting till her husband got shaved. Pat took up his station about thirty feet away from her.

"Say, pardner," Pat would whimper, "that's the woman an' kid over there. I'm broke and I'm tryin' to get them down to her folks' place. I wanna git 'em there so's I kin git out alone an' find some work. Couldn't you help us wid a little piece o' coin?"

It is said he raked in many nickels and dimes—and spent them in a nearby saloon.—Indianapolis News.

For Young Folks

Teddy Roosevelt 3d Is a Happy Outdoor Youngster.

© 1915, by American Press Association.

As his picture indicates, Teddy Roosevelt 3d is a wholesome and robust little lad. He is a great favorite of his famous grandfather and spends much of his time at the ex-president's home at Oyster Bay, N. Y. He is the son of Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., and is the third of his family to bear the well known name. The youngest Teddy is very fond of bathing and may frequently be seen sporting in the waves at Southampton, N. Y. It was at this resort that the camera man snapped Teddy 3d. He had just emerged from a ducking in the waves, but was good natured and willingly posed for his photograph. He is too young to swim as yet, but by this time next year, if he inherits the qualities of his grandfather, he will have acquired that accomplishment.

Proverb Puzzle.

In each of the following ten sayings a word of five letters is omitted. When these ten words are rightly guessed and placed one below another in the order here given the central letters reading downward will spell the name of a famous poet, who was born in February, 1807:

1. Idle — are always meddling.
2. A bird is — by its note and a man by his talk.
3. Make yourself all — and the flies will devour you.
4. A — is a fool's argument.
5. — a fool your finger and he will take your whole hand.
6. A small leak will sink a — ship.
7. A person's — ought to be his greatest secret.
8. He that shows his ill temper — his enemy where he may hit him.
9. A rascal — rich has lost all his kindred.
10. Do as most do and — will speak ill of thee.

Answer.—Longfellow. Words—folks, known, honey, fight, offer, great, folly tells, grown, fewer.

A New Way to Play With the Sea.

The traditional way to play with the surf is to dive through the breakers. There is, however, another game that is still more riotous fun and gives the waves a fairer chance.

The bather wades out to the line where the breakers begin to curl and the water is about shoulder deep and stands facing out to sea with his eye on the coming wave. Just before the wave begins to lift to form the breaker the bather throws himself on his back and floats in that way—head toward the shore, feet toward the sea. If he has judged time and distance correctly the curling breaker will pick up the bather, feet first, turn him heels over head and leave him standing on his feet, ready for the next wave. If he misjudges the timing or the distance—well, that is the game—the wave scores.

It takes large breakers to turn a grown man, as large breakers as people often bathe in, but ordinary surf will do the trick for a boy.—Youth's Companion.

A Strange Word.

There is a word in the dictionary which you may read forward or backward without changing it one iota, either in meaning or letters. Write the word out in capitals and analyze it. The letters are now in procession. Mother is in the lead, sister Ada is conspicuous in the center, while poor papa —the father of us all—is in the rear.

Again, if children reassemble the first part of this word they will be crazy, and if their boats go over the last part they will probably be drowned. What is this mysterious word?

Answer: Madam. Words: Ada, Adam, mad, dam.—Chicago News.

At the Telephone.

Hello, daddy! Is that you?
This is little "Eyes o' Blue."
How are you today?
I am feeling very well,
Going downtown with Auntie Bell
To the matinee.

Auntie says we'll see a show
About a boy who wouldn't grow
Up to be a man.
Teddy bears and fairies, too—
I can scarcely wait, could you?
It's called "Peter Pan."

Daddy, don't forget you said
When you broke poor dolly's head,
And I didn't cry,
You would get me a new doll
With a hat and parasol;
Don't forget. Goodby!

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Itch and Its Treatment.

Itch is a contagious disease excited by an animal parasite—the acarus scabiei—and manifested by small elevations on the skin called papules, which later become like blisters and then fill with pus, and there is always intense itching. The intense itching is the first symptom, and it is associated with an eruption of small papules, vesicles (blisters) and pustules. Among those lesions may be found burrows; these are discolored, dotted, slightly elevated lines, ranging from a line to half an inch in length and produced by the penetration of the female acarus and the deposition of her eggs along the passage.

The parts most commonly affected are the hands between the fingers, the wrists, the armpits, beneath the breasts and on the inner surface of the thighs. The face and scalp are never involved. The condition is curable. The treatment consists at first in a thorough bath, after which the whole body should be anointed twice daily for three or four days with the remedy. At the end of this time the bath should be repeated and the bed linen and underclothing should be changed. The infected clothing should be sterilized by boiling for a half hour. Sulphur ointment is the best remedy for this disease. The ointment should be composed of sublimated sulphur, one dram; balsam of Peru, one-half dram, and lard, one ounce. The mixture must be prepared by a druggist.

INDIAN SUMMER.

The Term May Have Had Its Origin In the Far East.

The origin of the term "Indian summer," like that of the word "blizzard," has been the subject of much research. It has been traced back only as far as the latter part of the eighteenth century, and it did not become common until after the first decade of the nineteenth.

Many explanations of the name have been offered, all of which assume that the term "Indian" used in this connection refers to the American Indians.

A recent note in the Monthly Weather Review calls attention to a totally different use of this term, in which the reference is not to the American Indians, but to East India.

Under the British board of trade regulations one of the load lines marked on ships bears the initials "I. S.," this being the maximum depth to which vessels can be loaded for voyages during the "Indian summer"—i. e., the fine season in the Indian seas.

How long has the term "Indian summer" been used in this sense? It is not recorded in any dictionary nor apparently in any work on meteorology. Is it possible that our autumnal Indian summer was so named by sailors or travelers who saw in it a resemblance to the fine weather attending the northeast monsoon in India?

Printer's Blunder Misled Author.

A recent novel supplied a word perplexing to the lexicographer. The story was laid in the twelfth century, and in a description of a monastery there was frequent mention of a "centralone," which readers presumed to be an unfamiliar feature of Norman architecture. It was eventually discovered that the author, in "reading up" his subject, had been misled by a description of certain towers, of which the "central one" was specified. The printer had omitted the space between the two words, and the novelist had rushed to conclusions unauthorized by either history or art.—London Observer.

Dollar Patriotism Derided.

In an editorial defense of the seamen's law the Los Angeles Tribune says:

"Ever since the enactment of the La Follette seamen's law a portion of the press has been shrieking that the statute will destroy our merchant marine and drive our flag from the seas. If that flag can be shown in alien waters only at the cost of the hideous injustices that were pepetuated upon seamen under its folds—if our merchant marine can be maintained only through national connivance with the heartless treatment accorded the sailors—then even the dire results the pessimists predict were preferably endured."

Steel Workers Get Raise.

A voluntary increase in wages which will average about 10 per cent has been granted the 17,000 employees of the Bethlehem Steel company. The increase went into effect Aug. 1. The monthly payroll of the local company is now about a million and a quarter. It is believed that the Bethlehem Steel corporation will take similar action with its subsidiary plants, the Union Iron works, San Francisco; Fore River shipyards, Quincy, Mass.; Harlan & Hollingsworth, Wilmington, Del., etc. The increase is expected to quiet whatever unrest among the workmen there may have been and also to attract skilled mechanics, some 2,000 more being needed.

Easy & Practical Home Dress Making Lessons

Prepared Especially For This Newspaper by Pictorial Review

FOR THE YOUNG GIRL'S WARDROBE.

A youthful semi-princess costume which is given a military touch by the braid trimming. It is in blue duvetyn.

It is the touch of braid that gives a military effect to many of the new frocks, and the design of the gown matters little from the standpoint of appropriateness. Princess frocks as well as semi-tailored effects are braid-trimmed, as may be noted from the accompanying model in blue duvetyn. Blue or black braid may be used, and the trimming outlines the pockets quaintly set into the skirt, as well as collar, cuffs and belt. In average size the frock requires 2¾ yards 54-inch material, with ⅜ yard of contrasting silk for the belt, collar and cuffs.

By following directions carefully it will be an easy matter to put the dress together. It is well to begin with the waist, the under-arm and shoulder seams of which are first closed, as notched. Next, turn the hem in front at notches. Gather lower edge of front and back between double "TT" perforations. Center-front indicated by large "O" perforations. Sew stay to lower edge, center-backs even, small "o" perforation at under-arm seam, and bring front edge to center-front.

Now, pleat the sleeve, bringing "T" to corresponding small "o" perforations. Close seam as notched. Close seams of cuffs as notched and face. Sew lower cuff to long sleeve, notches and seams even; sew upper cuff to short sleeve, seams even. Sew sleeve in armhole as notched, small "o" perforation at shoulder seam, easing in any fulness.

Next, take the skirt, on which there is a crossline of small "o" perforations. Slash the front gore on this line and insert a pocket. Trim along line of double "oo" perforations, and along the edge of the extension as illustrated on the reverse side of envelope. Join gores as notched, leaving the left side edges free above large "OO" perforation in front gore for a placket. Close center-back seam. Sew to lower edge of waist over stay, center-fronts and center-backs even. Tack the upper edge of extension to position on waist front, large "O" perforations even.

Lap the front section of the belt on the back, matching small and large "O" perforations and finish with buttons and braid.

CHUTNEY.—Peel and chop six tomatoes and six tart apples. Mince one dozen dried figs and mix with other fruit. Add one clove, grated garlic, small grated onion, scant teaspoonful of ground ginger and cayenne pepper, one tablespoonful of salt, one-quarter pound of brown sugar and one pint of vinegar. Boil for half an hour. When cold bottle and seal.

Plum Ketchup. — Four quarts of plums, one pound of sugar, one-half teaspoonful each of cloves, allspice and pepper and one teaspoonful of cinnamon. Add one quart of water to plums until fruit is tender; then press through a coarse sieve and return to kettle. Add the other ingredients and cook until thick, as desired. Bottle while hot.

Pickled Cauliflower.—Two cauliflowers, cut up; one pint small onions, three medium sized red peppers. Dissolve half a pint of salt in water enough to cover the vegetables and let stand overnight. Drain in the morning. Heat two quarts of vinegar with four tablespoonfuls of mustard until it boils. Add the vegetables and boil for about fifteen minutes or until a fork can be stuck through the cauliflower.

Green Grape Chutney.—Mix two quarts of seeded grapes, two quarts of pared and chopped apples, two cupfuls of raisins, one pint of sugar, one cupful of lemon juice, one cupful of vinegar, tablespoonful of salt, teaspoonful paprika and an ounce each of mustard and ginger. Let stand overnight in an earthenware dish. Cook slowly five hours in double boiler and bottle while hot. This is delicious with game or cold meat of any kind.

Hot Spice.—This is excellent to add to sauces and gravies. Take three drams each of ground ginger, black pepper, cinnamon, seven cloves, a half ounce of mace, a quarter ounce of cayenne pepper, one ounce of grated nutmeg and one and a half ounces of white pepper. Pound the ingredients and mix them thoroughly together, and when blended put them into a wide mouthed, clean, dry bottle and cork it tightly.

CORN IN MANY GUISES.

CORN on the cob is the best kind of corn unless you find it unpleasant to eat. Surely the flavor of corn on the cob cannot be equaled by the flavor of corn prepared in any other way. But corn on the cob becomes monotonous just as any other delicacy constantly served in the same way does. Therefore it is a wise cook who has at her fingers' tips some other interesting methods of sending corn to the table.

There are methods of heating up cold corn, and, indeed, almost any made corn dish is as good made of cold corn not more than a day old. Succotash, to be at its best, should always be made of raw corn, although a good substitute can be made from boiled corn cut from the cobs, mixed with cooked lima beans and heated with a little milk or cream, butter, pepper and salt.

An easily prepared dainty made of leftover corn is corn fritters. Cut the corn from the cob. Never cut clear to the cob, but cut off part of each kernel. Then with the back of a silver knife rub the cob lengthwise to extract the rest of the kernels. To two cupfuls of corn add a cupful of milk, pepper and salt to taste, a tablespoonful and a half of flour and two beaten eggs. Fry brown, dropping the batter from a tablespoon. A delicious way to serve corn fritters for luncheon is to cook bacon until it is crisp in a big frying pan, then remove it to a hot platter and cook the fritters in the hot bacon fat.

Corn soup is another dish to make of leftover corn. Cut the kernels from the cobs and run them through a vegetable cutter two or three times. Then press through a vegetable press and then simmer gently with a slice of onion, a sprig of parsley and a pint of water—for two cupfuls of corn—for twenty or thirty minutes. Then add two cupfuls of milk and thicken with two tablespoonfuls of butter. Season with salt and pepper to taste. This soup should be served very hot.

For corn pudding cut corn enough to measure three cupfuls and mix it with four well beaten eggs, a teaspoonful of salt, a tablespoonful of sugar and a tablespoonful of flour rubbed smooth, with a tablespoonful of butter. Then add two cupfuls of milk and bake. The eggs can be beaten separately and the whites added last if desired, and the sugar may be omitted to taste.

Care of the Baby In Summer

Out of Door Life.

[Prepared by the children's bureau, United States department of labor.]

Keep the baby out of doors. It is almost as important to feed the lungs on fresh air as it is to feed the stomach on fresh milk. Stale air is almost as harmful as stale food, and there is far less excuse for it. Fresh air and sunshine at all times of the year are essential to the baby's health and growth, but mothers too often fail to realize this fact. Babies are frequently kept on a starvation allowance of these two things, sometimes from unhappy necessity, when the home is in a crowded, unventilated apartment in a large city. When this is the case the mother must do her best for the baby by taking him as often as possible to the parks, recreation piers, playgrounds and other public open places provided for this purpose by the city. Outings for mothers and babies to the country or seashore are often given by churches and other organizations during the hot summer months in large cities. Many an infant's life has been saved by even a brief stay in the country, but where this is not feasible even brief changes of air such as are secured in the parks are of great benefit to a baby, as well as to the mother.

In the smaller cities and towns and in the country there can be little excuse for depriving a baby of outdoor life and a constant supply of fresh air. In fact, in suitable weather the baby may practically live out of doors. In the hottest weather, when it is cooler in doors than out, the baby should be kept in until the heat is over, but at night and in the morning he may be out for several hours. A screened porch on the shady side of the house, where he may play and sleep, will afford the baby many hours of outdoor life. A sick baby especially needs fresh air, and when possible the crib should be set up on the porch, provided the baby can be protected from the hot sun and from flies and mosquitoes.

Experience has shown that sick babies stand a much better chance of life and recover much more rapidly if kept out of doors. Common sense should guide the mother in this as in all matters where the baby is concerned, and she will realize that if a high wind is blowing dust about or a sudden storm comes up and the temperature drops many degrees in a few moments the baby should be taken in or protected from a chill by suitable clothing and wraps.

The young baby may be taken out when he is two weeks old for half an hour if the weather is warm and pleasant, gradually lengthening the time he stays out. Remember that the baby's eyes are very sensitive and must always be carefully shielded, not only from the sun, but also from direct light. Babies are often wheeled about in their carriages staring directly up into the sky. Try it yourself for a few moments and you will realize the cruelty to the baby, who may not even be able to relieve this strain on the eyes by turning his head to one side.

When the baby is sent out with a nurse she should be instructed on this point and also how long she is to keep the baby out and be warned of the danger of allowing strangers to play with him or kiss him.

The carriage outing should not be regarded as giving the baby enough fresh air for the day. In addition to this he should live on the porch in suitable weather. If it is necessary to bring him in the windows and doors should be opened, screening them as suggested in a previous article.

The baby should sleep at night in a well ventilated bedroom in a bed by himself and if possible in a room by himself. Keep the doors and windows open. Do not be afraid of the old superstition of the "night air."

The fear of the night air likely came from the fact that it used to be thought that malarial poisons arose in the night before it was known that this disease is only carried about by mosquitoes, which fly chiefly after nightfall.

In malarial regions screens are indispensable. If the house is provided with a screened sleeping porch there is no reason why the baby should not sleep out at night after he is three months old, provided, of course, he is carefully protected. Babies thus taught from the beginning of life to enjoy the open air will be far less sensitive than otherwise and much less likely to suffer from colds and similar troubles as they grow older.

CIVIL WAR DISK RETURNED.

Sent to Widow of Soldier Killed at Petersburg.

Harrisburg, Pa.—An identification disk worn by Eli Johnston Ague, a Pennsylvania soldier killed in one of the battles before Petersburg, Va., in the civil war, has been sent to the widow of the soldier, Mrs. Matilde Ague of Oil City, by Adjutant General Thomas J. Stewart after she had been searched for for months.

Officials of the war department at Washington and of the adjutant general's department here, members of regimental associations, officers of Grand Army posts, individuals and newspapers participated in the effort to find the widow.

The disk was dug up on the battlefield of Cedar mountain, Virginia, by J. R. Leman, who took it to Raleigh T. Green, editor of the Culpepper Exponent. It bore a device frequently seen on such articles in the civil war and the name of Ague, stating that he was a member of Company B, Tenth Pennsylvania Reserves.

Is It Worth While?

Is it worth while that we jostle a brother
Bearing his load on the rough road of life?
Is it worth while that we jeer at each other
In blackness of heart—that we war to the knife?
God pity us in our pitiful strife.

God pity us all as we jostle each other;
God pardon us all for the triumphs we feel
When a fellow goes down; poor heart-broken brother,
Pierced to the heart, words are keener than steel,
And mightier far for woe or for weal.

Were it not well in this brief little journey,
On over the isthmus, down into the tide,
That we give him a fish instead of a serpent
Ere folding the hands to be and abide
For ever and aye in dust at his side.

Look at the roses saluting each other;
Look at the herds all at peace on the plain,
Man, and man only, makes war on his brother,
And dotes in his heart on his peril and pain—
Shamed by the brutes that go down on the plain.

AUBURN PROVES TO BE TOO HEAVY

Second Game Won by Prison City, Score 12-0, All Made in First Quarter.

On the athletic field Saturday afternoon the H. S. team was defeated in their second game this season. The weather conditions were perfect but the field was soggy as a result of Thursday's rain. The teams lined up for the first kick-off at 3. Auburn won the toss and chose the receive. Auburn's heavy and powerful line plowed through the F. H. S. light line almost at will and a touchdown soon resulted. The try at goal was a ground. On the second kick-off Fulton received the ball but failed to gain through the line or around the ends. Auburn got the ball on a punt and, by a series of bucks, end runs, and pretty forward passes made the second touchdown. The puntout failed leaving the score 12-0. With the touchdown the time was up and the quarter was ended.

In the first quarter it was evident that the center of the Fulton line was too weak to withstand the onslaught of the Auburn line. M. Frawley, the left guard, played a plucky game but on account of his lack of weight was placed on the side lines for the rest of the game. Kraus was shifted to the guard position and Pooler was placed at tackle. This made the Fulton line considerably heavier and capable of holding better the Auburn team.

In the second quarter the local rooters had a momentary thrill when Calkins tried a place kick from the 28 yard line. The play was unnecessarily hurried and no goal resulted. Auburn nearly scored several times but the home team held so well that the attempts were unsuccessful. Both teams made numerous forward passes but Auburn's were longer and more cleverly executed. Auburn used a series of lateral and backward passes which proved baffling to the local boys. The play went up and down the field continually as a result of punts, intercepted passes, fumbles, and occasional gain by both teams. Auburn continued to use smashing tactics while Fulton was forced to depend almost entirely on open play. The quarter closed with the score unchanged.

In the second half the game was very evenly played. Fulton had discovered a weak spot through the Auburn tackles and, with the exceptions of a few line drives the play was through tackle or else the open game was used. Auburn, finding that their gains were short through the line attempted the open work also but with a few brilliant exceptions the Fulton open game was better. During the third quarter no score was made.

The fourth quarter was a repetition of the former except that Fulton failed to make good on two chances to score. Another place kick was tried with no better results than the first. A long and well executed forward pass brought the ball to the Auburn one yard line. But the Fulton team seemed unable to get further. In their anxiety to make a score they made two costly fumbles and lost the ball on downs. Before they had another chance the game was finished. The line-ups were as follows:

Auburn		Fulton
Woods	Left end	Barnes
Heick	Left guard	M. Frawley Kraus
Whitney	Center	Richardson
Peterson	Right Guard	Gillespie
Bolenius	Right Tackle	Holly
Barney	Right End	La Point
P. Lane Capt.	Right Halfback	Calkins
Schmitz	Left Halfback	Johnson
Smith	Fullback	E. Frawley, Capt.
Nolin	Quarterback	D. O'Brien

Referee G. Ward, Head linesman, E. M. Pullen.

Penalties were frequent during the game, usually for off-sides. In this Auburn was the chief offender. Once during the game Fulton was penalized 15 yards for the failure of the spectators, in particular one of the substitutes, to keep outside the boundaries of the field.

The game was very poorly attended, there being only about 40 paid admissions. It would seem as if the school pupils should take enough interest in athletics to attend the games and give their financial support to the team representing the school. It is hoped that the next game will be more largely attended by both pupils and outsiders.

JOSEF STRANSKY AS WAGNERIAN CONDUCTOR

Richard Wagner, the great German composer-musician, has had few interpreters who have done justice to the majestic depth of his music. But in Josef Stransky, the conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, which plays at the Richardson, Oswego, on Thursday, November 4, it has a man of world-wide recognition as a Wagnerian exponent, It was at the Wagner Festspiele in the New Royal Opera at Berlin,which he directed in 1910, that Stransky earned his reputation as a Wagerian conductor.

During that festival, which lasted eight weeks, he conducted the "Ring Der Nibelungen," five times (twenty performances) "Tristram and Isolde," seven times, "Die Meistersinger," eight times, "Lohengrin," five times and "Tannhaeuser," six times.

KIRK N. SWEET FILES PAPERS FOR NEW TRIAL

Justice Irving Hubbs held a Special Term of Supreme Court in Oswego Saturday morning, but there was little business of importance.

One case of local interest came up—that of Kirk N. Sweet of Phoenix, who is made defendant by Frank Massaro of this city . Mr. Sweet made a motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, alleging that he has found several eye-witnesed to the accident when his car was backed across the road in Phoenix, colliding with a car driven by Mr. Massaro. Mr. Sweet claims to have discovered this evidence since the case was tried at last term, when the plaintiff was awarded $150 and costs.

An order was signed confirming the referee's report in an action in partition brought by Sandford Belnap against John Belnap et al. and the Court agreed to name a referee, if one could not be agreed upon, to hear an action to ascertain damages in a case brought by the Oneida Community Company against the Oneida Game Trap Company. Plaintiffs recently obtained an injunction against the defendant against using a name similar to theirs.

SYRACUSE "NEAT DRESSER" IS WELL KNOWN HERE

Fultonians who are aware of the advertising "stunt" promoted last week by Syracuse merchants in the form of a "dress up week" publicity campaign may be interested to know that the role of Mr. Neat Dresser was enacted by Samuel Rakov, a former resident of this city. Mr. Neat Dresser is an unknown individual attired in the lastest fashion, who if addressed with certain words will present a $5 bill to the person "capturing" him.

Friday Miss Louise Eobald, of 102 Ballard ave., Syracuse, "captured" Mr. Syracuse Neat Dresser and won the $5 reward while he did pirouette among the fair damsels at Danceland.

Mr. Rakov is connected with a Syracuse clothing store and has many friends here. He at one time operated the Hippodrome theatre in Oneida st..

HIGH SCHOOL BOY IS INJURED; DROPPED 15 FT.

Nelson James, residing at 312 Utica st., a student in the high school, fell from a loaded wagon on his grandfather's farm, a distance of fifteen feet, and received what may prove to be a fractured wrist. An X-Ray examination of the injured arm will have to be made to determine whether the bones are broken.

The farm is located on the West river road and the boy was sitting on top of a load of buckwheat when suddenly the load slid from the wagon and Nelson was precipitated to the ground. The injury is painful and may keep the young man from school for several days.

Ex-Governor Fort Predicts Women Will Win New Jersey by More Than 40,000—The First Test Today—General Hayes Votes For Suffrage Amendment

New Jersey is voting on the woman suffrage amendment today after one of the greatest fights in the state's history. The women assert the amendment will win by 25,000 and those opposed say it will lose by 50,000.

President Wilson will make the trip from the capital to Princeton and vote for the amendment.

William Jennings Bryan, in a speech to German-American Committee at Terrace Garden, last night, asked if women are fit to be wives and mothers why not fit for the ballot?

One hundred dollars will be paid to the person obtaining evidence in New Jersey today of repeating at the election of of false registration. George M. La Monte, Banking Commissioner of New Jersey and a leader in the Men's League for Women Suffrage, yesterday offered this reward. It is especially open, he explained to conscientious election officials, and is offered by him in the name of the campaign committee of one hundred men to protect the good name of New Jersey in today's election.

General Edwin Louis Hayes, a cousin of Rutherford B. Hayes, and who is ninety seven years old, said today that he intends going to the polls tomorrow and casting his vote in favor of equal suffrage. He said he believed that women should have the same privileges as the men and he will give them what aid he can by his vote.

General Hayes, whos erved through the civil war, is said to be the oldest living officer who saw service in that conflict.

With each confident of victory, the special election to decide whether the women of New Jersey will get the right to vote will be decided today. The spectacular campaign of the women workers rose to its highest pitch last night. In Newark suffrage workers [illegible] without cessation from six o'clock in the morning. D[illegible] [illegible] last until the opening of the polls.

All day the yellow banners of the Woman Suffrage Association, and the green, white and purple of the Women's Political Union fluttered from thousands of automobiles from Cape May to the New York State line. There were few communities in the State where the voices of the suffrage orators were not heard in a final appeal.

"I can make no numerical predictions, but in a square fight, we shall win. We have nothing to fear except crooked politics."

This was the final word from Mrs. Mina C. Van Winkle, president of the Women's Political Union of New Jersey.

"The suffrage amendment will be adopted by a mapority of between 40,000 and 50,000."

Thus, last night, did former Governor Fort predict the result of today's balloting.

Germany Believes Balkan Situation Lightens Conditions

Rotterdam.—"All Germany believes that complications in the Balkans have brought about an entirely new phase of the war. They are looking anxiously to the Balkans as the key to the situation. They have tried to cut their way out both east and west and have failed. The way through Serbia is the last way out. They have great hopes of a far-reaching success."

These words were used in an interview today by a gentleman who has exceptional opportunities of knowing the diplomatic activities of Germany and also her military plans.

Both militarists and diplomatists think they see in its successful prosecution long vistas of consequences that willl put a period to English world domination orb ring England clamoring for peace terms.

"Russia's success caused an elaboration of the Serbian campaign Russia's ultimatum to Bulgaria forced then tos tart itb efore they were really ready. They had tot start before the allies could get there. "How can we," they asked, "get at England?" The reply was the Levant and Egypt offer the only road; we must take it immediately.

"They think they can strangle England by relieving the Turks and setting them free to cut the Suez Canal and seize big tracts of land in the Orient. The East offers them new chances of economic development to take the place of Belgium, which no serious German ever hopes to retain.

They realize the inadvisability of plans for annexation. They have no desire to create in the North another Alsace problem.

"The war madness has gone. The people desire a permanent peace and hope the Balkan struggle will give it to them. Some believe the mere display of power and determination to undertake this new campaign alone will have a tremendous effect on England and make her more amenable to epace proposals.

FRANCO-BRITISH THREATEN ROUTE TO TURKS CAPITAL

London.—The landing of an allied contingent at Enos, recently transferred from Turkish to Bulgarian rule, and the occupation of Strumitza by Anglo-French troops have lifted a great part of the load of passimism with which London has been weighted the llast fornight. While there were rumors of a surprise to come from the Aegean, the seizure of Enos was not anticipated and was taken as another indication that the Allies will conduct a particularly active offensive in the entire Balkan theatre.

Enos, near the mouth of the Maritza River, which until the recent cession of territory to Bulgaria marked the Turco-Bulgarian boundary line, is not a good landing place, but the allied fleet which has been blockading the coast apparently made conditions ashore so favorable that the disembarkation from transports was a comparatively easy matter. The port is only fifteen miles across a small bay from Dedeaghatch, thep rincipal Bulgarian port, which possesses an excellent harbor. Dedeaghatch is heavily fortified and its waters are well mined, but its defences against a land attack are incomplete and the occupation of Enos affords an opportunity for a flank attack against it. Again, an allied force at Enos is in a position to advance up the railway from Dedeaghatch to Adrianople and cut off Constantinople from communication with Sofia.

Field Marshal von Mackensen's army is meeting with greater resistance than was expected, and, although it is probable the Serbian's eventually must fall back on stronger strategic positions in the north, the fact that the Allies are bringing heavy forces against the Bulgarians, and so placing them that the Bulgarians will be compelled to divide their armies, gives hope here that the Germans may be balked in their latest attempt to reach the sea and bring assistance to the Turks.

There has been plenty of heavy fighting on both the eastern and western fronts, but in neither case has either side attempted a general offensive. The Germans still are making a great effort between Riga and Dvinsk, and have met with some minor successes, but thence to the Roumanian border, wherever there has been any fighting, it is the Russians who are attacking, and they, too, say they have made gains.

The British submarine blockade in the Baltic has entirely cut off the railway ferry route established within recent years between route over Copenhagen involved both rail and ferry service and while still in use does not lend itself to heavy traffic because of the necessity of transhipments.

BRITISH ARMY LOST 96,899 MEN TAKING 20 MILES

Official reports show that the allies commanded by Sir Ian Hamilton suffered enormous losses in the Dardnelles. In the land operations the official British casualties up to October were 96,899, of which number 18,957 were killed. Of these the Australian casualties were 29,121.

No official list of French casualties have been issued, but military experts say they are not far below the British.

Six French and British battleships and other warships have been sunk by mines, submarine and torpedo boats with a loss of 2,500 lives.

Aside from inflicting heavy losses on the Turks, the only concrete results achieved by these sacrifices is the occupation by allied troops of approximately twenty square miles of territory on the Gallipoli peninsula.

MRS. REDHEAD DIED TODAY

One of Fulton's Foremost Women Died at Home of Her Daughter in Syracuse This Morning.

Mrs. Sarah Redhead, wife of Mr. E. R. Redhead, died this morning at 3 o'clock at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Frederick Revels in Syracuse.

Mrs. Redhead's maiden name was Miss Sarah A. Petty and she was the daughter of Mr. Isreal Petty of Port Byron. She became the wife of Mr. Redhead, May 25, 1877. Mrs. Redhead with her husband had lived in Fulton for the past thirty two years.

Last Friday Mrs. Redhead went to Syracuse at the bidding of Mrs. Revels, who made festive the occasion in honor of Mrs. Redhead's 65th birthday. It was shortly after that her indisposition was noted and medical attention given her. Yesterday her condition seemed grave and Mr. Redhead was summoned by telephone. He immediately left the city and reached his wife's side at 6 o'clock yesterday evening.

When the message reached Fulton this morning regarding Mrs. Redhead there was heard everywhere the kindest expression of one who lived a lovely life. As a neighbor her deeds in time of trouble were accompanied with rare sympathy, and as a friend her worth was attested by the host of useful memories she leaves.

Mrs. Redhead was a member of the State Street Methodist church. For years, together with her husband, she was one of its most unselfed workers. In literary circles Mrs. Redhead was one of the authorities in this section. It was due to her efforts that the Current Events club was formed in this city. Mrs. Redhead was also one of the founders of the Shakespeare club.

The funeral will be held from the State Street Methodist church on Thursday afternoon at 3 o'clock. The Rev. H. D. Holmes, assisted by Dr. Hamilton of the University avenue church of Syracuse, and Dr. Frank Torry of Brooklyn, will officiated.

TO PREVENT DUMPING

When we measure the amount of Tariff duty necessary to Protect the American manufacturer from ruinous competition with manufacturers abroad, we must take into consideration that the foreign manufacturer is ready at every opportunity to "dump" his surplus product on the American market at less than cost of production. Permitting the foreign manufacturer to unload his surplus or inferior product in America, necessarily means that the product of American labor in the same line of industry must be sold in competition therewith or the market be given over to the foreign producer.

These are facts within the observation of every business man, and should not be overlooked in the study of the tariff question.—Bay City (Mich.) National Farmer.

WORKS BOTH WAYS

In accordance with annual custom on the approach of Thanksgiving Day a disease which is destructive to turkeys has been announced. Although such timely malady, in one form or another, appears to be an economic necessity, from the standpoint of the producer and dealer, there is rarely a shortage of healthy birds on the eve of the holiday, although the alleged epidemics are made to bear the onus of high prices. This year a disease called the blackhead is expected to account for a speculative scarcity of Thanksgiving birds, and reports of its ravages are now becoming current. There is danger of over-exploiting this new fangled turkey disease, as the impression may come to prevail that birds affected by the disease may be sent to market. For that reason the announcement of this occasion for high prices may induce some careful housekeepers to content themselves with the more plebian, but always robust and healthy, goose or duck.—Rochester Express.

WILL OPPOSE WILSON

The nation may yet be electrified by seeing William Jennings Bryan run for president on a platform of disarmament, national prohibition, woman suffrage, and independence for the Filipinos. He has already given out an interview announcing his opposition to the President's program for increasing the army and navy, and if he is willing to see the United States stand before the world totally unprepared to defend its borders against nations which have shown that they respect nothing but the strong arm, he would naturally be capable of seeing the Philippines thrown into the vortex of clashing ambitions in the Far East.

Mr. Byran, in his interview, "sees no reason why the appropriations for the army and navy should be greater than last year," thereby demonstrating that he has kept his eyes tightly closed to the obvious lessons of the conflict in Europe. A man who can accomplish that feat is, of course, perfectly capable of charging that the "manufacturers of munitions are trying to frighten money out of the pockets of the people." This charge, besides implying that the President of the United States has been stampeded by men whose motives ought to be perfectly transparent, also conveniently ignores the point that the "manufacturers of munitions" are running their plants to capacity now, with all the orders in sight that they can fill.

Not satisfied with veiled attacks on the intelligence of the President, the ex-Secretary of State proceeds to threaten members of Congress who dare to vote for any increase in military or naval appropriations. "All congressmen," he says, "who vote upon the question will have to come before the voters if they continue in public life." Naturally, it has not occurred to him that a patriotie and wide-awake congressman would prefer to incur his displeasure rather than assume an attitude of opposition to precautions on which the safety of the nation might depend in a crisis. The open hostility of Mr. Bryan to the President's program is going to complicate matters, for he is the Moses of the radical Democratic group in Congress, but the people are aroused to the importance of strengthening our defenses, and it may be possible to secure the needed appropriations in spite of Mr. Bryan's disapproval.—Rochester Chronicle-Democrat.

A NEW DEPARTURE

The new departure in advertising copy used recently by local business men in the Evening Times is receiving just and favorable comment. And this brings to mind the number of times we accuse the public of being unappreciative, when all the time the public is simply waiting for us to get out of the deep rut we have worn for ourselves that they may salute us.

When we fail to hear the echo of an applause, even tho it be faint, it is not wise to lay the blame on the public. There's possibly something satisfying in blaming one's town for a lack of laurels on one's hat rack, and yet, why hoodwink that self. The world is waiting patiently, and so is ever community, by-the-way, for some one to do something. Everyone is interested in seeing the "same old thing" done in a new way.

That's what is referred to in the new departure in advertising used recently in the Evening Times. These advertisers chatted with their prospective customers and forgot all about mentioning how much it would cost to drop in. One business man, a butcher, actually used four verses of right smart poetry on "Let's Get Acquainted." He wanted the advertisement "to look plain and easy to read," these were his only instructions. Another, a druggist, chatted in a friendly way to the public. And still another, unsigned, said "Go to Church Sunday; It Will Increase Your Efficiency." This last mentioned advertisement, it can be imagined, gave the individual the same feeling of pleasure as it does when one has the opportunity to smuggle, unknown, a pair of new shoes to two bare, cold, little feet.

And so, again, in little Jinny's own words, "If yoh had putten more in yoh would have taken more out."

Unless one is a qualified "Thomas" he can readily see why a fraction, at least, of the public made pleasing comment on the progressive advertising. We sold some extra copies to pleased patrons.

Does it make any difference how we introduce ourselves?

PUBLIC OWNERSHIP

Let us make one form of socialism perfectly plain, and, to do this, suppose we assume that our government owns a number of industries, but not all of them—just a few. In this position, the government would be right where the individual now is. It would mean that men would be thrown out of employment in slack times by the government. Certainly. Why not? And here we are, right back where we started.

About the only way we can make this scheme of public ownership go is tog ive theg overnment all of the industries of this country, and let all ambitious, successful men sink their individuality in politics, and get their jobs through political pull or preference, and not on account of ability, experience or energy.

But this idea is too absurd to discuss. When the individual loses his identity, his intimately personal interest, managements and men will ebb and flow with the change of political tide.

If it takes long hours and the best business brains of thisc ountry to conduct a light and power enterprise in your city successfully, what would happen if this important industry should be turned over to the politicians to run?—Silent Partner.

SPIRITUALIST SAYS TAX CERTAIN CHURCH PROPERTY

Rochester.—Dr. G. B. Warne, president of the National Spiritualists' Association, in a lecture here attacked the amendment which would exempt all church property from taxation. He declared that church property not used for religious worship which returned dividends on the investment should be taxed.

Dr. Warne made a forceful plea for freedom of speech, of the press and of religious worship. He argued that this now obtains, but is threatened by capitalistic churches. He thrilled his audiences with oratory about patriotism and the meaning of the flag. He declared he was a spiritualist, but first and foremost an American.

"The spiritualism we follow," he said, "is the kind which makes every man a better man and every woman a nobler woman. It is that spiritualism which believes in infinite intelligence, that says with Emerson that there is a soul at the center of the universe and because of It we live."

FUTURE TENSE

By I. E. HYDE

The table is spread and, Mary—
"John, will you say grace?
Now help the children to their meat
This salad needs more mace
I wish, John, when you're cooking
You'd get things seasoned right.
This lecturing makes me hungry
I work with main and might.

I told the women at the club
To cast their votes for Jones,
You know he is a handsome man,
Much better dressed than Bones,
And he can dance—Ah, gracious me!
He makes one float on air
He promised me if we won out
We'd make an ideal pair.

And do you know old Mrs. Smith
Has joined the suffrage ranks,
When once she said she'd rather die
Than be mixed up with cranks.
Oh, yes, they'll all come to their milk
Why! William, what's the trouble?
For pity sake! Jane, stop your noise,
This home is like a bubble.

Home a bubble?—No, the bubble is you—
Halt, act your part like a woman true.
You brought dear children to earth and life,
And your husband wants you as mother and wife.
No wonder the courts of lax divorce thrive
With women at polls, the home is a hive
No stockings are mended, no buttons sewn on
The women are voting—I pity poor John.

Our Washington Letter

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE

Washington.—Because the American people are entitled to know the condition of the business of their government, many newspapers have been publishing once a week, or oftener, a statement of the condition of the federal treasury, showing the net balance in the general fund as compared with the balance two years earlier, when Republican revenue laws and appropriations were in effect. Needless to say, the showing was not at all creditable to the present Democratic administration. Perhaps the repeated publication of the daily diminishing balance got on the nerves of Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo, son-in law to the President andsupposed exponent of President Wilson's "pitiless publicity". At any rate, Secretary McAdoo made a change in the form of the daily treasury statement, effective October 1, so that hereafter it will be impossible to compare Democratic with Republican treasury conditions. On the last day of September, 1915, the net balance in the general fund was $40,898,894. On the corresponding date two years ago, the balance was $123,416,613. Since this administration could not otherwise get away from the showing made in its daily statement, Secretary McAdoo changed the method of keeping accounts so that a balance of less than $41,000,000 on September 30, leaped to the gratifying sum of $128,063,545 on October 1. Undoubtedly it is pleasing to Secretary McAdoo and to the President to read these figures in the daily statement but far more pleasing must be the thought that hereafter Republican newspapers will not be able to print comparisons between Democratic and Republican treasury balances. Great is the art of publicity.

"The Truth," as the Chicago "Herald" sees it, "is that 'war orders,' while they have come in mighty handy to bridge over the gaps of a world-wide readjustment, are but a passing factor in American progress. They loom large for the day, and partisan clamor fastens upon them. But for the simple reason that war cannot endure nearly so long as peace—for the reason that peace and not war is the normal state of civilized men—peace orders are a great deal more important in the ultimate reckoning." To this truth may we add another? While peace prevailed in Europe and the Underwood tariff ruled in the United States, all our "peace orders" were sent over there. When peace comes again, this will be the practice once more—if the Underwood tariff is still in force.

LICENSE TO WED AND ONE TO CARRY A GUN

Lyons.—A young Italian couple, appeared before Town Clerk Haessig yesterday morning and secured a marriage license, after which the expectant groom went to Justice McClelland's office and asked for a license to carry a revolver.

Upon being questioned by the justice, the young man stated that he was about to get married and that his fiancee's father has threatened to shoot him if he married his daughter. He said the father objected to him because he was born in America; that he wanted the girl to marry a man born in Italy and one whom he had already selected for her.

The justice gave the young man some good advice, but refused to grant the license to carry a gun.

Plan Campaign in Interest of Jews in Stricken Europe

Preparations are under way in Rochester for a campaign to be opened by the American Jewish Committee during the week of November 1st, which is expected to lead to equal political rights for Jews all over the world. The campaign will be opened at a congress which will convene in Washington. Decision to call the congress was made at a meeting of the American Jewish Committee, made up of men living in all parts of the United States.

The committees' action was taken in response to agitation which has been going on in this country since the beginning of the war and the publication of the first news of atrocities committed against Jews in the warring countries.

Among questions expected to come up for consideration is immigration from Russian and other countries to America. It isb elieved this will be one of the big problems immediately after the war. Another question had to do with relief work in devastated Poland and elsewhere.

The presentation of the case of the European Jewish colonies in the event of a peace conference at the conclusion of the war is another important problem that probably will be considered at length in the hope of helping to adjust thes ituation abroad.

Zionist Plan May Come Up

A vital question, which may be arranged from discussion at the conference, is the situation in Palestine. Opinon is divided as to the advisability of attempting to establish a nation with headquarters in Palestine, a plan popularly known as the Zionist movement. Those whoh old that the Jews are now a nation, though without a country, generally favor the movement, while those who hold that they are bound together by faith alone generally oppose it.

There is a wide difference of opinion in some places in the United States as to the right of the American Jewish Committee to call the congress. It has been said that the restriction placed upon the discussion of problems and the limitation on representation stamps the movement as undemocratic.

The campaign is aimed principally at Russia, for which country 365,000 Jews are fighting. With the Austrian and German armies are more than 300,000, and there are 10,000 in the British army. In all more than 700,000 Jews are fighting. With this formidable aray of soldiers, American Jews feel that their race should be represented in the peace negotiations.

LANGUAGE TEACHERS TO MEET IN ROCHESTER

Preparations are being made for a meeting of the New York State Modern Language Association, to be held in Rochester November 23d and 24th. An attendance of about 200 modern language teachers from all parts of the state is expected. The probable meeting place will be the Central Presbyterian church. The State Department of Education is planning to license modern language teachers, which is expected to benefit greatly the quality of modern language work done in the state. Changes in the new state syllabus will be considered, also the matter of changing the pass-mark in the modern language regents' examinations.

The New York State Modern Language Association was formed a number of years ago for the purpose of advancing the standards of instruction in modern foreign languages.

Gardner of Hannibal and Ira P. Betts of Phoenix asked $2,000 damages for alleged slander, claiming the defendant unjustly accused her of taking some butter and pork. R. J. endergast represented the defendant and the answer is a general denial.

The case of Michael Dudek vs. John Okoniewski for damages for assualt had been held for settlement and that the assualt case of Edward Bowman vs. Frank Moran, also coming from Fulton, had been settled.

BORROWED TIME CLUB HEARD ABOUT SUNDAY

The members of the Borrowed Time club met in their rooms yesterday and were given a talk by the Rev. M. G. Buck.

The speaker outlined the work of the foremost reformers dating from earliest history, and leading up to the work of Billy Sunday. He said in part:

"We come to the last but not least reformer, Rev. Billy Sunday. I believe him to be the equal of most of the men whom I have named, possessing the same qualities of Knox, Wesley, Calvin, Wycliffe, Jerome, yes and the Apostle Paul. He is going up and down arousing the church to action, reminding the unconverted of the error of their way, and causing thousands upon thousands to turn to the right way of living. From all classes, rich or poor, prominent or occupying an obscure place, all classes are touched by him. I will not say very much about him but extend an invitation to come to the First Methodist church on Friday evening at 7:30 and hear Rev. J. W. Welsh tell about this reformer."

MRS. GALT SHOULD SEE THEM

A bright, discriminating group of women were examining beautiful dresses and other garments, when one of them exclaimed—if Mrs. Galt, the President's fiancee, were here she would be able to feast her eyes on as fine apparel as will be found in her wedding trousseau. The scene was at Shanahan's, 323 S. Salina st., where similar words of praise for the fine stock of women's and misses' outer garments are frequently heard every day. Style, fashionable materials and color blending, together with perfect fit and becomingness, are commendable features of the Shanahan's merchandizing. Besides, you save money on every garment purchased of them.

The largest and most carefully selected stock of furs, purchased last spring, when they were the lowest in price for 20 years, are on sale and you can share with Shanahans the great benefit of the saving.—Adv..

REALTY OWNERS FOR TAX ARTICLE

Association In Presenting Arguments Sees Benefit to Farmers---Significance of Proposal.

How are you taxed? Are your neighbors paying as much as you, according to the amount of property which they own? Every property owner is supposed to pay taxes on every dollar of real and personal property that he owns. That is the law of New York state, and every taxpayer and every assessor knows it is violated.

Will the tax article favored by a majority of both Republicans and Democrats in the constitutional conventon make it possiblle for the state legislators to devise a new system which will provide the income needed for governmental purposes? In this connection L. D. Woodworth, of Rochester, president of the Real Estate Association of the State of New York, is quoted as saying:

"This question is not a political issue; after a study of the amendmet by the delegates to the convention, it was favored by a large majority of the Democrats as well as by the Republicans. The principles embodied in the amendment are so simple and have been so generally approved by all as essential to ny system of tax reform that it is not surprising that those who oppose the adoption of this article have been unablle to offer argument worthy of consideration. Even the alleged devotees of home rule are unable to show that the best interests of the state and its taxpayers will not be improved by the provision of this new artcle and such new laws relating to taxation and assessment as can be enacted after it is adopted at the next election.

Embodies Home Rule Idea

"No voter, and especially not those in the villages and towns of the state, should decide his position in this matter until he actually has read the amendment and studied all of its provisions. He will find that the article honestly and expressly embodies the home rule idea, as it imposes no new system of taxation upon any community and expressly stipulates that the present system of assessing real estate shall continue unless a change is adopted with the consent of the community. Voters must also realize that the new Constitution will leave the balance of legislative power in the districts outside of New York city, and that It will be impossible to change present methods without the consent of the upstate legislators.

"One thing must not be forgotten: The cost of paved roads for country districts and the expense of a Barge canal for the principal benefit of New York city and Buffalo will necessitate a state tax for many years to come, and the former method of every municipality and town deciding on its own expenditures and sources of revenue will give place to an annual demand from the state that such community bear its just share of the expense for those improvements.

Question to be Decided

Furthermore, the demand will be for distribution or equalization of this burden accordng to real worth, rather than according to assessed values, as now fixed. Every voter, whether in city or country, must choose on election day between a more rigid enforcement of the present tax plan and the proposal to make it possible for experts to frame a scientific tax system which willl result in equitable distribution of the tax burden.

"Probably no class of citizens are assessed more highly on personal property than are farmers, because assessors can count the stock and measure the produce as easily as they can value the real estate. If the improbable happens and this amendment is defeated, every farmer must expect soon to pay tax on all his stock and equipment, while the city men will pay only on such of his securities and merchandise as are actually discovered in this state, and payments will then be at the same high rate as is now imposed on real estate.

Taxation of Personalty

"After the tax amendment is adopted, real estate may continue to be assessed locally as at present, or under some improved system which later may be developed and be approved by the voters of the state and of each community; but, more important still, a system of taxing personal property can be developed which will provide new public revenues, and a new and equitable system of taxing personalty can bed evised which is impossible so long as the personal property tax is left to each locality for enforcement as at the present time.

"Unlike real estate, personal property must be reached by a tax levy which bears equally on citizens in all parts of the state, thus reaching the merchant or professional man who derives his income from the city, but lives in the country, or perhaps in another state.

Remedy for Present Evil

"No man pays taxes because of desire. Some persons who are honest in business are dishonest with the public in tax matters because they have apparent reason to believe that honesty will result in their assuming a larger proportion of the public burden than is just. It is a well known custom to lie to the assessor. This custom can only be overcome by a fair system, justly enforced, by which every taxpayer will know that everyone is to be accorded the same treatment and will pay in like proportion.

"Farmers are discriminated against under the present law. When the farmer votes on this amendment he has the first chance ever presented to him to correct one of the greatest abuses in American government."

Full information on this subject, and a copy of the proposed amendment may be obtained from the Constitution, Albany.

URGES HOME RULE FOR TAXPAYERS

State Body Fights Tax Section of Proposed Constitution.

WHOLE STATE NOW AROUSED

Farmers, Merchants, Laborers, Bankers and All Classes of Taxpayers Join Movement—Defeat of Gotham's Real Estate Trust Predicted.

Albany, Oct. .—To voice the protest of the farmers, village taxpayers and officials, merchants and residents of every section of this state against the tax section of the proposed state constitution the Home Rule Tax association has today established headquarters at 44 State street in this city. Requests for information as to the real purpose and effect of this article 10 on taxation, which was supported by the real estate interests of Greater New York in the constitutional convention, have already been received from the people of every county above the Bronx, who are alarmed at the possibility of having to turn over most of the functions of their local assessors to a state board of politicians in Albany.

Charles S. Mereness of Lowville, who as a delegate opposed the centralization of taxation power before the recent constitutional convention, has been elected president of this organization. Mr. Mereness, who is one of the leading Republicans of Lewis county, was one of the few members of the convention who also served in the constitutional convention of 1894. Francis A. Willard, who has been active in the Democratic State league, the Wilson conference and other independent Democratic organizations throughout this state, is secretary of the association in charge of its headquarters at the capitol.

Officers and members of the granges in every agricultural section, bankers and business men, labor representatives, merchants in the large and small communities, automobile owners and taxpayers of every class all over this state have already entered into correspondence with the Home Rule Tax association and are pledging their support in defeating the proposed constitutional destruction of local control over the assessment, collection and expenditure of taxes. Literature containing legal opinion and proof of the serious effects of the possible passage of article 10 upon the interests of the taxpayers of the whole state is being sent in answer to thousands of requests that are pouring into the headquarters of the association.

That the purpose of the tax section of the proposed constitution, which will be voted upon separately as article 10 in question No. 3, is to strip local assessors of practically all of their powers and rest them in a state tax board in the capitol is shown by the quoted utterances of its sponsors on the floor of the convention. Under its provisions it is demonstrated that any such board of tax czars could compel the people of every locality to list all their personal property and arbitrarily assess them at Albany without any intimate knowledge of their affairs or guarantee that the tax funds collected in any county would not be spent outside it in any other favored locality. While the voters of any community can now have redress by ballot as well as by law on incompetent assessors among their neighbors, it is pointed out that they could have no such hold upon a state board of politicians in the capitol, who could use such vast powers as the proposed tax section creates to further their political and partisan interests.

In Ohio and California constitutional provisions similar to the proposed article 10 have been adopted, with the result that the people of these states are now made to list and are taxed upon everything that they own. Farmers are taxed upon every tree, bushel of crops, head of live stock and farm implement; merchants upon every cash register, typewriter and office or shop furniture; automobile owners upon every car and all security holders upon every dollar's worth of their holdings which must be listed for the state inquisitors. With such autocratic power put in the hands of any state administration in New York state a gross violation of every principle of home rule would be suffered, the Home Rule Tax association points out.

"The people of the state are just beginning to realize the harmful effect of this tax section," said Francis A. Willard, secretary of the association, at its headquarters, 44 State street. "Every mail is bringing us hundreds of offers of support from the taxpayers of every county, who have just learned of this latest attempt of the owners of New York city skyscrapers to inflict their taxation schemes upon the property holders of the rest of the state and thereby to lighten their own tax burden. When all the people are informed of the real purpose behind this article 10 of the proposed constitution we are convinced they will overwhelmingly defeat it by voting 'No' to 'Question 3.'"

WARN FARMER OF TAX PLAN

Letters to Grangers Tell True Purpose of Constitutional Article 10.

In response to thousands of requests from farmers for information on the real effect and purpose of the taxation section of the proposed state constitution the following letter has been sent out by the Home Rule Tax association from its headquarters at 44 State street, in Albany:

Dear Sir—Are you paying taxes enough already or do you want to give the state power to make you pay more?

The man with the farm in this state already bears a bigger tax burden than the magnate with the sky scraper down in New York city.

Now the real estate trust below the Bronx is trying to shift even more of its taxes on to the farmers through the tax section that it has helped tack to the proposed state constitution.

If you help pass this tax section by voting "Yes" a board of tax assessors in Albany can levy on every bit of live stock, farm implements and crops you own.

Your neighbor as an assessor may not just suit you, but he's a lot better than a tax board off at the capitol; that could take away most of his powers under the new section.

Other states have tried tax sections like this one that the city real estate crowd want you to vote into the new constitution. Their farmers are now taxed on everything in their barns, fields and houses, as the enclosed tax list will show you.

It will pay you to find out some of the jokers behind this tax section, as an old assessor proves them in the enclosed letter.

The people who own skyscraper and city blocks are fighting hard to pass this section 10. They will win if you and every neighbor you can tell about this don't vote "No." Very truly yours,

FRANCIS A. WILLARD, Secretary.

HUDSON SECTION AROUSED.

Newburg Press Calls on Voters to Beat Article 9.

That the people of the Hudson river section of the state are alive to the danger of the passage of the taxation "Question 3" of the proposed state constitution is shown by the following editorial which was printed in the Newburg Journal of Oct. 5:

"ATTENTION, MR. VOTER!

"Vote against No. 3 of the proposed amendments to the state constitution and thus conserve your own interests and the interests of your community.

"By the proposed new constitution it is provided that certain real estate now assessed locally shall be hereafter assessed by the state board, and this valuation placed at high figures would be the measure of the valuation of all surrounding property. Therefore the state board would hold the whip hand for greatly increased assessments in the county of Orange and incidentally load on the taxpayers of this vicinage burdens that should be borne by others.

"In addition to this there would be nothing to prevent the adoption of a measure that would compel every citizen to make returns on his personal property and income, answering inquisitorial questions and exposing his business affairs to the state tax commissioners. In other words, we would have forced upon us another income tax schedule which, to speak charitably, is not popular with the average citizen.

"We believe, therefore, that it is best to leave well enough alone, retaining the present provisions of law and holding fast to that measure of home rule which we now enjoy, for certainly there is nothing more essential to the well being of a community than the power it now possesses in the matter of the assessment and collection of taxes.

"This proposed amendment is a dangerous proposition which should be scotched at the polls. Every man who believes in home rule, not alone for cities, but for counties, should be alert in his opposition. It should be opposed by every voter who objects to taking on the burdens of the extravagance of larger communities and by every person who believes that the provisions of law which have served us so admirably for the last twenty years should not be changed at the caprice of the theorists or dreamers who seek the unattainable in governmental affairs."

THE REASON FOR DIRECT STATE TAX

Indirect Taxes Revenue Insufficient to Meet Expenses.

LAST YEAR'S TAX BILL VETO

Depleted the Surplus in the State Treasury and Added Greatly to the Amount Necessary to Be Raised This Year.

Why does New York state need a direct tax this year?

Because the money collected by the state from indirect taxes like the stock transfer tax, motor vehicle tax, excise tax, inheritance tax and others is not sufficient to pay the running expenses of the state government and make the required contributions to the sinking funds provided for paying off the bonds issued for great public improvements, such as good roads, barge canals, canal terminals, Palisades park and others.

What is the total amount required to run the state?

Between $63,000,000 and $64,000,000. The actual total of appropriations approved by Governor Whitman was $63,370,982.63.

How much of this sum will be produced by the indirect taxes?

Approximately $44,000,000 if the emergency excise law enacted at the 1915 session of the legislature meets expectations.

How will the balance be made up?

By a direct tax of 1.70 mills.

How much will that raise?

In round figures $19,500,600.

How was a direct tax avoided last year?

By the veto of necessary appropriations and by wiping out the state's working balance to pay the contributions to the sinking funds.

What effect had last year's financial policy upon this year's direct tax?

It practically doubled it.

Is this statement susceptible of proof?

It is. The direct tax bill vetoed by Governor Glynn would have yielded about $7,000,000. Its veto necessitated the withdrawal of a like amount from the state's surplus to pay the contributions to the sinking funds, with the result that the surplus was wiped out and the state comptroller was forced to borrow $6,000,000 in anticipation of this year's tax collections to pay the running expenses of the state.

Does a direct state tax bear inequitably upon the city of New York?

It does not.

New York city pays 72 per cent of the direct state tax because the assessed valuation of New York city's taxable property is 72 per cent of the assessed valuation of the taxable property of the entire state.

If some things are maintained by the state largely at the expense of New York city, other things are maintained for New York city at the expense of the rest of the state.

The state makes appropriations according to the needs of the state without discrimination as to locality and with equal justice to all of the state.

Seventy per cent of the expense of the election bureau, the industrial commission, the tax commissioners, the banking department and the insurance department is chargeable to New York city, and 70 per cent of the total number of inmates in the state's penal institutions come from New York city. The state also contributes over $2,000,000 to the support of New York city's schools.

ENTITLED TO REPUBLICAN VOTES.

Resolved, That the revised constitution adopted by the constitutional convention and to be submitted to the people in November embodies the constructive program of the Republican party of the state for the improvement of the state government as declared in successive conventions of the party and is entitled to have the votes of Republicans cast in favor of its approval.—Resolution Adopted Unanimously by the Republican State Committee Oct. 6.

NOT A PARTISAN INSTRUMENT.

While the proposed constitution is in no sense a partisan instrument, for it was voted for by a majority of both Republicans and Democrats, yet it is a document for which Republicans can and should vote with peculiar satisfaction.—Frederick C. Tanner, Chairman of the Republican State Committee.

IT'S UP TO YOU.

The Democratic party can come back into power in this state only with the consent of the voters.

Considering the record it made during the four years ending Dec. 31, 1914, do you want it back?

THE DISTINCTIVE FALL FROCKS

New York.—While the model costumes sent over by famous French designers are beyond the scope of average well-dressed women, they contain ideas that are invaluable to clever adaptors.

A Cheruit Suit

Take for instance, a Cheruit suit, with a three-quarter length coat of black "gros-laine." With the outer part, this seemed a simple, long-coated, tailored rig, showing what appeared to be a matching full skirt of the coat material. Once the coat was doffed, however, it revealed an afternoon frock of gray blue silk loosely belted at the waist with the new narrow cravat tie having fringed ends, placed at the centre front. A delicate braiding of black and gold soutache ornamented thef ront. of the blouse and trimmed the patch hip pockets, while a wide hem of the black woolen, like the coat, weighted the skirt and produced a tailor effect when the coat was worn.

McCall Designs

Evening Frocks and Trains

Evening dresses show all the prevailing sartorial fads a bit exaggerated, as things must be to be effective at night. Skirts are more bouffant and shorter than on day models, es— for the train today are a feature, for the train today is a separate arttachment quite distinct from the gown proper, and is slung over the arm for dancing in a style at once convenient and picturesque. Trains are narow and finished in a point generally, though occasionally the fish-tail ending is used.

Elbow Bracelets, Watches and Pendants

Bracelets are perhaps more popular than any other form of jewelry and the liking for flexible styles is in the ascendant. With this there is quite naturally a return to the tassels that were in vogue when the style was new. Even the popular bracelet watch is mounted on a flexible band ending witha tassel at one side. A new place for the flexible bracelet is just above the elbow, the stiffer sort form, bangle fashion in pairs at the wrist.

Petticoats Again

The swish of the silk petticoat is again with us, and one sees it on Fifth Avenue not only in the shops but outdoors when the wind sways short full skirts. Some of the newest petticoats have a rather flexible featherbone in the hem except across the front breadth. Ruffles and cordings are favorite petticoat garnitures, and one form of skirt is caught under, envelope fashion, ina way that suggests a Turkish trouser.

Hat Fancies

Favor is about equally divided between small hats and those with wide brims.In the former class the top hat, suggesting a man's beaver, is especially popular. Velvet hats of all sorts depend on the material and shape for their effect and little trimming is used. Enormous hat pins made of beads, in jet or steel, are much worn ornaments while upstanding pleatings that suggest the Indian's war bonnet, are considerably used on the stiff high-crown ed shapes.

Capes and Veils

Capes are responsible for some of the quaintest trimmings on both dresses and coats. If one owns an old time circular for cape that ripples in organ--pipe folds, this is the time to resurrect it, since such lines are once more endorsed by fashon. Spanish lace used in cape or fichu fashion, is effectively employed on evening and dinner frocks, and tassels are hung almost anywhere, and bows wander about with little reason seemingly. Veils are responsible for very fetching effects, and vary from a short more endorsed by fashion. Spanish fashion,—to long draperies, that reach nearly to the waist at the back. Chantilly lace patterned veils are favored, and the latest idea is to have these hemmed with chiffon, the hem occasionally wider than the lace, but usually measuring about two inches, put on with hemstitching. Edgings of fur are occasionally seen, and are likely to increase as the season grows older.

Basques

Bodices taken on basque lines and end in a straight cut-off at the waist or continue in long points. Darts and seams and wrinkles are all assets of present style, and lacings, and edgings of fur, velvet ribbon and little quillinge are faddish features.

The latest thing in umbrella handles is a covering of pig-skin and braided pigskin holders that suggest riding crops.

The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

LUNCHEON DISHES A LA ITALIENNE.

PEPPERS WITH CREAMED FISH. —Parboil the peppers ten minutes, then fill with creamed fish of any kind; sprinkle with layer of fine crumbs, dot with butter and brown lightly in a quick oven. Creamed carrots, cauliflower, sprouts and many other vegetables may be baked in the pepper cups and served either as a vegetable or an entree. Filled with potatoes au gratin and browned they are a delicious accompaniment for chops and steaks.

Tamales.—Cut large green peppers in two parts crosswise, scrape out the seeds and place the shells in salt and water for half an hour. Make a mixture of tomatoes, either canned or fresh, and breadcrumbs, seasoned with salt, pepper, tomato ketchup and table sauce. Stuff the shells with this and tie the two parts together with a string. Boil for half an hour. A variation of this is to stuff the peppers with chopped meat instead of the dressing given above. They are very good stuffed with chopped chicken. Sometimes we have just the small end cut off. Stuff as before stated and bake.

Macaroni Croquettes.—One cupful of cooked macaroni, four tablespoonfuls of butter, four tablespoonfuls of flour, three-fourths cupful of milk or stock, a few drops of onion juice, salt and pepper and one-half cupful of cheese. When well blended add milk, onion juice and seasoning. Cool, add macaroni, shape, dip in crumbs, egg, then crumbs again and fry in deep fat.

MORE EGGS.

SPANISH EGGS.—Seed and chop a green pepper, stone and mince a dozen olives and put these, with a cupful of thick stewed tomatoes, a teaspoonful of onion juice, a tablespoonful of butter and half a cupful of gravy stock, in a frying pan over the fire. Simmer together five minutes, stirring constantly, until all the ingredients are well blended and hissing hot. Have ready six eggs, beaten enough to mix the white and yolks; stir them into the frying pan and cook until the eggs thicken. Should the mixture seem too stiff before the eggs go in thin with a little stock. Add a teaspoonful of salt, stir up well and serve.

Creamed Eggs.—Cook six eggs until they are hard. Make a pint of white sauce, using four tablespoonfuls of flour and the same of butter, a half teaspoonful of salt and a pint of rich milk. Put six slices of toast on a hot dish, put a layer of sauce over each after spreading them with butter; then cut the egg whites in strips and add a layer of them. Rub a part of the yolk through a sieve for a garnish. Place in the oven for a few minutes and serve hot.

The Art of Making Toast.

Now is the height of the season when individuals here and there are condemned for a day or two to eat nothing but toast, and while their poor bodies are putting up heroic fights to right themselves they are often hindered as much as helped because the toast is badly made.

Toast is but little better than untoasted bread if it is just browned on the outside. It should be well dried, or, at any rate, well heated through before it commences to brown. It is then much lighter than otherwise and more likely to be better masticated, and this cannot be too well done.

It is a bad plan to pile several slices of buttered toast on a plate and then to cut down through them. Divide each slice separately and pile pieces lightly.

FASHIONABLE COAT IN GABARDINE.

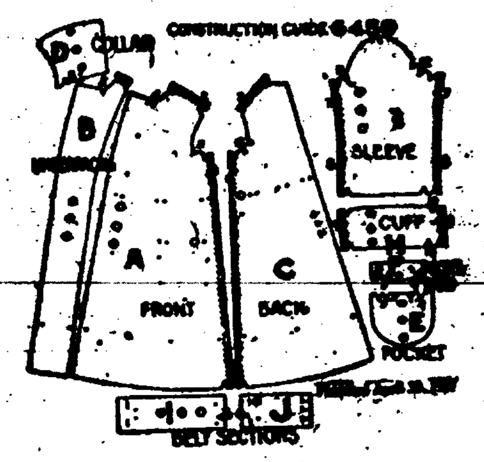
COAT 6459 SKIRT 6429

Stylish coat of gabardine, self-belted and trimmed with pleated pockets and buttons.

Every woman glories in the possession of a coat that is comfortable, yet smart; a design that is essentially free from clumsiness. Well, here it is. The coat is suitable to development in gabardine, duvetyn, serge, velours or cheviot. It is made with a high turn-down collar and trimmed with pockets that are about one-fourth as deep again as the cuffs which finish the one-piece sleeves. The length of the coat may be regulated to suit the fancy of the wearer. In medium size the coat requires 3⅝ yards of 54-inch material.

To make the coat the first step is to adjust the underfacing to position underneath the front, corresponding edges even; then close the under-arm and shoulder seams as notched. This much accomplished, the model looks pretty nearly finished. The seams should be carefully pressed, but avoid stretching.

Next, pleat the upper edge of the pocket, placing "T" on corresponding small "o" perforations and tack. Sew band to pocket as notched. Adjust to position on front, stitching edges of pocket and band along, indicating line of small "o" perforations, bringing single small and large "O" perforations in band to corresponding perforations in front.



Close the back seam of the collar and face. Sew to neck edge, notches and center-backs even.

To make the belt, turn under edges of the two sections on slot perforations; lap the folded edge of back section on front to small "o" perforations, notches even; stitch one inch from folded edges. Center-front indicated by double "oo" perforations. Line belt and adjust on coat, bringing large and small "o" perforations in back belt section to corresponding perforations near underarm seam and tack, center-backs even.

The sleeves are made last. Close seam as notched; then close the cuff seam and face. Sew to sleeve, notches and seams even. Sew sleeve in armhole as notched, small "o" perforations at shoulder seam and ease in any fulness.

Buttons may be added to the belt in back and also to the upper edges of the pockets.

ONE-PIECE FROCK WITH BIB FRONT.

A modish frock in blue cloth trimmed with plaid silk and narrow ruffles of lace. A pretty feature of the trimming is the bib front.

A different type of one-piece frock is this model of submarine blue cloth, with vest, cuffs and girdle of plaid silk. There is a shoulder yoke, and the collar is sacrificed to dainty ruffles of lace which outline the neck. Either a turn-down or high collar may be used, however. There are many inexpensive materials in which this model may be reproduced; in average size it requires 3½ yards 54-inch cloth, with 1 yard 36-inch silk for the trimming.

At least five sections of the pattern must be laid on the lengthwise fold of the goods to be cut properly, the purpose being to avoid seams and gain a graceful line for the dress. The front gore, collar, back and front are the parts so arranged. A sixth section is the trimming piece, in case it is used.

Opposite the front gore, along the selvage edge, is placed the belt. To the right of this comes the back gore, one edge of which rests on the lengthwise fold and the other along the selvage. The section is placed on a lengthwise thread of material, however. The sleeve, cuff and side front come next, all on a lengthwise thread. After the sections are pinned carefully into place cut out and put aside until ready for use.

If the square neck is to be used it will be necessary to cut off the upper edge of the front on double small "o" perforations. Similar perforations are provided for shortening the sleeves and skirt.

In woolens one-piece frocks usually affect the simple shades which yet have plenty of depth and richness about them. Black and white effects are much in favor, while blue, always popular and serviceable, is seen in many shades, and the beautiful tones of the new greens could not be excelled in attractiveness.

A Matrimonial Shack

By ESTHER VANDEVEER

Jamieson proposed to his stenographer within sixty days after she entered his service. He had never seen her before she came to work for him; consequently he had known her but two months.

"You know little or nothing about me," was her reply to his declaration.

"I know you are refined, that you have character, and I am willing to risk the rest. If you marry me you will have to take me all on trust."

"Don't you care to know anything of my antecedents?"

"No. It would doubtless make me ashamed of my own antecedents. We will be marrying each other, not each other's antecedents. Marriage is a new birth. I expect to be a much better man under your influence."

She fixed her eyes on him curiously, but asked no further questions. She understood his peculiar makeup instinctively. It was fortunate she did. Couples who are incapable of understanding each other are liable to quarrel after wedlock has taken the edge off their romance.

Jamieson gave his fiancee a vacation for the rest of her term of service with him. She was to take a rest, which she sadly needed. A year before she came to work for him she had lived in affluence. Reverses had deprived her of the beautiful home in which she had been born and had always lived. She and her mother had been turned out of it, and half a year later the mother had died, leaving her daughter alone in the world. While in Jamieson's service she had been grieving, and she wondered how he could have come to covet one so lugubrious. He had never asked for the cause of her melancholy, and she had never offered to reveal it.

And now she had suggested that she tell him something about her past, for she wished him to know that she was born in a station no less exalted than his own, for he was not only well to do, but educated and refined. Though she liked his independent way of looking on marriage, she was a bit disappointed that he had not given her an opportunity to tell him that she had been brought up a lady and until a year before had lived in a home that it had nearly broken her heart to leave. But she knew that she must take him as she found him and had confidence that beneath his somewhat crude philosophy he was not a bad man, and she was quite sure that despite his matter of fact way of looking at sentimental things he was not devoid of sentiment.

Jamieson insisted on his fiancee going to the country for the summer months. "I don't wish my bride to look like a piece of marble," he said. "I desire that you put in the time between now and our marriage trying to get some color in your cheeks. I can make all the necessary preparations for a place to live and all that. If you did your share of it you would not be getting the rest you need. Besides, think how pleasant it will be not to be bothered with suggestions."

She admired his frankness, but it seemed to her that he was a trifle selfish. He was thinking of himself in wanting his bride to be approved by his friends instead of desiring her to regain her health for her own sake. He was a good man, but was inclined to selfishness.

Jamieson, while she was away in the country, did not write her long and loving letters. He claimed that a man of thirty-eight was too old for "that sort of thing," as he expressed it. He said that he would try to make up for the deficiency after marriage by giving her a kiss at least once a month. She took these things with a "good deal of salt," but after all how much pleasanter it would have been to be engaged to a lover-like man!

He wrote that he was looking for a "shack," as he called it, for them to live in; then one day he wrote her that he had found one. He didn't suppose she would like it, but it was the best he could do. He managed to say one pleasant thing--he believed the house in which a couple lived should stand in the name of the wife and he had put the deed in her name.

The summer came to an end at last, and the future Mrs. Jamieson returned to the city. Her lover seemed quite pleased with the change in her and said that he would not be ashamed of her appearance. He asked her if she would like a large or a small wedding, and she replied that since it was evident he would wish his own way about everything else she might as well give in in that as all the rest. Then he showed his obstinacy in refusing to decide the matter, and she chose a small wedding. Indeed, she preferred that no guest should be present.

They were married at noon, and, since the groom was unable to leave his business, instead of taking a wedding trip they went direct to their future home. The bride asked no questions about it, but she was in a quiver to see it. She did not believe it was a shack, but she doubted since Jamieson needed his capital in his business that he would buy a pretentious abode.

It was dark when they reached their new home, but when Mrs. Jamieson alighted and looked at it she drew back. She was before the house from which she had been turned out a year before. Then she looked at her husband in wondering inquiry. But he hurried her into it, and when they were inside he said:

"How do you like your shack?"

Then it burst upon her that under an assumed matter of fact philosophy he had been covering up the sentiment of a lover.

Cheese Fondu.—Stir two cupfuls of milk and a cupful of fine dry breadcrumbs together and let stand for half an hour. Then add four beaten eggs, a tablespoonful of melted butter or other shortening, pepper, salt and mace to taste and half a pound of dry cheese grated. Bake in a buttered dish for half an hour with a cover and then brown.

Cheese Sandwiches.—Spread grated cheese between slices of buttered white bread. Dip the sandwiches in egg and milk (one egg to a cupful of milk) and brown in hot drippings or butter. Serve at once.

Cream Cheese Sandwiches.—Mix cream cheese with cream and dry mustard enough to make it soft and yellow. Then spread between slices of rye bread.

Hot Swiss Cheese Sandwiches.—Put a thin layer of Swiss cheese between two thin hot slices of buttered toast and add mustard to taste. Eat hot.

Rye Bread.

Two cupfuls rye flour, two cupfuls pastry flour, one-half cupful sugar, one-quarter cupful molasses, two and one-half cupfuls sour milk, two teaspoonfuls soda, one teaspoonful salt. Mix and put into a greased bread pan and allow it to rise one hour in a warm place.

Meat Loaf.

A flank piece will do for this meat loaf and should be ground fine. Mix with an equal amount of pork sausage and a cup and a half of bread crumbs. Season to taste, using onion, salt, parsley and sage, if the flavor of it is liked. Moisten with stock and bake, basting with water when dry.

WAR SCENES AS THEY OCCURRED

Motion Pictures Taken on the Field of Battle to Be Brought Here by The Evening Times and Will be Seen at The Quirk Friday Afternoon and Evening, Oct. 22.

"Wonderful! It doesn't seem possible that men would risk their lives as those men must have, to obtain pictures!"

That was the comment of thousands after viewing The Times war pictures on their first presentation in New York city. Every person who witnessed the pictures left the great hall declaring them the most wonderful thing he or she had ever seen.

"It is war," remarked a man who wore the bronze star, crossed cannon and red, white and blue badges of the Grand Army, as he came out, "but it's different in many ways from the carnage we knew in the sixties. Never before have I realized the great changes in the methods of fighting from what they were in the days of the rebellion. And yet," he continued, "there is a sameness. There is the same grimness of purpose, the same lightheartedness of the soldiers, the same death and suffering which we knew. It is war! Any man who ever saw a fight knows that after viewing those pictures, I am going to see them again."

And so they commented; so they will continue to comment in every city where the pictures are shown.

After viewing these films one cannot but marvel at the nerve of the men who took the pictures. Neither can a person help wondering and admiring the skill of the censors who passed upon these films before they were shown to the public. It is an open secret that thousands of feet of film were rejected and thrown out by the censors, because they were too horrible to be shown. Yet they succeeded in preserving a true and realistic history of the fighting, to make clear its horrors without permitting a single thing to be shown which cannot safely be witnessed by any person regardless of their state of health.

The pictures proved an instantaneous success. That they will be the biggest motion picture hit ever shown in these cities was established before the first show of the afternoon ended. They are news pictures pure and simple. Not a single scene was prearranged. The camera men took them during action. Study their uniforms and their outfits. The uniforms are soiled and worn, the shoes are out at the sides, the toes and the heels; did you ever see a pre-arranged picture where the soldiers presented such an appearance? Not one.

It is difficult, indeed, to write a description of these seven remarkable reels. There are so many things which impress themselves upon one, such a variety of scenes, worthy of mention that one is confused as to which is the best to talk about. Beyond that, the man who witnesses these reels became so interested that when he starts to write, he wants to describe each and every incident, wants to tell the whole story. He could fill not a column, nor a page but a dozen pages with lively, interesting description of these remarkable pictures.

There is the brave defense offered by the Belgian army. The magnificent stand made by them which frustrated the German plan to dash across the little nation and the quick crushing of France by the capture of Paris. Your blood thrills and youb egin to realize the place in history which that gallant army of King Albert's will have. You see them preparing pontoons in preparation of the retreat from Antwerp. This is decidedly interesting. They work like a victorious army, rather than one preparing to fall back from the enemy. It shows them as they are, defeated, but knowing that in defeat they have won a greater victory than the overpowering force which is driving them back. Then there is the retreat from the city. The army, cavalry, infantry and artillery, march out of the city and away. With them goes the crowd of refugees, men and women and children, carrying such of their belongings as can be made into bundles. It brings home with gripping force the terribleness of the war.

And then comes a depiction of the methods adopted to check the German's onward rush. Wild trains are sent dashing down the tracks to cause wrecks and halt the invaders.

RINTELEN IS SHOT AS SPY IN LONDON

New York.—Franz Rintelen, recently resident in the New York Yacht club erman secret agent in this country, and said to have outranked the German Ambassador in the councils of the Imperial overnment, has been shot as a spy by a firing squad in London, it was learned on excellent authority yesterday. The announcement included the statement that Hans Adam von Wedel, chief figure in the first erman passport scandal in this country, had met a similar fate. The British authorities, it was said, have ruled that German spies at work in this country against Great Britain when they fall into Britsh hands, must suffer the same fate as those apprehended in England.

SOMETHING FOR VOTERS TO BEAR IN MIND

In order to appraise the criticism of the present administration at its true value it is necessary to bear in mind that this criticism comes from the party which when in power was responsible for—

The highway scandals, which aroused the state from one end to the other.

The prison scandals.

The notorious Levy election law.

Percentage contracts on the reconstruction of the capitol.

The impeachment of the governor.

The creation of 4,151 new state jobs.

Stuffing ballot boxes to carry the election to determine the question of holding a constitutional convention.

Postponing payment of the state's honest debts.

Padding payrolls and neglecting public business.

How these critics would run the state if they had the chance is clearly indicated by the manner in which they did run it when they had the chance. Their administration was worse than a failure; it was a scandal.

No argument is necessary to convince any reader of this paper that the administration of the state's business since the 1st of January of this year has been honest and orderly. A year ago all the arguments put forth in support of the Democratic administrations from 1910 to 1914 failed utterly to convince the voters that they had been either the one or the other.

The Democratic Position.

Creating expensive state departments and then spending the public money to tell the people how good they were and how necessary for the public welfare failed to convince the taxpayers last year of the desirability of a Democratic administration. Now the Democratic campaign managers are asking the taxpayers to admit that they made a mistake in voting for simpler and less expensive government and return Democrats to power to create some more new jobs at the taxpayers' expense.

YOUR VOTE MAY DO IT.

Your vote may elect a Republican assemblyman.

Your failure to vote may permit the election of a Democratic assemblyman.

Your member of assembly is your most direct connection with the state administration.

Think this over.

Germans Exhausted, War Lost to Them, Says Khostoff

London.—The press this morning, led by the Daily Telegraph, rejoices over Italy's declaration of war on Bulgaria, holding that Italy's entrance into full aliance with the Powers of the Entente makes for the inevitable defeat of the Germanic--Turkish confederation and insures the practical annihilation of treasonablle Bulgaria.

All the newspapers agree that the action of Italy will have a powerful effect on Roumania and Greece, which are expected soon to abandon their policy of benevolent neutrality in favor of the active intervention of their armies on the side of the Allies.

Russia, according to the latest despatches, has large forces on the way to rescue Serbia, and a despatch to the Daily Telegraph from Petrograd quotes Mr. Khostoff, Minister of the Interior, as proclaiming that the Germans are suffering from utter exhaustion and have really lost the war.

Great Britain has no intention of abandoning the Dardnelles campaign, and, without weakening her force there, will press her defence of Serbia in the Balkans with the utmost vigor.

With the appointment of General Sir Charles Monro to succeed General Sir Ian Hamilton in command of the British troops in Gallipoli, it is considered certain here that the attempt to open the straits and force a way to Constantinople willl be continued. The British public are confident that the final result will be the overthrow of Turkish rule in Europe. Italy is expected to co-operate in the task, at least with her army.

In the Balkans the Austro-Germans and Bulgarians are striving desperately to affect a junction against the Serbians, who are being forced back into them ountains between the Morava Valley and the Serbian frontier. The railroad from Salonica, along which part of the Anglo-French expedition is hurrying to their defence, has been cut near Vranja, which will delay their advance.

To offset this Italy has declared war on Bulgaria and a squadron has left Brindisi, presumably to help in the blockade of the Bulgarian coast on the Aegean Sea. Further large reinforcements are to be sent by the Allies to Salonica to aid in the land operations.

British Cabinet Crisis Warded Off by Diplomacy

London.—Parrying with "diplomatic" answers more than one hundred questions, chiefly regarding conditions in the Balkans and at the Dardnelles, the government in the House of Commons yesterday escaped for the present the threatened Caboinet crisis. The conscriptionists were silenced in their opposition to voluntary enlistment and to Lord Derby's schemes to fill the gaps in the army through civilian bodies is assured a fair test.

The sudden and serious illness of the Premier, Mr. Asquith, admittedly was a factor in favor of the Cabinet. Mr. Lloyd George, who took his place in the House of Commons, in many instances was not pressed for definite replies where Mr. Asquith probably would have been asked to explain at length.

Mr. Asquith's illness, it was said, will compel him to remain at home for a few days and necessitate his temporary withdrawal from public activities.

Anticipating one of them ost exciting and important sessions since the war began, a great throng was present in the House of Commons. Among the questions which it was expected would be asked of the government were the reasons for the resignation of Sir Edward Carson as Attorney General and the witdrawal of General Sir Ian Hamilton from command at the Dardnelles.

While the Ministers replied to the majority of the questions put to them, the information which they divulged did not carry much enlightenment to thep ublic.

It is generally agreed that the controversy over the recruiting has been quieted for thep resent, but it also is understood that the voluntary system is receiving its last trial, and despite the opposition throughout the country, thosef avoring national service for all will endeavor to force its adoption should Lord Derby fail in his efforts.

New Haven Firm Gets Immense Munition Order

New York.—The French Government has signed a contract to pay $60,000,000 to munition manufacturers in the United States, it is learned here.

The order is to be billed by a newly organized corporation known as the New Haven Equipment Company. The contract calls for deliveries as late as 1917.

The officers of the new corporation will include several department heads in the plant of the Remington Arms Company at Bridgeport, Conn.

The $60,000,000 contract requires the delivery of 1,000,000 rifles of a type similar to that of the so-called Spanish Mauser of 1903, at the price of $25 each. It also requires the manufacture of one billion rifle cartridges, to be used with the new rifles, at a price of about $35 a thousand.

The French Government, it is reported, is to make advance payments in cash up to the amount of $3,000,000, out of a fund of $15,000,000, now on deposit with certain New York banks.

These advances are to be covered by the New Haven Equipment Company with satisfactory corporate surety bonds, as the advances may be madef rom time to time by specified trustees.

The organizers of the New Haven Equipment company are being backed financially by important New York City financial interests, who will also become indemnitors on the surety bonds, to guarantee the cash advances. Under this bonding arrangement the equipment company is to be given charge of the war order.

BALDWINSVILLE TO GIVE HIGH PLENTY OF WORK

No game is scheduled for Saturday and the high school football squad will therefore prepare for next Tuesday's game with Baldwinsville High which is to be played on the local athletic field.

The practice yesterday was far from satisfactory, as some of the regular men failed to report and it was necessary for Coach Merril to shift the team and use some of the substitutes in regular berths. La Point and Barnes, who have been playing end were used temporarily at quarter and right halfback respectively. Kraus was [illegible] ends. While the new combination worked fairly well, it did not represent the team as it will line up during the remainder of the season.

Repeated shifting maden ecessary by the absence of members of the squad will only tend to mar the machine-like precision which a football team should have in mid-season.

Them ake-shift team of yesterday ran through stiff signal practice, after which the squad was split up and the two sides opposed each other in a scrimmage.

The fact bears repeating here that only about forty students attended last Saturday's fray and that the sum realized at the gate was one-quarter the amount needed to defray expenses of the day. It is evident that concerted action must be taken by the Athletic Assoation to stir up a proper attendance of students at the next game.

AUBURN'S MARKET TO CONTINUE IN NOV.

Auburn—A decision to continue the Public Market service for the community through the month of November and the display of sentiment in favor of a permanent market in the city were developments at a meeting of the Market Committee in the City Hall last evening.

Everyalderman is now on record as being in favor of a public market. The question was put directly to each one in a letter by the Central Labor Union, which is urging a permanent market, and in a meeting of the board each expressed himself as in favor of the market.

The decision to keep the present curb market open all through November was unanimous. It is contingent however upon a fair amount of trade keeping up. Sales in July, August and September were satisfactory, it was reported, and on the market days this month thath ave not been stormy there has been heavy trading.

Baltimore.—Mrs. Norman Galt, the fiancee of President Wilson, was to have come to Baltimore today to inspect the greater part of her trousseau, being made here, and by her failure to keep the engagement she disappointed hundreds of women who went to the shopping district to greet her. While Mrs. Galt did not come to Baltimore the secrets of part of her trousseau became known during the day.

OLD PARTIES GET BLAME FOR DEFEAT IN NEW JERSEY

Trenton, N. J.—Woman suffrage was defeated yesterday in New Jersey by a majority of about fifty thousand. Early morning returns, which were in many instances complete, indicated that the figures might be close to fifty-five thousand.

Despite President Wilson's recent declaration in favor of the women, and his trip to his old home, Princeton, to cast his vote for their cause, every county in the State cast a majority against the suffrage amendment.

The defeat was overwhelming. The women conceded it early in the evening. But they stuck bodly to their battle flag and said they would carry the fight into another campaign, in which they felt confident they would drive their foes to cover.

The political machines worked vigorously against the amendment. In every one of their strongholds they rallied their forces, with the result that they piled up huge majorities against the amendment in Newark and Jersey City; rolled up formidable votes in Trenton, Elizabeth and other populous centres, and held down the big vote the women had counted on in the rural counties.

The landslide in the country, which was confidently predicted by the women and feared by the politicians, did not materialize. Several of the country districts voted against the proposal.

With defeat frowning upon them the women early in the morning issued militant statements declaring that their fight would be waged with new energy. Mrs. Feickert, head of the campaign, declared that their foes had resorted "to the worst conceivable tactics to defeat us.' She said there had been colonizing by the politians and that the political "rings" had shown daringly and unmistakably that they did not "intend to give us a fair chance."

Under the presentc onstitution the suffrage issue cannot again be presented to the voters of New Jersey for five years.

Miss Lavinia Engle, who had charge of the Trenton suffrage headquarters throughout the campaign, said, when the result was apparent, that the fight for suffrage in New Jersey would continue. She declared that the women who wanted the ballot would not give up until they had won their battle. The suffragists will not be able to have their amendment voted upon again for five years, however, because of the apparent defeat of the proposition to alter the manner of changing the constitution.

The New Jersey battle was the first of four big ones in the East and consequently was closely watched by the women as well as the politicians because of the effect it may have upon the other contests. The other elections, all of them to be held on November 2, will be in Massachusetts, Pennsylvania and New York, and in each the suffragists are making a heroic effort to rally the voters about their standard. The political leaders in New York State have asserted that the Jersey outcome would very likely have am arked effect upon the fight in New York State. The politicians there assert that there is little liklihood that the amendment will be approved, but the suffragists take an entirely different view of it.

Throughout the State the voting was surprising heavy. There were but few counties—and those in the sparsely populated sections —where the vote was less than fifty per cent of the registration. In the big cities this percentage ran up as high as sixty, and in some districts of the cities to seventy-five and eighty per cent. and in a few districts almost up to the full registration.

JOS. LAMPHERE, ACCUSED OF STEALING HORSE AND BUGGY, FOUND DRIVING THE RIG

The Syracuse police department succeeded in making an arrest yesterday of Joseph Lamphere of that city, who is charged with the unlawful retention of a horse and buggy belonging to the Fulton Livery stable. The outfiit was taken last Friday, and immediately the local police department got busy by furnishing a description of the outfit to neighboring cities and towns.

Lamphere hired the rig, saying it was wanted for a few hours only. Failing to return it in a reasonable length of time the alarm was given.

The Syracuse police furnished to liverymen there a complete description of the man and the rig, and a sharp lookout was made. A patrolman advised headquarters yesterday that Lamphere, who is well known to the Syracuse police was driving a rig about town, making a livery stable his headquarters.

Detective Eobald was assigned to the case and just before reaching the livery stable, the officer saw the rig coming around a street corner. He noted that the outfit tallied with the description given by the Fulton police.

The Syracuse police say the accused man has a reputation for doing "stunts" of this nature and that it is necessary to keep him under surveilance at all time. He was brought here yesterday and will be arraigned later.

RIVALS OF THE SALOON

The remark has been made lately that the moving picture show is proving to be them ost formidable rival that thes aloon has ever had. Once a great many men patronized the saloon evenings for the reason that they had no other place to go, and not a few of them used to spend the larger part of their earnings in drinking and treating. Now these same men go to the moving picture shows, and as the entire cost for an evening's entertainment of this sort is only a nickel or a dime, they are able to save the bulk of their money, or to spend it the gratification of other needs and luxuries.

Prohibition of the liquor traffic has always proved, and always willp rove, to be a humbug. Nobody was ever benefited by coercion. Even when you do succeed in driving a devil out of a man, unless you are able to fill the place that the devil formerly occupied with something better, the same old devil will soon comeb ack to his old habitation, and he is likely to return, as we learn on good authority, with seven companions, each one of whom is meaner than himself. It seldom does any good to induce a drunkard to stop drinking unless at the same time the drunkard can be interested in something better.—Rochester Herald.

PROPOSED CONSTITUTION NOT PARTISAN

The World insists that the proposed new constitution is a partisan document. Our neighbor would find it hard to substantiate that opinion from the records of the constitutional convention. There was one out-and-out partisan division in the voting on the articles of the new constitution.

It is true that twenty-eight Democrats voted against the finished draft, whereas only fifteen Democrats voted for it. But all the important articles were approved, not only by a majority of the Republican members of the convention, but by a majority of the Democrats as well. Democrats voted for the department reorganization-short ballot provision, 28 to 15. Democrats voted for the executive budget, 36 to 2. Democrats voted for the home rule provision, 18 to 15. Democrats voted for the judiciary article, 32 to 2. Mr. Root in adjourning the convention pointed out that twelve amendments had been adopted unanimously, twelve by a majority of more than 10 to 1, two by more than 7 to 1, two by more than 4 to 1, two by more than 3 to 1, and three by more than 2 to 1.

It happens that Republicans were in numerical control of the convention which framed the new constitution. That body was, however, singularly free from partisan politics or partisan action. That fact is greatly to its credit. Whatever faults or shortcomings. The World may find in the document, it should not saddle on it one which does not belong there.—N. Y. Tribune.

COMMON SELFISHNESS

Selfishness kills more towns and, incidentally, men in the political game than any other cause. When you find a town where its business men look only to their own enrichment look for the handwriting on the wall, for it is doomed. Likewise, when you find a man in politics who sees not beyond the narrowness of his vision, the sword is dangling over his head. The way to know the selfish town is by the way its business men go to work to provide the greatest good to the greatest number. One-eyed ideas will not win; neither will a selfish desire to monopolize some line of business. Hand in hand with this description goes that of a man in political life who will not see beyond a space occupied by a 3x4 stick of wood. The selfish man is the narrow man and vice versa, the narrow man is usually eaten up by his own ego, becoming the whole thing in selfishness. When a man in politics allows himself to be narrowed by his own selfish interests and will not adopt a policy that will grant the right to do good for the greatest number of his neighbors, one may set it down in black and white that that man's days are numbered by a very few figures.

WHO'S NEXT

Two audible responses echoed in this newspaper recently regarding the establishing of a club for our city's boys and girls has been a "good start." Supposing a fund is started, that if club rooms are not possible this year, or two years from now. Certainly the only true way to begin is to begin, and money is the least of that which is needed to successfully undertake such a project.

To the physically hungry person, food and clothing are not sufficient. We should stop to remember there are other ways of being hungry. We should remember these people live for twenty-four hours each day.

Perhaps the following quotation from the "Life of Tolstoy" will make clearer the suggestion:

"I had set out to benefit these people by the help of the rich; and here for the first time I realized that all these unfortunates whom I wished to benefit, besides the hours they spend suffering from hunger and cold, and waiting for a night's lodging, have also time to devote to something else. There is the rest of the twenty-four hours every day, and there is a whole life, about which I had never thought. I here, for the first time, understood that all these people, besides needing food and shelter, must also pass twenty-four hours each day, which they, like the rest of us, have to live. I understood that they must be angry and dull, and must pluck up courage, and mourn and be merry. Strange to say, I now for the first time understood clearly that the business I had undertaken cannot consist merely in feeding and clothing a thousand people as one feeds and drives under shelter a thousand sheep; but that it must consist in doing them good. And I understood that each of these thousand people was a human being with a past; and with passions, tenptations and errors, and thoughts like my own, and was such a man as myself."

JAPANESE COTTON INDUSTRY

A 13 per cent. increase in the production and one of 22 per cent. in the exports of cotton yarn marked the activities of the Japanese cotton spinning and weaving mills in 1914, according to reports from an American consul, despite the unsettled conditions in the world markets that affected industry and trade everywhere during the last six months of the year.

Piece goods, however, remained practically stationary as to the total value of exports, although radical changes occurred in the shipments to China and Kwangtung—to China, 27,042,188 yen worth against 19,874,882 yen in 1913; to Kwangtung, 3,408,548 yen against 9,260,554 yen. At the close of 1914 the industry posted 369,910 more spinning spindles, 19,094 more twisting spindles, and 1,600 more looms than ith ad a yar and a half previous.

These are among the interesting facts disclosed by the additional statistical data on the Japanese cotton industry that has recently been obtained by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commrce, and embodied in a booklet, "Japanese Cotton Goods Industry and Trade," Special Consular Reports No. 74. While primarily issued as a supplement to an earlier publication of theb ureau (Japanese cotton industry from the establishment of the first spinning mill), the tables presented in the new report are worthy of study in themselves.—Buffalo Times.

The Perambulating Showcase

By HERBERT KAUFMAN
Author of "Do Something! Be Something!"

THE newspaper is a huge shop window, carried about the town and delivered regularly into thousands of homes, to be examined at the leisure of the reader. This shop window is unlike the actual plate glass showcase only in one respect—it makes display of descriptions instead of articles.

You have often been impressed by the difference between the decorations of two window-trimmers, each of whom employed the same materials for his work. The one drew your attention and held it by the grace and cleverness and art manifested in his display. The other realized so little of the possibilities in the materials placed at his disposal, that unless some one called your attention to his mediocrities you would have gone on unconscious of their existence.

An advertiser must know that he gets his results in accordance with the skill exercised in preparing his verbal displays. He must make people stop and pause. His copy has to stand out.

He must not only make a show of things that are attractive to the eye but are attractive to the people's needs, as well.

The window-trimmer must not make the mistake of thinking that the showiest stocks are the most salable. The advertiser must not make the mistake of thinking that the showiest words are the most clinching.

Windows are too few in number to be used with indiscretion. The good merchant puts those goods back of his plate glass which nine people out of ten will want, once they have seen them.

The good advertiser tells about goods which nine readers out of ten will buy, if they can be convinced.

Newspaper space itself is only the window, just as the showcase is but a frame for merchandise pictures. A window on a crowded street, in the best neighborhood, where prosperous persons pass continually, is more desirable than one in a cheap, sparsely settled neighborhood. An advertisement in a newspaper with the most readers and the most prosperous ones, possesses a great advantage over the same copy, in a medium circulating among persons who possess less means. It would be foolish for a shop to build its windows in an alleyway—and just as much so to put its advertising into newspapirs which are distributed among "alley-dwellers."

WATERTOWN'S GARBAGE COSTLY

The Watertown Times says the city finds it necessary to pay $2,700 a year for garbage collection. Colorado Springs, a city slightly larger, receives nearly $1,500 a year from the garbage collectors for the privilege of collecting the refuse. The comparison of conditions has aroused considerable interest on the part of local persons who study sanitary problems, and P. H. Wilmott, president of the board of health of Watertown, wrote to the health department of Colorado Springs, asking for information relative to the collection there. The reply follows:

"City of Colorado Springs,
"Office of Health Department.
"October 5, 1915.

"Mr. P. H. Wilmott, Pres.,
"Board of Health,
"Watertown, N. Y.

"Dear Sir:

"Our garbage contract is for a period of four years Contractors Messrs. Staley and Babcock agreed to remove all garbage from the city limits in accordance with the city health ordinances. Garbage is sterilized by direct heat before being fed to hogs. Previous to year 1914 city paid the contractors $1,200.00 per year for removing garbage and same was fed to hogs without being sterilized, however, city prohibited the sale of garbage fed hogs in local markets. When this contract expired bids were asked for and the contract awarded to the highest bidder, the above mentioned contractors, who agreed to pay the city $1,440 per year for the privilege of removing all table refuse from the city.

"Under separate cover am mailing you one of our books containing health ordinances, which will give you some idea of the way we govern the handling of garbage in this city.

"Yours truly,
(Signed) "Mmar R. Gillett, M. D.,
"Health Officer."

Persons in Watertown who are interested in them atter are of the opinion that if publicity is given to the matter it may result in someone undertaking the collection, who would dispose of the garbage in the scientific manner employed in the western city with the result that the city would receive pay from the collectors It is now pointed out that it is an acknowledged fact of sanitary engineering that garbage, properly handled, has a commercial value, which can be figured with by farmers and others.

For cuts of all kinds, galls, calks, nail in the foot, sores and kicks, use Hanford's Balsam. It is guaranteed. Always have a bottle in your stable. Many large horse owners buy it by the dozen.

PRESENT QUESTIONS

(O. B. Morey)

Now, in this broad land
Some women we find
Who don't want to vote,
But what's on their mind?

Their time's better spent
They think, I declare,
In back yard gossip
Their neighbors to tear.

Or else on the street
To display a new gown,
Or the latest in hats,
Quite the finest in town.

But wage-earning women
Are anxious to vote
And better their lot
By the ballot, they hope.

They meet opposition
From dealers in beer
And nay from the pulpit
Is dinned in their ear.

Rev. Cyrus T. Brady,
From his big chesty throat
Says, "it's an insult to God
To give women the vote."

The liquor men are worrying,
Their hearts quake with fear.
Give women the vote
We can't sell our beer.

And over the fence
I hear Satan yell,
"Give women the vote
There'll be no use for hell."

So sensible people,
You surely can see
That rum dealers,
Preachers and devil agree.

Now, if this combine
You wish to be broke,
On November the second
Give women the vote.

- SEE both sides in actual battle where intrepid operators braved death itself to let you know both facts.
- SEE the blowing up of bridges, batteries wheeling into action and the steady pounding of guns, the biggest seige guns in the world.
- SEE droves of women and children trudging painfully along the highway leading from their ruined homes to unknown lands.
- SEE the ruins of Louvain and the wreck of St. Peter's—cornice, capital and arabesque laid low.
- SEE Albert of Belgium and his queen, Elizabeth—he leading men to battle, she helping the wounded, who have been brought in off the field.
- SEE British naval guns on armored trains in action, armored motor cars and English motor busses pressed into service.
- SEE wondrous Zeppelins lurking over French towns and hornet-like aeroplanes on scout duty or brought to earth.
- SEE Belgians, Germans, French, Russians, Austrians, East Indians and Africans—humanity from three-quarters of the globe—in war's convulsions.
- SEE the shells of German siege guns as they burst over Antwerp or find their mark in other doomed Belgian cities.
- SEE the Kaiser's seasoned troops enter Brussels, lean and lank as greyhounds after the long campaigns before Liege and Namur
- SEE the actual formal surrender of the gallant Belgians defenders to the conquering Germans.
- SEE wounded men attended by priests and Red Cross nurses on the field of battle and in improvised hospitals.
- SEE pictures taken on the British warship shelling Slype, then the scene ashore with buildings struck and bursting into flame.
- SEE the gallant Belgian Lancers—160 ride out of cloud of dust into hail of bullets—and only 38 return.
- SEE what the Cressy, Aboukir and Hogue looked like after the naval engagement.

PICTURES SHOW HORRORS OF WAR

The New York Sun motion pictures of the European war to be shown at The Quirk Friday afternoon and evening, under the auspices of The Evening Times, have eclipsed in interest any other feature pictures ever shown in this country, as evidenced by the crowds that thronged the theatres where they have been presented.

The pictures are absolutely neutral and all nationalities and sympathizers have found them of enthralling interest.

The audience sits spell bound before the shadow spectacles of marching hosts, flaming cannon, exploding bridges and crumbling cities. Those who witness the pictures obtain as accurate conception of the horrors of war. The romantic side of the conflict is portrayed in the charges of Bulgarian lancers and of the Bavarian cavalry.

The fight of Belgian, British and French armies through Belgium before the advancing hosts of victorious Germans is shown in a series of splendid pictures, and one of the most interesting spectacles of all is that of the surrender of a company of German infantry to the French.

The review of the German troops by the kaiser, with the portrayal of the goose-step of the soldiers as they pass is ar evelation that gives a comic touch to the sinister aspects of the war.

Those who see the picture will become firm opponents to any move that will involve this country in the war. Such devastation, horrors, life-consuming struggles and waste of resources are to be avoided almost at any cost.

The Quirk offers continuous performances, from 2 to 10:30 o'clock, at 5 and 10 cents admission.

THREE MASSES TO BE PERMITTED NOVEMBER 2

Catholic clergymen this year and hereafter on All Souls day, Nov. 2, may each say three masses. Pope Benedict XV has granted this privilege on account of the great loss of life in the European war.

The priests of the diocese of Syracuse will probably during the week receive from Bishop Grimes a copy of the new apostolic constitution relating to the new sacerdotal privilege. It is of universal application and in perpetuity. No priest may receive any pecuniary offering for the masses said for the war's victims. The pontiff has decreed that aside from praying for the souls of those sent into eternity in the present war, the celebrant shall pray for all who perish in war and who have fallen because of war since the Christian era began and onward.

The war has seriously interfered with church administration in Belgium, France and other countries, sacred edifices being destroyed, priests and nuns killed and foundations for masses lost probably forever. The papal decree of gratuitous masses for the dead was the result of the pope's sympathy for the afflicted. Total ruin exists in scores of districts and no record has been left from which bishops could arrange for the continuance of stipulated services. The earthquakes in Italy were another cause of destruction of church property and records, as were also the alienation of some Catholic churches in France.

For Sale—Cozy little home near Chocolate factory, 6-room house with water and gas, large lot several fruit trees. Bargain if sold before November 1st.

PRAISE CHICKS QUITE EARLY

New York.—The chickens of New York—pardon, the poultry of New York—not what you mean, but the regular cluckers and strutters, are to be bigger and better from every stand point, if the State College of Agriculture, at Cornell, has its determined way. A breed testing station has been installed there, and, according to the longest bulletin the writer ever has read on the subject of chickades. New York is to see some chickens it will not soon forget.

Many will recall the case of Toby Shay's hen. It was he who explained:

'I had a pretty little hen,
The minister he ate her—
She left no weeping parents, for
They were an incubator."

But at Cornell things are quite different. Ten carefully selected hens, having the full possession of their faculties and being fairly interested in their work, are to be taken from approved farms and trap nested for a year. Then other farmers, whose methods of hen raising are approved, will be allowed to send in the best of their specimens, which will be mated to strong vitality, high pedigreed Cornell male birds. During the breeding season chicks from these matings will be leg banded and shipped to the owners.

It has been arranged to mate the choice males from the college flock with none but the best of egg type hens, and the result will be that New York State will be bombarded, so to speak, with eggs.

Thec ircular received yesterday came from one of the most prolific and garrulous presses imaginable, but the pithy point of the matter was that the hens of New York are to be the classiest in the Union when the mating season ends. Eome very high record, long period laying hens are certain to grace the egg barren coops of the Empire State.

PLENTY OF EMPLOYMENT FOR WORKINGMEN

The Chamber of Commerce Employment Bureau has had frequent calls for help within the past few days. At present one application is in from an employer who wants at least ten men for farm work.

A former Fultonian now employed in gun making in Connecticut and who is spending a few days in Fulton says there is absolutely no reason why anybody should be out of work. Hundreds of untrained men are being placed in factories in shell assembling and these men earn a minimum of $2.50 a day. When they become more proficient their wages rapidly increase.

NEWSPAPER ADS ARE BUSINESS LIGHTS

Philadelphia, Pa.—Newspaper advertising was said by R. H. Durbin, president of the Poor Richard Club, to be the electric current which carries light to the business world, in an address today before members of the Walnut Street Business Association.

Applause from 121 retail merchants at the luncheon greeted the statement that every dealer could by persistent and concistent advertising in the right kind of newspaper medium increase his sales, give better service to the customer and decrease the sum now required by non-advertisers for the conduct of their business.

Hanford's Balsam of Myrrh should be kept in every stable.

MRS. FRANCES KIBBIE

Mrs. Frances Kibbie, 76, died late yesterday afternoon at the home of her son Albert Kibbie in Maple ave., this city.

Mrs. Kibbie is survived by two sons, Albert and George Kibbie, of this city and four daughters, Mrs. Romania Kimball, of Constantia, N. Y., and Mrs. Roy Miller, Mrs. William Vickery and Mrs. Vene Martin, of this city.

The funeral will be held Friday afternoon from the home of her daughter, Mrs. William Vickery, 213 W. 3rd st. Burial will be made at Mt. Adnah.

SUFFRAGE TALK SHOCKS AND ANGERS HEARERS

Yonkers.—The Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady, author and until recently rector of a wealthy parish in Mount Vernon, has stirred up a lively hornet's nest in Yonkers through his address opposed to woman's suffrage. The residents here, principally men, expressed much indignation yesterday that Mr. Brady should give an address on feminism and sex problems in the plainest kind of language when it was understood that he was to give arguments against women voting.

Mr. Brady is said to have handled a delicate subject without gloves and in such a thorough matter that many parents said if they had known he was to do so they would not have taken their daughters to St. Andrew's Memorial Episcopal church on Sunday night. These persons protesting against the nature of the address are among the wealthiest residents of Yonkers.

MR. AND MRS. JOHN SOMERS LEAVE FOR CALIFORNIA

A large number of persons met at the O. & W. station this morning to bid farewell to Mr. and Mrs. John Somers, who left for California.

The last one of a series of farewell receptions was given to the visitors last night at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Bert Slawson, in W. 2nd st. Thirty-five guests played cards during the evening and enjoyed refreshments later.

Mr. and Mrs. Somers' young son received several gifts, among them being a bag containing 100 pennies. Pennies are scarce in the section of California where the young man lives and he was highly pleased with the gift.

ERWIN—PRATT

A very pretty wedding occurred at high noon today at the home of the bride, 320 Cayuga st., where Miss Olive M. Pratt became the wife of Mr. Nelson E. Erwin of Mexico. The wedding was a quite one, as only the immediate relatives and friends of the couple were present. The Rev. H. D. Holmes, pastor of the State street church officiated.

Promptly at 11:30 the bride-elect and groom-elect entered the parlors, which were prettily decorated with evergreens, autumn leaves and hydrangeas and, standing before a floral altar were made man and wife.

The bride was dressed in white crepe de chene and carried a bouquet of white carnations. She was attended by Miss Elsie Grandjean. Mr. William Erwin, atended the groom. A dainty dinner was served at the conclusion of the ceremony, the waitresses being Miss Florence Rappole and Miss Clara Smith.

At the conclusion of a brief honeymoon trip Mr. and Mrs. Erwin will live on a farm near Mexico village.

The out of town guests included:

Mrs. Louis Tallman, and Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Erwin parents of the groom of Mexico and Mrs. Jennie Erwin and Mr. and Mrs. Frank Ferguson of Oswego.

FESSENDEN—RYDER

Friends of Dr. C. L. Fessenden of South 1st st., were surprised last night upon hearing that the physician had returned from an out of town visit with a bride. Mrs. Fessenden was formerly Miss Louise W. Ryder, of Roanoke, Va., and the marriage is the culmination of a friendship lasting a number of years. The couple were married in Towanda, Pa., Monday by the Rev. A. E. Hall of that place. They were accompanied here by Mrs. C. M. Ryder, the bride's mother, who will remain here for some time before returning to her home.

Seventy-Two Cases Will Be Arraigned Before Judge Coville

The October term of the Supreme Court ended today. It was a short session, due more than likely to the workings of the Workmen's Compensation law, which removes from the courts all negligence actions. This leaves the calendars bare of important cases and results in cases of smaller moment being listed. The closing term has been in progress three weeks and has sat but a few full days.

When court opened yesterday the action of Charles L. Millis and wife against Thomas O. Turner and wife, for $253 damages for alleged trespass was called. The parties are owners of adjoining property in the town of Scriba and it is claimed by Mr. Millis that in July last cattle owned by Mr. Turner broke down fences on the line and trampled over and damages one acre of oats, one acre of potatoes two acres of buckwheat and three acres of corn.

Mr. Turner claims that it was the duty of the plaintiff to maintain the fences along the line, also that no measure of actual damages has ever been made and that the property was not examined by the fence viewers of the town of Scriba to ascertain such damages. He asks that the complaint be dismissed with costs.

Grand Jury's Findings

The Grand Jury at noon yesterday handed up a total of 72 indictments, and on motion of District Attorney Culkin Judge Ross remanded all of them to the County Court. Arrangements will be made before Judge Coville at the Court House, Oswego, tomorrow at 2 p. m.

The following indictments were found against persons now in custody:

Charles W. Armstrong, unlawfully entering a building with intent to commit larceny.

Harry Jennings, grand larceny, 2nd degree.

Chas. Guernsey, Bert Guernsey and Ora Guernsey, burglary, 3rd degree and grand larceny, 2nd degree.

Miles Staley and Clyde Staley, burglary 3rd degree and petit larceny, and grand larceny, and having and carrying concealed weapons, in violation of section 1997 of penal law.

Zecariah Wolfe, assault 1st degree and attempt to commit suicide.

Frank Baker, burglary 3rd degree and petit larceny.

Joseph Kiola, burglary 3rd degree and grand larceny, 2nd degree.

James Savage, burglary 3rd degree and petit larceny.

Charles Green, criminal assault 1st degree.

John Sharra, attempt to commit criminal assault 1st degree and assault 2nd degree.

Neil Woods, grand larceny 2nd degree and operating a motor vehicle while in an intoxicated condition.

Alexander Ward and Philo Carpenter, burglary 3rd degree and petit larceny.

Dominick Nicolo, violation of liquor tax law.

Charles Dion, assault 2nd degree.

Palmer Slaver, burglary, 3rd degree and petit larceny.

Apanacio Martinez, attempt to commit criminal assault 1st degree and assault 2nd degree.

No indictments having been found against Mabel Rosencrans on a charge of adultery, and Michael Wozynto, assault, second degree, they were ordered released from custody.

The following presentments commendatory of District Attorney Culkin and Sheriff Buck were made by the grand jury:

"We, as members of this grand jury, wish to commend the District Attorney for the efficient and swift way in which he has handled the great volume of business that has been presented to us at this term of court, and his courteous treatment of everyone who has had business before us and also in his advice to the grand jurors.

"We, as members of this grand jury, wish to commend Sheriff Buck on the efficient way in which he is handling the affairs of his office and in his management of the county jaill and farm, and upon the cleanliness of the jail andf arm buildings, also we wish to commend the turnkey, George Simons, for the sanitary manner in which the entire jail and surroundings are kept."

BAR ASSOCIATION TO MAKE INVESTIGATION

Oswego.—A special report dealing with the relations between the Oswego Mercantile Agency, Inc., and Justice of the Peace John J. White was handed down by the Grand Jury, which finished its yabors yesterday. Justice Ross upon receiving the report directed the clerk to present a certified copy to the President and Secretary of the Oswego County Bar Association saying that the matter should be investigated by that organization.

The Grand Jury's findings were in part as follows:

"Among other things, it appears that Justice White is a member of the Oswego County Bar and that on the 25th day of June, 1915, he issued body executions against three of the Justices of the Appellate Division of the Fourth Department; that there were no judgments against the Justices in question, and that said body executions were procured by an employe of the Oswego Mercantile Agency, Inc., for the express purpose of showing how easy it was for said agency to procure body executions in said Court.

"A numbeer of other irregularities and improper practices, not amounting to crime, also appear to exist and to have existed for some time, which in our opinion tend to defeat the rights of litigants, more especially defendants.

"We desire to go emphatically on record to the effect that the procedure of this Justice's court should be reformed: that such reformation is necessary in order to conserve the rights of citizens."

SEES TAX PLOT IN BASIC LAW

Talmage Warns Taxpayers Against New Constitution.

PLAN TO OUST ASSESSORS.

Article 10 Could Create Board of Tax Czars at Albany and Divert Taxes to Other Districts—Home Rule Principle Violated.

Albany, Oct. .—Calling upon every taxpayer and assessor above the Bronx to defend the principle of home rule in taxation by opposing article 10 of the proposed state constitution, De Witt C. Talmage, for thirteen years an assessor in Suffolk county, today wrote an open letter describing the harmful intent of this tax section, which he charges the real estate interests of Greater New York have pushed through the constitutional convention. Not only may a state tax board wrest from local assessors most of their present powers under the proposed section, he declares, but taxes collected under such a centralized system may be applied to other districts than those in which they are paid. Mr. Talmage's letter follows:

East Hampton, N. Y., Oct. 15, 1915.

Dear Sir—I have taken the liberty of writing you as a former assessor, having served as such in my town for thirteen years, to call your attention to the pending constitutional amendment relative to taxation, being article 10, and which is to be submitted as a separate proposition to the voters at the ensuing election.

The intent and purpose of the amendment, although this fact does not appear on its face, is to invest the legislature with the constitutional right and power to take away from the local assessors the right to assess personal property of the individual, and the real and personal property of all public service corporations, and place such right in a state board of assessors at Albany.

Under section 2 of article 10 of the present constitution it has been determined by the courts that it is the right and function of the local assessors to assess the real and personal property within their districts and that the legislature cannot deprive them of this right, the latest decision of the court of appeals (not yet reported) on this subject being People ex rel Village of Pelham versus Town of Pelham, and an earlier case, People versus Raymond, 37 N. Y., page 428. To overcome and nullify this it is provided in the proposed tax amendment, article 10, section 2, that "the legislature shall prescribe how taxable subjects shall be assessed and provide for officers to execute laws relating to the assessment and collection of taxes, any provision of section 2 of article 13 of this constitution to the contrary notwithstanding."

This section 2 of article 13 of the proposed constitution is, under the present constitution, section 2 of article 10, just above mentioned. This clearly indicates the intent and purpose of the amendment, and if there is any doubt as to whether it does or not, a reference to the record of the debate on the subject in the constitutional convention settles it beyond the shadow of a doubt.

Proof From Record Quoted.

Mr. Martin Saxe, chief sponsor for this proposed tax amendment, and the present chairman of the state board of tax commissioners, was one of the delegates to the constitutional convention, and on page 948 of the record of that convention he is quoted as saying:

"Now, while I said that there was no tax provision in the contsitution, there is, however, a provision which is a serious obstruction to the development of any proper system of tax administration. I refer to section 2 of article 10, the so called home rule provision. Now, while that section refers to local officers, city, county, town and village officers, and says nothing about taxation, the fact is that the local assessor is a local officer and is protected by that section of the constitution, and the functions which he exercises, to wit, the function of assessing property, cannot be taken away from him by the creation of some other officer to perform that duty."

Again, on page 949, Mr. Saxe stated, relative to an act doing away with the village assessor in the county of Westchester and placing the functions of the village assessor in the town assessor, that—

"The question of the constitutionality of that act was at once raised, and only recently, I think last month, the court of appeals decided the Westchester county act was unconstitutional because the legislature could not take away from the village assessor functions to assess property locally.

"So you see, at the very start of the idea of the centralization of assessment we are blocked in this state by the provisions of section 2 of article 10.

"So the underlying purpose of the article reported by the committee on taxation is to open up the home rule provision so as to at least permit of the centralization idea in counties so far as the assessment of real estate is concerned."

Again, on the same page, Mr. Saxe says:

"Personal property today—that is, the great mass of it—exists in an intangible form rather than in a tangible form, and the local assessor is practically incapacitated from assessing personal property as it ought to be assessed."

And again on page 953:

"We are seeking by this article to untie the hands of the legislature. In that respect, with the modification that we are tying them by limiting them to county lines so far as the assessment of the real property is concerned. So far as the assessment of personal property is concerned it is left entirely with the legislature to work out such measure and such decision with respect to that class of property as it sees fit unhampered by the so called home rule provision."

Again on pages 1010-11 Mr. Saxe says:

"So the purpose of this provision of the proposed article is to make it possible if desirable to put into the hands of the state authorities the taxation of personal property in any of its forms. By this section 2 of this article we have taken away from the local assessors these functions which have clearly been pointed out by Judge Vann as being practically constitutional functions under the present constitution."

Again on page 1053 he says:

"Now, we want to make it possible to have a central body assess all the property of designated classes of public service corporations. We went to make it possible to centralize the assessment of the real estate of those corporations which otherwise would still have to be assessed locally under section 3 of this article, because it is real estate within a tax district."

Again on page 1175 he says:

"What this section does is this: It is true it abrogates the home rule provision so far as the assessment of personal property is concerned, but with respect to the assessment of real estate it re-enacts the home rule provision except that it permits the county assessment where they want it."

Again on page 1178:

"All that this proposal does is to make it possible for the state to assess personal property directly. It simply permits something which cannot be done under the present constitution because of the home rule provision contained in section 2, article 10, and the courts have repeatedly pointed that out, and we are simply trying to get around the situation made by section 2 of article 10, so far as local assessors or local officials charged with duties relating to the assessment and collection of taxes are concerned."

Calls Assessors Picayune.

Again, on page 1780, Delegate C. A. Webber, another advocate of this amendment, said:

"Now, that is all we are seeking to do, is to wipe out that little picayune officer (assessor), not absolutely, but permissibly, if the people want to do it."

Again, on page 1794, where Delegate Stanchfield asks if it is to be understood that the language of this amendment means the conferring of the right on the legislature to authorize the state to go into a county and assess the value of trunk line railroads as against the right of the local board of assessors to do so, and, if that be so, would the state authority assume the right to assess the valuation of the said railroads through the counties that they traverse, and assert the right to apportion, as between the counties, the share of tax that would result from the entire assessment?

In reply thereto Mr. Saxe, on page 1795, said:

"Mr. Chairman, in answer to the inquiry, I would say frankly that it would be possible."

This means that if in your district there are lines of railway, the legislature may autherize the state board of tax commissioners to assess this property and to apply the tax collected thereon to the use and purposes of your district or to any other district it may see fit.

These extracts frm the debate prove conclusively how broad the effect of this amendment is and how unrestricted the power of the legislature will be under it if it is adopted, and what the intentions of the promoters of the measure unquestionably are.

The interests which have pushed this amendment through the constitutional convention expect to secure its adoption at the polls and are exerting every effort to that end, and, if adopted, hope to force through the next legislature the necessary legislation to carry out their scheme of taxation. The fact that it is violative of the principle of home rule is contrary to the provisions of the present constitution and of the decisions thereunder, and that it deprives the local assessors of some of their principal functions which they have exercised for generations makes no difference to the advocates of this measure. They are acting in the interests of the large owners and operators of real estate in the city of New York, who seek to compel the owners of personal property, no matter how small in value, to help them bear the burden of taxation and thereby reduce the amount of taxes they are required to pay. If successful the state board of assessors will make the valuation of all personal property and all property, real and personal, of public service corporations, regardless of the local assessors, and apply the tax collected thereon to the district in which the property is situated, or to some other district, as they may see fit.

To make such assessment it will be necessary for each individual and public service corporation to file with such state board of assessors a complete list of their personal property as to individuals, and real and personal property as to public service corporations.

We believe that if the purposes of the amendment are thoroughly explained to the taxpayers of the state it will be rejected by a tremendous majority. The power conferred by this amendment is far too great to be lodged with one man or any particular body of men.

There is no question but that the local assessors are best qualified to determine values and are more familiar with local conditions and the financial condition of their constituents than the members of any state board at Albany can be. Yours very truly,

DE WITT C. TALMAGE.

TAXES TRY OHIO AND CALIFORNIA

People Pay on Property In Home; Farm and Office.

BASIC LAW LIKE ARTICLE 10

Proposed Constitutional Tax Section May Subject New Yorkers to Same State Inquisition — Farmers, Merchants and Householders Here Object.

Albany, Oct. .—That the farmers of Ohio and California are taxed on everything in their houses, barns and fields under a constitutional tax section similar to article 10 of the proposed state constitution in New York is shown by tax lists from these states, that have been received today at the headquarters of the Home Rule Tax association at 44 State street, in this city. Merchants are also made to list and pay personal taxes upon every cash register, typewriter and bit of office furniture used in their business, while every one in these states who owns a dollar's worth of securities or cash is compelled to show it for taxation purposes on these lengthy and complicated blanks which are made public records. In addition, it appears that every home must make public every bit of its contents, to be taxed on every stick of furniture, piano and even the family watchdog.

Copies of these tax lists from the states where the adoption of a constitutional provision that has much the same effect as that which the people of the Empire State will vote on under "question 3" on Election day, are being sent throughout this state from the state headquarters of this association, in order to inform the taxpayers of some of the possibilities in case they fail to vote "No" against the tax section which the real estate crowd below the Bronx have been interested in having passed at the recent constitutional convention. A study of the actual results of such a scheme of taxation as is proposed in this state is already bringing to the opponents of article 10 pledges of support from farmers, merchants, bankers and householders all over the state.

In the popular three-piece effect is this skirt of plain cloth, with side pleats. It closes at one side under a side pleat.

Pleats always change the plain effect of a separate skirt and are invariably becoming. This three-piece model meets all of the fashionable demands because it lends itself to development in the smart materials, is of convenient length and proper width. It closes at the left side under a pleat. The plain belt adds to the trim effect of the skirt, but this may be entirely transformed by the addition of a bit of embroidery or braiding. For medium size the skirt requires 2½ yards 54-inch material.

If one has never had any previous experience with cutting out a skirt there is surely nothing about this model to cause misgivings. The first step is to carefully fold the material; then place into position first the back gore of the skirt. The front edge of the pattern will rest along the selvage of the material and the side edge on the fold. It will be necessary to piece the sides to give the required width, so the piecing is placed opposite the front gore and just before the belt. The front gore is laid on a lengthwise fold of the goods.

If desired shorter than shown in the illustration cut off the lower edges of the gores on single or double "oo" perforations.

Fur is so fashionable this year that it is needless to suggest it as a finish for the bottom of the skirt in the event of further trimming being desired.

Meats For Dinner.

SINCE regular roast is higher than at any time and requires prolonged heat, try this:

Buy a "flank steak," have it trimmed and scored well. Heat some butter and fresh lard together, place the steak in this until well browned, remove and put in the same weight in fresh sliced onions, fry these to a golden brown, place all together in a deep iron fry pan, the onions on top, and cover with water, salted and peppered to taste. Keep this boiling over the small gas burner for an hour or until the water is all evaporated and the meat again begins to fry. Serve with onions on top and garnish the dish. The meat will be tender as chicken and your family will ask for more.

Braised Shoulder of Lamb.—Take a small shoulder of lamb, season with salt and pepper, boning it, and tying it up into shape. Place it in a pan with a slice of onion and a carrot and two ounces of butter or clarified dripping and let it all fry together for six minutes; now moisten with sufficient stock to cover the shoulder and let it simmer for forty-five minutes. Meantime cut three medium sized turnips into balls, put them in a sauce pan with one ounce of butter and a teaspoonful of sugar sprinkled over them; place them in the oven till nicely colored and glazed.

Baked Ham and Sweet Potatoes.—A delicious meat dish can be made by baking ham and sweet potatoes together. Grease the bottom of a round baking dish and place a slice of ham about half an inch thick in it. Pepper the ham and sprinkle a few cloves over the meat; then spread mashed sweet potatoes over meat about an inch and a half in thickness. Put butter, salt and pepper on potatoes, add another slice of ham, another layer of potatoes and top off with a third slice of ham. Bake in a rather hot oven for half an hour, or until the meat is tender. Serve hot, meat and potatoes together. This is an excellent dish for late summer and fall.

Take two chickens a year old, a quarter of a pound of bacon, a carrot cut fine, an onion cut fine, a quart of water and a herb bouquet. Clean the chickens and truss as for roasting; then dredge inside and out with salt and pepper, cut bacon in strips about the width of a match and cover the bottom of the stewpan. Lay over this carrots and onions, then another layer of bacon. Put the chickens in, cover well and set inside of hot oven. After twenty minutes add boiling water and herbs. Let it cook for two hours, turning the chickens once and basting occasionally. Put the chickens in a hot dish and boil down the gravy, skim off the grease, pass through a sieve, pour over the chickens and serve.

CABBAGE SALAD.

NEW cabbages are plentiful and cheap. People who do not go in for the more expensive salads should try them, and those who have had plenty of lettuce, cucumber, romaine and other winter salads will relish the cabbage for a change. This member of the mustard tribe is more easily digested raw than cooked unless the cooking be very deftly done.

Cabbage contains a volatile oil, rich in hydrogen and sulphur, which is wasted in careless cooking.

To Prepare the Cabbage.

Having chosen a firm head of cabbage, removed the outer leaves and halved it, one soaks it in cold water for an hour. Then the water is shaken out and it is very finely shredded and cut into short lengths. Then it is ready for the dressing, which may be one of two sorts, the simple French dressing or the one made of eggs and milk. It may be served after the meat course or with it, as some prefer. In either case it must be served cold.

Egg and Milk Dressing.

To make the egg and milk dressing beat one egg and add a mixture of one tablespoonful of flour, one teaspoonful of sugar, a quarter teaspoonful of mustard. Pour a cupful of milk into the whole, put it on the fire and bring it to a boil. When it has boiled add a half cupful of vinegar and salt to taste. Stand aside to cool. At serving time mix it with the dried, cold, shredded cabbage.

For this everything used, including the bowl and the wooden fork, should be cold. These are the proportions: After rubbing the bowl with half an onion or half a clove or garlic, put in half a teaspoonful of salt and a saltspoonful of pepper and add gradually while rubbing with a wooden fork six tablespoonfuls of olive oil. When the salt is dissolved add slowly a tablespoonful of vinegar (plain or tarragon) or lemon juice. Beat well and it is ready to pour over the cold, shredded dried cabbage or any other green salad.

FARMERS MAKE HOMES UGLY

Beautiful Scenes Are All Too Frequently Spoiled by Lack of Building Plans.

To reach the home of a prosperous farmer in a corn belt community one passes back from the road between cornfields for 80 rods. The approach to the house is through the cowlot. The woodpile is also there, near the front gate. From the parlor window one looks out over the hoglot toward the barn. To get a view of grassland, trees and real scenery one must go to the kitchen door, which opens toward the rolling pasture and the wood beyond. But even there one must look over the array of chicken coops close by the house.

If this house had been near the road it could have overlooked a wide expanse of beautiful prairie-flanked woods, says the Breeder's Gazette. Another home in that section is beautifully placed about 100 yards back from the highway on a broad knoll overlooking a 60-acre sparsely timbered hill pasture lying across the road. But unappreciative of the glorious natural view, the builder of that homestead put the horsebarn to the left and the cowbarn to the right of the house and both nearer the road than the house.

We are told by landscape gardeners that it is well to have the view from the home framed in, but old barns are not good picture framing material. Trees and shrubs are better. There is an evident lack of plan to blame for most of these ugly farm homesteads. Location and natural scenery are sometimes very attractive, but the effect is spoiled by poor arrangement of buildings and enclosures. Perhaps some farmers do not pay enough attention to the beauties about them. Certainly there are great differences in farmsteads.

On other farms the front of the house is the first thing seen from the road, and it is set about by trees in such a way as to frame a complete picture of it. Shrubs and trees are placed so as to leave desirable views as one looks from the porch. All blend with lawn and surroundings into one harmonious living picture. Barns and stock lots, chickens and vegetable garden are grouped back of the house. To each side of the house, flanking the road, are pastures or meadows of alfalfa or small grain. The distant view is unobstructed. The family enjoys, and to that extent owns, all it can see. There is more inspiration in a view of distant fields, woods and homesteads than in the contemplation of nearby pigpens and cowlots.

ATTRACTIVE DOORWAY

A white rambler (Dorothy Perkins) over a colonial doorway. The ramblers with their fragrant clusters of white, yellow, or crimson blossoms are among the most popular roses. They need no protection during the winter.

A Community's Job.

It is little use for the local editor to waste his lungs and sprain his spine on trying to boom a town when the citizens all stand around with their hands in their pockets and indifferently wait for something to turn up. If the capitalists or business men do not put their shoulders to the wheel and do a little boosting it is useless for the editor to try and boom things. He can write "boom" articles until he gets bald headed, but if the citizens themselves do not take hold and push the town will forever stick in the mud. Of what use is it for the local paper to suggest improvements and new enterprises if the suggestions are never acted upon? One man cannot boom a town. It requires the concerted action of the citizens. When one man shoulders a town and attempts to carry it there are always a lot of cranky kickers ready to jump on top of the load.—Valley Times.

TOWN PLANNING IN AUSTRALIA

Antipodeans Show Wise Interest in Subject and Profit by Experience of Olden Countries.

Australians are showing a wise interest in the subject of town planning and housing in general. The trouble with older countries has been that they have not begun to think much about improving housing conditions until housing conditions have got to be insufferably bad. Australia, being a young country, should be able to profit by the unfortunate example of other countries, and it is apparent that Australia is striving to do this.

Building, an Australian publication, devotes much space to this subject. Alluding, for example, to the direction of the movement in Victoria by the Town Planning and Parks' association, these activities are described as intelligent, enthusiastic and energetic. "The flow of active campaigning established," it appears, "threatens altogether to swamp the slum and its wedded evils beyond the hope of re-establishment.

"The association, very sensibly, is enlisting the sympathy and support of the masses by alert regard for their well being. The essentials of the movement bear directly on the existence of that section of the people whom circumstances have handicapped. This the association recognizes. Settled evils which primarily deny the common heritage of sunlight are being squelched. Conditions of living scarcely befitting the brute creation, but to which human flesh and blood are subjected, are being swept way as speedily as the ponderous arm of the law can be operated. In brief, the movement in Victoria, directed by the Town Planning and Parks' association, is making good.

"The association is making a special point of making plain the principles of town planning to those in the position of facilitating reform. For instance, the mayors and councilors of the municipalities and shires were recently circularized on the new and extensive powers conferred upon local governing bodies, by recent amendments of the act. A portion of that circular reads:

"'It is hoped that advantage will be taken at once of these powers—applied, perhaps, in conjunction with building regulations to avoid the creation of slum or insanitary areas. In this connection St. Kilda council has recently passed a by-law providing for a minimum area, devoted exclusively to open space, for each dwelling equal to at least eight-eighteenths of that occupied by dwelling and outhouses.'"

Microscopic Mechanism.

Mymecides, an ancient carver, was so proficient in microscopic mechanism that he made an ivory ship, with all its decks, masts, yards, rigging and sails, in so small a compass that it might have been hidden under the wing of a fly. He also made a chariot with four wheels and as many harnessed horses, which took up scarcely more room than the ship.

George Whitehead, an Englishman, made a ship, with all things pertaining to it, to move, as if it sailed, upon a table. "All hands were aloft, a woman made music [illegible] lute, and a little puppy cried [illegible] midship, all of which variety," says the old writer, "was pleasant and diverting."

VOTE FOR THE CONSTITUTION.

If state convention platforms mean anything as declarations of principles formulated after due conference it is the duty of loyal Republicans to vote for this constitution.

The campaign for the approval of that constitution should be treated just like a campaign for the election of a governor nominated by our party; just like any campaign which involves the assertion and maintenance of the established principles of the party; like a campaign for sound money or for the principle of protection.—Frederick C. Tanner, Chairman of the Republican State Committee.

Bismarck and the Reichstag.

This is how Bismarck started on his rise to place and power:

William I. had asked the reichstag for a grant to increase the army and had been refused. He wished to reorganize conditions and lengthen the service to three years, but his wishes were opposed in the house, in the country in general and by a large party at court. A minister was needed who could carry out the king's ideas (he was then king of Prussia) against the legislature, and Bismarck was appointed in 1857.

For four years he ruled without a budget, taking advantage of the omission in the constitution of Prussia, which did not specify what was to happen in case the crown and the houses could not agree on a budget. Bismarck's argument was that a legislature which refused to vote necessary supplies had laid down its proper functions and that the king must take over the responsibilities of government which it declined to exercise.—Philadelphia Press.

Things We Never Learned.

To some extent it is possible to go back and piece out the stitches dropped in the course of an education, only one is not allowed to go back so far as I desire. Roughly speaking, I should say that life does not allow one to relearn what one has failed to learn before sixteen, whereas it is the knowledge belonging to eight years and ten and twelve, after which I hunger and thirst. I wish some one would open a school for able minded but ignorant grownups. Believe me, enough of us could be found to attend, enough of us glad to jump down from college chairs, to leave our laboratories with their clutter of advanced research, our countinghouses with their problems, and glad! go to school, gladly learn once and forever how much nine times thirteen is, and build Vesuvius past and present out of clay, and follow out of doors some charming young lady who would tell us exactly what the birds and the wild waves are saying.—Winifred Kirkland in the Atlantic Monthly.

"Machine" Not Defective.

Edward Kelly of Olympia, Wash., was kicked by a mule, and in explaining to the state industrial insurance commission how he was injured he filled out part of the official form as follows:

"State part of machinery on which accident occurred."

Answer.—The hind part of a mule.

"Was the machinery in good working order?"

Answer.—Yes.

The commission failed to make any safety first recommendation, but allowed Kelly $[illegible] in settlement of his claim.

KEEP ASSEMBLY REPUBLICAN

Majority in Sympathy With the State Administration.

LEGISLATION IS NEEDED

To Complete the Restoration of Orderly Government Begun Last Year—New Constitution Must Be Made Effective.

The present Republican state administration has cleared off the indebtedness of four years of Democratic administration in less than one year. This is a record to be proud of and one that deserves the hearty indorsement of every taxpayer. The most emphatic indorsement that the taxpayers can give the administration will be the election of a strong Republican majority in the assembly of 1916, which will permit the entire rehabilitation of the state government.

The Civil Service Investigation.

The investigation of more than 16,000 places in the public service by the civil service committee of the senate with a view to eliminating unnecessary positions and correcting objectionable conditions will be completed in time for presentation to the next legislature, and as a result of this investigation it is expected that large savings can be made in many of the state departments. To insure such action a Republican majority of the assembly is absolutely essential. A Democratic majority in that branch of the legislature would use its utmost endeavor to nullify the results of this investigation and could be relied upon to block any remedial legislation.

Every Voter Interested.

Every voter in the state who is in sympathy with the aim of the present administration to restore orderly and efficient government should make it his particular duty on election day to vote for a Republican assemblyman and to urge his neighbors to do likewise.

Important Work For 1916 Assembly.

One of the most important duties of the legislature of 1916 will be the enactment of legislation to make operative the provisions of the new constitution.

The new constitution provides for the entire reorganization of the state government. State officers now elected will under the new constitution become appointive, and many departments now independent will be consolidated with other departments or abolished altogether. There will of necessity be an unusually large amount of statutory law to be enacted that will call for the best efforts of the most capable men that can be elected, men in sympathy with the state administration. A Democratic majority in the assembly would use its utmost endeavors to hamper the state administration and obstruct the passage of important administration measures.

Keep Tammany Out.

The election of a Republican majority in the assembly of 1916 is vitally important to the people who voted Tammany out of power last fall. A Democratic majority in the assembly means Tammany control of that branch of the legislature. The only candidates for Democratic leader in that body thus far announced are Martin G. McCue of the Sixteenth district of New York county and Charles D. Donohue, representing the Ninth district, both Tammany men. A Democratic majority would unquestionably mean a Tammany speaker and a Tammany organization throughout. This is perfectly evident when you stop to consider that the city of New York furnished a majority of the Democratic votes cast for governor last year and that forty-two of the forty-nine Democratic members in the present assembly are from that city.

Pointed Out by Speaker Sweet.

The importance of a Republican majority in the assembly of 1916 was pointed out by Speaker Thaddeus C. Sweet of the assembly of 1915 at the close of its session last April. He said: "The neglect to give attention to the legitimate business of the state, the failure to provide appropriations absolutely required, while incurring tremendous financial obligations, had driven the state almost to the verge of bankruptcy.

"The legislature of 1915 was strongly Republican in both branches, and before it finished its labors the muddle in which four years of Democratic administration had left the state's finances was cleaned up [illegible] and hard work. The legislature of 1916 has an equally hard task before it. The new constitution reconstructs the entire fabric of state government, and new statutory laws must be enacted to make the constitutional provisions operative. That will be the work of the coming session of the legislature. THE IMPORTANCE OF THIS WORK MAKES IMPERATIVE THE ELECTION OF A REPUBLICAN MAJORITY IN THE ASSEMBLY IF THE WORK OF RESTORING HONEST, ORDERLY AND EFFICIENT GOVERNMENT BEGUN THIS YEAR IS TO GO FORWARD TO COMPLETION."

SOUTHERN TIER OPPOSED.

Constitutional Tax Scheme Resented by Binghamton Newspapers.

That the people of the lower sections of this state are being aroused to fight the tax section of the proposed constitution is shown by the following editorial, which appeared in the Binghamton Press and Leader of Oct. 2, 1915:

Vote Against Question No. 3.

There is one feature in the taxation article of the proposed constitution which the voters of the state ought to know about, for it marks a new departure in the policy of taxation and directly concerns every taxpayer in the state and particularly concerns every farmer.

The proposed taxation article takes from the local authorities the right to assess and collect all personal taxes and confers that right upon state officials.

There may be favoritism and petty dishonesty in some places among local assessors, but in small towns they are personally known to their neighbors, and public opinion prevents any gross unfairness. Even in the cities they must come up for election and be held to an accounting by those they serve. But a state official, coming into a town or a country district where he knew no one and no one knew him, might easily make the assessment of personal property something it never had been before.

If a town assessor treats a farmer unfairly the property owner not only has his legal right to complain of the assessment, but he can make trouble for that assessor when he comes up for office again. But if the farmer has to make his complaint at Albany against a man he does not know and has no direct voice in selecting the way is open for a vast amount of petty oppression.

Putting the personal tax into the hands of a state commission would centralize a tremendous power at Albany. And even if that power were never used for political purposes it could be used to burden the farmer and other small owner whose personal property cannot be put in a safe deposit box and covered up with an affidavit.

But, worst of all, it violates the principle of home rule in its most vital aspect. If the small towns and country districts transfer to Albany the right to make all personal tax assessments they might as well be ruled from Albany. And if a city like Binghamton cannot control its own personal tax assessments it has been deprived of one of the essential functions of self government.

There may seem to be greater efficiency in that, but centralizing authority does not always mean efficiency. It is very likely that this tax proposal might open the way for increasing the revenues of the state. But it would make it easier to get those revenues from the country districts. It would take away forever the local control over all personal taxation and would centralize it at Albany. And if political influence were ever exerted upon tax officials this centralized system would have power to do immeasurable harm.

This taxation proposition will be submitted to the voters at the November election as question No. 3. It is not necessary to reject the entire work of the constitutional convention in order to defeat this proposal to increase the taxes of the farmer and the city man of moderate means.

The Binghamton Press believes that when the meaning of this proposal is understood by the voters they will be united in rejecting it.

More and more the autos speed Uncle Sam's mail to the interior, which is all right for the letters one wants in a hurry, but also unwelcome missives get there just the same.

Those who do not get a fair share of the music which is costing this country $[illegible],000 a year probably get more noise than is coming to them.

GERMANS REPULSED EAST OF RHEIMS

London.—Heavy German forces, attacking on a front of more than six miles to the east of Rheims today, drove through the first line trenches of the French.

Before the day was over, however, the French, by a vigorous counter-offensive, entirely expelled the Germans, who were driven back to their original trenches. The fruitless effort cost the Germans heavy losses, according to the Paris report.

Preceding the German attack their batteries bombarded the French lines heavily with asphyxiating shells and high explosives, accompanied by great clouds of chloral gas. The bombardment was carried out in the most minute detail and was terrific in its effect.

NATHAN STRAUS SEES PEACE IN PREPAREDNESS

New York.—"Power to prevent war can be achieved only by the most thorough preparedness," said Nathan Straus at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine last night. "And that is the overwhelming reason why American should have a powerful army, a strong navy and thorough equipment."

Mr. Straus suggested that every man rich enough to pay an income tax voluntarily contribute to war sufferers a sum equal to his tax.

The League adopted a resolution pledging itself to work for "greater contentment among men, the promotion of civic responsibility, and a spirit of loyal devotion to the national ideals, to the glory of God and the honor and welfare of our beloved country."

NAVY TO ASK FOR HALF OF APPROPRIATION

Washington. — Official announcement of the Navy's part in the Administration's billion-dollar national defense programme were made public tonight by Secretary Daniels.

They show that within five years it is proposed to spend $502,482,214 on construction of new ships, development of air craft and creation of a huge reseve of ammunition and guns.

The first two dreadnaughts to be constructed will be the largest and most powerful fighting ships ever built. They will cost $18,800.00 each.

RIGHT HAND SMASH ENDS COFFEY'S STAMINA

New York.—Frank Moran, of Pittsburg, the big heavyweight, who stood up twenty rounds with Jask Johnson before the latter lost the title to Jess Willard, proved himself to be about the best contender for the championship last night when he knocked out "Jim" Coffey, the idol of the Irish, in the third round of a scheduled ten round bout, at Madison Square Garden, before the biggest crowd that has seen a contest there in years. It was estimated that the bout drew five thousand dollars more than the Brown-Wells contest a couple of years ago when the record was set at $26,000.

It was a right hook to the jaw that did the trick and it was one of the most spectacular knockouts seen in ring history. Coffey was on his feet when it was stopped, but he had no idea where he was. Moran was just as surprised, possibly, as any one in the house at the sudden finish, and he stood like a novice, wondering what to do.

GERMAN TROOPS FAIL TO PIERCE BRITISH LINE

London.—The new British line is described in detail in a report by Field Marshal Sir John French received last night from the British headquarters in France. The report says the British are opposed by forty German battalions. Attacks near Hulluch have been repulsed.

"Since my communication of October 14 the artillery on both sides has been very active on our front south of La Bassee Canal," the report says. "The enemy has made a number of bombing attacks, all of which have been repulsed.

"The continped reports in the German communiques of the repulse of British attacks northeast of Vermelles have no foundation in fact. The positions where the fighting mentioned above has taken place would be more correctly described as southwest of Auchy Lez La Bassee, from which it is about fifteen hundred yards distant. Itl ies about three thousand yards northeast of Vermelles."

Suffrage Defeat Spurs the Leaders

Women Champions in This State Say Battle in Three Commonwealths Will Not Be Affected by Result in New Jersey, Nugent Controlled.

New York, Massachusetts and Pennsylvania suffragists redouble their efforts to win the franchise in November.

New Jersey women yesterday charged trickery and declared that anti-suffragists were tied up with James R. Nugent machine.

Revised figures show that the suffrage amendment was defeated by approximately 50,000.

Dr. Anna Howard Shaw declares that women must turn their efforts to obtaining Presidential and municipal votes and must work for a federal amendment.

New York.—Confronted by a majority of just about fifty thousand against their amendment, woman suffrage workers in New Jersey blame their defeat upon the skilled activity of the politicians, and have set to work building for a new campaign to abtain the right to vote. They declare that the suffragists in Massachusetts, Pennsylvania and New York should not be dismayed by the figures from New Jersey, first of the Eastern States to pass upon the suffrage amendment, but should proceed wih new energy on he principle that effective work for two weeks may win another result.

Complete figures for New Jersey will not be available for two or three days, but the most complete statistics available late last night indicated that the final coun on the majoriy would be very close o the fifty thousand mark. With scattering districts missing in a dozen of the twenty-one counies, he majority figures 48,000, and there seemed no doubt that this would be brought up eight hundred or nine hundred. The figures printed in yesterday's Herald said that the State would go against suffrage by fifty thousand.

The biggest vote against the women was rolled up in Essex county, in which are situated Newark, the largest city of the Sate, and the Oranges. Here the majority was 14,288 against. This was much larger than the women expected, but it was slightly under the predicted vote of the political leaders. Newark is the home of James R. Nugent, long the democratic "boss" of Essex and surrounding territory and he was avowedly set against the woman issue. He turned his machine loose against it and there was some surprise here and there that with all his resources he was not able to run up a still larger majority.

Britain Would Give Island to Greece

The Daily Telegraph announces that the British government has formally offered the island of Cyprus to Greece, to be handed over forthwith, if Greece agrees to take the field in support of the Quadruple Entente. The Daily Telegraph's Atens correspondent teltgraphs that the offer has created an excellent impression in Greece and is regarded as a substantial proof of the good will of Great Britain. The concession is to be made as soon as the Greeks perform their part of the engagement.

Cyprus is he third largest island in the Mediterranean, sixty miles from the coast of Asia Minor. It was administered until November 5, 1914, by Great Britain under a convention concluded with the Sultan of Turkey, at Constantinople in 1878, but on the outbreak of hostilities with Turkey on he former date the island was annexed. The High Commissioner, Major Sir J. E. Clauson, is assisted by an executive council. Cyprus has an area of 3,5584 square miles and a popjulation of nearly 300,000.

ALLIES AND SERBIANS HOLD BACK TEUTONS

London.—At the Serbian Legation last night denial was made that the Bulgarians had captured Vranja or had cut the Nish-Salonica Railroad, although the officials admitted that the Bulgarians occupied a ridge between Vranja and Rastovac which dominates the railway.

It was stated at the legation that, according to news just received, the Serbians were successfully resisting the invaders on all fronts and that, in spite of violent attacks, the advance of the Teutons and Bulgars was very slight.

Martin Donohue telegraphs to the Daily Chronicle from Rome that there is a rapid concentration of Russians on the Black Sea coast at points close to he Roumanian frontier for service in Bulgaria. The belief is general in Bucharest that the appearance of Russian troops in Bulgaria will be the signal for a general revolt against Ferdinand of Coburg and the dominion of the Germanophiles

The stubbornness with which the Serbians are opposing the Teutonic advance is shown by the fact that even in so flat a country as that on the south shores of the Danube below Semendria, and one which does not lend itself to natural defence, the total German drive in the last six days is measured by thed istance between Pozarevac and Bozevac, or exactly eight miles. This is hardly one mile a day.

GET THE HOOK AND THE HABIT; NEXT TUESDAY THE DAY

PROTECTION is the watchword of the New York State Motor Federation according to Secretary George C. Donahue and one phase of this branch of their work is that of protecting the highways as well as the highway users. Here we have several thousand miles of improved highways throughout the State of New York and little effort made to beautify them reports the Secretary. On Tuesday, October 26th, the Federation will hold its first annual Clean Up Day in New York State and all the Federation Clubs will aid in this movement.

Each club will appoint a Committee to take charge of mapping out the territory to be covered and delegating the members to certain roads. All advertising signs and everything obnoxious to users of the highways will be removed on this day. Special hooks can easiy be made so that one can very quickly remove a sign from a tree or post. Seven States have a law making it unlawful to post advertising signs within the limits of the highway. Signs nailed to trees, not only destroy them, but afford an excellent harboring place for insect pests. Furthermore, a highway posted indiscriminately with advertising signs is most unsightly.

On September 1st, 1915, the new law in the State went into effect and this statute gives the right to anyone to remove advertising signs from the highways; while it prevents the use of highways for such purpose. Let everyone read the law and then go out and "hook" one sign. But remember direction and warning signs are not in this class.

CARSON DECLARES EMPIRE IS UNITED

London.—Differences with his colleanges on the question of policy in the Near East which could not be reconciled, Sir Edward Carson told the House of Commons yesterday, was the sole cause for his resignation as Attorney eneral. His denial that matters of a personal or party nature had anything to do with his withdrawal from the Cabinet set at rest numerous conjectures regarding the reason for his retirement.

Sir Edward's statement was made from his old seat on the front opposition bench just after he had come from Buckingham Palace, where he had delivered to King George the seals of his office.

After expressing regret at the absence of the Premier, Mr. Asquith, and stating that for this reason he would give a briefer explanation than he had intended, Sir Edward said:—

"I am well aware of the difficulties under the existiig circumstances of making any full statement or of saying anything that might not be taken hold of as showing any signs of weakness or divergence in the main object we have in view—carrying the war at alll sacrifices to a final and conclusive issue. I need hardly say that upon that issue there is not and never has been either in the Cabinet or in this House orr in the country anl disagreement or divergence of opinion.

RUSSIANS EXPAND GALICIAN GAINS

London.—Field Marshal von Hindenburg and General Ruszky are locked in a death grapple for Riza that is even diverting interest from the momentuous operations in the Balkans. For while the eyes of the world have been fixed on the southeastern theatre of war the German bulldog, saying nothing and engaging in no spectacular battles, has been using up men and artillery in a constant hacking at the Russian lines covering the fort, until last night he was but little less than fifteen miles from the main part of the city.

Abandoning an active campaign against Dvinsk, which at all its stages was but a flank attack on Riga and the coast of the Riga Gulf, the field marshal nerly atwo weeks go shifted large groups of his army, concentrated a great train of artilllery and began his frontal assaults on the Russian line from Mitau to Friedrichstadt, on the Dvina Ricer. This front, forty miles in length, ran almost due east and west, thirty miles south of Riga and behind the Eckau and Misse rivers, with its right resting on the broad Aa and its left on the equally difficult Dvina.

Bringing up his reinforcements through the network of streams that unite near Mitau to form the Aa, Field Marshall von Hindenburg threw them against the opposing Russians from Gross Eckau to Friedrichstadt.

Stevenson Comes Out for Mr. Foster

Says Mr. Lewis Made Unfavorable Criticisms of Present Administration, Therefore He Favors and Picks to Win the Democratic Nominee.

Rumors to the effect that John W. Stevenson is not supporting the candidacy of Victor Lewis for mayor received corroboration yesterday when a Times reporter succeeded in interviewing the prominent West Sider. The many rumors afloat were based partly upon Mr. Stevenson's activity at the places of registration last Friday and Saturday and his open expressions favoring Mr. Foster as candidate for mayor.

In the interview yesterday Mr. Stevenson said:

"It is my intention to support Myron Foster, Democratic nominee for mayor of Fulton and I predict Mr. Foster's election by a comfortable majority."

Such a statement made by one of the Republican City committeemen stirs up a lot of interest in the rank and file of both leading parties, and especially among Mr. Stevenson's colleagues upon the committee, several of whom have been of the opinion that the leader's opposition to Mr. Lewis would be moderated as soon as registration had been completed.

But this did not occur, much to the chagrin of several members of the committee who attended the harmony meeting held in Myron Stranahan's office Monday evening, as Mr. Stevenson failed to appear at that meeting.

In continuing yesterday's conversation with The Times man, Mr. Stevenson said:

"It is not a personal matter that has prompted me to oppose the candidacy of Vic Lewis, but purely a matter of politics. I am a Republican, first, last, and all the time. I desire to be loyal to the party, and because of this, I have taken my present stand on the election of Vic Lewis as mayoralty candidate. Lewis, I can safely say, has on a number of occasions in the past made derogatory remarks upon the present city administration, which of course is Republlican. Also he did not show the proper spirit toward another mayor, John Boland. Because of these—showings of disloyalty to the Republlican party I do not bellieve Lewis to be the proper person to head our ticket.

"I could not be influenced to change my mind in the matter. I will lend my support to Myron Foster, because I think he is the logical man for the office. Mr. Foster, as an alderman, has always displayed the utmost zeal in protecting the interests of taxpayers. With the exception of mayor, I will support the entire Republican ticket. As long as my party has not made what I think the proper selection of a candidate for mayor, I desire, for the best interests of the city, to see the best man placed in that office, and that man I believe to be, Mr. Foster."

Motor Bus Service a Community Builder

The Retail Trade Division of the Chamber of Commerce during the last few weeks has been actively cooperating with Wilson & Scott in the proposal to establish a motor line between Hannibal and Fulton. Messrs. Wilson and Scott now have their application before the Common Council for permission to operate machines over certain city streets. If the council grants the request, the firm will at once apply to the Public Service Commission for the necessary consent to operate over the Hannibal road. The Retail Trade Division is interested in this proposal and is helping to complete the arrangements for making this line a reality, because the business men of Fulton believe that such a line with frequent service would cement the business relations now existing between Hannibal, Fairdale, Dexterville, Granby Center and the City of Fulton. It is a fact beyond dispute that a line of transportation, whether railroad, trolley, or motor, brings communities closer together, increases the service each can render to the other, and promotes more cordial relations generally. A transportation line is a connecting link. The fact that it is meeting with unqualified approval of a number of Fulton's business men is an indication that such a line is badly needed.

MOST IMPORTANT ELECTION

The election this year, though spoken of as an "off year," is an important one. For the citzen of New York it may well prove to be more important than the election next year, when a President and a Governor are to be chosen, for this year the voters are to decide whether the State shall be governed by an old, worn-out and costly constitution, or by an improved fundamental law. A President will serve but four years and a Governor but two, while the constitution is made for 20 years. The proposed constitution has in it the certainty of the saving of millions of dollars through the serial bond and the budget proposals. The combination of 150 departments into a mere handful is another innovation which would surely save money. Greater efficiency in the courts is a certain promise in the new constitution.

In fact, this autumn sees a great referendum in the State of New York and it is seldom that 10,000,000 people decide more important questions at one time than the people of this State will decide. There is not only the body of the constitution which requires the grave consideration and the best judgment of the voters, but there are other provisions which must receive due attention. There is the question of votes for women. There is the matter of centralizing the taxing power with the State. There is the apportionment provision, and the matter of a $29,000,000 bond issue with which to complete the canal. The people this fall will deal with millions of dollars and with great political and social questions. In comparsison, candidates sink into insignificance. Altogether, it is the most important election in the State in recent years. Every one should study carefully the various referendums and go to the polls with the determination to vote as intelligently and as well as he knows how upon every question put on the ballot —Utica Observer.

GEN. HAMILTON RECALLED

Affairs have not been progressing well for the allies in the Gallipoli Peninsula. There has been talk of abandoning the expedition. An expert observer who has returned from there tells the most disheartening details of the progress made, which taken in conjunction with the colossal casualty lists, makes the prospect very dark for the Allies.

Among the losses have been men from the colonial regiments, whose fighting qualties have been the wonder of the world. In fact the only thing that has not suffered in this disastrous campaign has been the fighting reputation of the Anglo-Saxon.

When an expedition goes so badly as has this one at the Dardanelles, someone has to take the blame. 'For this unpleasant part of it, there has been chosen a highly thought of veteran, the commander-in chief, General Sir Ian Hamilton. This man has been ordered home to make "a report' port" and Major-General Charles Monro will take command.

Someone has to take the blame, but it hardlly seems fair to pick on the man who had to face surprises with his armies as Sir Ian Hamilton had to face on the Gallipoli Peninsula The fact of the landing of Allied forces being known, he was not responsible for; that it has been such a failure cannot be laid wholly on him. The nature of his "report" on his return to London, and the further action of the British government in regard to the Dardanelles expedition will be awaited with interest.—Albany Citizen.

FEAR THE FORERUNNER

Fear is the forerunner of destruction. The suffrage question as was handled in New Jersey this week is as big a demonstration of fear as one could imagine. Fear, defeated the suffrage issue at the polls in that state on Tuesday. Fear gripped the "undercurrent of humanity in that State, saying "You cannot hide your works if women vote; remember Illinois." Fear said to a few silly women who call themselves antis, "You'll lose your identity as a clinging vine; watch out." Fear, fear, fear, everywhere! Not that their capabilities as human beings was considered inferior, but rather that they are equal. That was the point that settled it with the "undercurrent of humanity."

What can we think of a nation that steps backward in civilization. How shall we square ourselves for enfranchising the negro, who didn't even ask the ballot. No, neither was he questioned how he would use it, but to our disgrace it sometimes happens he is asked how much he will sell it for. Yet no one thinks strongly enough against the sacred privilege granted our ebony brothers to get up and fight for his disfranchisement.

It's to the front with decency, with right, with justice! Equal suffrage shall some day triumph, but the mere thought of fighting out the issue in the United States is disgusting to say the least.

Let it be remembered on November 2 in this state that vicious interests will vote No on the suffrage question; there's nothing of a more explanatary nature to be added to the foregoing remark.

THE DOG

What can be said of this inestimable creature that has not been said already? The language of panegyric would be exhausted before his excellent virtues could be described as they merit. His fidelity, his courage, his vigilance, his gratitude, his generosity, each the theme of merited praise, win our love and respect. The favorite of children, the chosen companion of women, the watch and guardian of our homes; the guide of the blind, the participator of man's excursions by land and sea, the defender of the shepherd's fold, the detector of the thief and robber, and the fleet courser that transports the Eskimo in his sledge over the Arctic waste of snow.

If such a benefactor to man has not a special claim to his protection and kindness, nay, to affectionate regard, what has? He ventures life and limb in our service; he explores the mountain waste and faces the wintry tempest in search of the traveler that has been overwhelmed by the snow-drift; he springs into the foaming torrent to rescue its threatened victim from destruction; he breasts the boisterous surges of the ocean to convey a rope to the shipwrecked mariners, by which he achieves their deliverance; he recognizes his beloved master after twenty years' absence, and expires at his feet in a paroxysm of joy at his return.—Henry Bergh.

WAKING UP ENGLAND

Lord Northcliffe is again a storm centre in England—a situation which seems to trouble him little, as he possesses in the highest degree the courage of his convictions. He has been bearing the odium that usually comes to him who tries to stir people up to meet the needs of an unpleasant situation. He is simply more clear-minded and far-seeing than other English leaders, and is denounced because he strives to remedy what others are too blind to see.

It has been obvious to onlookers from the first that, unless England made extraordinary efforts, she could not hope to achieve any brilliant successes in this war. Events proved all that Northcliffe had to say in the way of prophecy on this score, and, furthermore, that he is probably right in insisting that England will have to come to conscription.

The trouble with England is that she moves slowly and does not do what she ought to do until the time for doing it is passed. Her chief lack up to date has been arms and ammunition. And yet three months elapsed after the war was declared before orders for arms and ammunition were generally placed.

Before the war began England had any number of warnings of the probable results of war.

A realistic play called "The Englishman's Home," showing the invasion of England, created a great sensation in London and throughout the provinces, but still England did nothing in particular to prepare for such eventualities of war.

Books were written, editorial articles were published, many warnings by military experts were issued, all to no effect. England stored her gold for war and prepared her navy for war, but took no practical steps to provide an army or to provide arms and ammunition for an army.

Even reactionary Russia was more alive than England. Russia stored her gold, as England was doing, for the great conflict. Russia made provision to secure arms and ammunition from Japan, and six months before the war occurred Russia was out in the military markets of the world trying to buy ships of war which were being built for other nations.

Russia contemplated war, and was preparing for it.

England contemplated war, and was acting in agreement with Russia and France. Yet England did not take the absolutely necessary precautions, did not make the absolutely essential provisions, for war.

She delayed until war was declared before she organized her army, and she waited until three months after war was declared before she began adequately to provide herself with arms and ammunition.

No wonder Northcliffe is trying to wake up his country to the requirements of this critical situation. England would do much better to heed Northcliffe than to assail him.

They call him a traitor for telling the truth, They ought to esteem him for his courage and his patriotism in compelling them to confront a dangerous situation before it is too late. —N. Y. American.

Our Washington Letter

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE

Washington.—"I believe in free sugar. It will save to every householder in this country two cents upon every pound of sugar." Thus spake the Colossus of Kentucky. Senator Ollie James, as he stove in the table with his gavel and assumed the office of permanent chairman of the Democratic National Convention at Baltimore, June 27, 1912. Householders at that time were paying five and a half cents a pound for sugar, but up to date no one has reported its purchase at the retail price of three and a half cents. That was some more Democratic bunk. Just why Mr. James should have emphasized his antipathy to the sugard uties in a speech of acceptance of the national chairmanship, it was reserved for later developments to discover.

When the Democratic Congress took up the Underwood tariff abomination, Mr. James worked for free sugar with a singleness of purpose and a wealth of ignorance of the subject matter almost terrifying. But he convinced the President that sugar should go on thef ree list. Mr. Wilson snapped his fingers and Congress jumped to do his bidding, wholly obnoxious as duty free sugar was to many of the Democratic Party. This is the party, by the way, which announced in the 1912 platform: "We believe in the preser—vation and maintenance in their full strength and integrity of the three coordinate branches of the Federal Government."

It now transpires that Ollie had the interests of the distillers of Kentucky red-eye at heart far more sincerely than the domestic felicity of theh umble householders throughout the land. The liquor interests were being harried and baited on every hand and "the South wasg oing dry." Some of the Kentucky Bourbons, liquorishly speaking, got their heads together and evolved a great thought, namely: "If wec an succeed in getting Congress to make sugar free of duty, that will mean a loss of revenue to the Government of between sixty and seventy millions of dollars annually from sugar customs. This loss of revenue will make the Federal Government more than ever dependent on other sources of revenue, particularly internal revenue of which the distilled spirits pay nearly one-half. Thus the attitude of the Federal Government will be more favorable to us, and this will be reflected by a more tolerant spirit on the part of the dear public. And the champion of our cause shall be Ollie James, U. S. Senator."

This was the deus et machina in the sugar schedule, and now the question is will President Wilson permit Congress to amend the tariff law and retain the present duty on sugar which represents a cut of 25 per cent of the Republican rate? And, also, how will Senator James square himself with the President for the imposition practiced upon him?

THE BUDGET SYSTEM IS EXPLAINED BY D. R. COBB

In a recent address at Auburn Attorney D. R. Cobb of Syracuse, made the following explanation of the budget system as embodied in the new constitution. He said:

"Under the old plan of having the Legislature make up theb udget each representative was supposed to secure as much as possible for his section and this led to the 'mutual accommodation' system between the legislators. As a result the various districts, or some of them, did well while the state as a whole suffered We said that no legislature should make up the budget but that it should be done by a man elected by the electors of the state, and we are going to make the governor a bigger man by letting him do it and then we will hold him responsible for any errors.

According to the proposed plan, each department, and by the way the departments have been cut down from 152 to 117 by reorganization, will have to file a statement showing their needs for the year, with a statement showing their expenditures for the past two years. The governor makes out the budget, after which there is a public hearing then it goes to the Legislature not later than the middle of February. That body may call the Governor or the head of any department before it to answer questions regarding the budget and then they can do one of two things. They can reduce any item in it, or they can pass it as it stands but they cannot raise it one dollar.

SAFETY FIRST IDEAS FOR SCHOOL CHILDREN

There is a boy in our town,
And he is very wise;
He always stops and listens,
And uses both his eyes.
He's never in a hurry
To get across the street,
He'll never get run over,
Because he is discreet.

This is one of the verses in a littlle book that the Safety First Federation of America Convention, which meets in Detroit this week will take measures to have placed in the hands of every school child all over the country as the first step in a Safety First campaign for school childlren.

Boys' and Girls' Farming Clubs Increase North and West

There has been an increase of more than 41,000 in the membership of various boys' and girls' agricultural clubs conducted by the State agricultural colleges and the department in the Northern and Western States. At the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, there were 110,077 members in the various club projects in the 33 States covered by this work. At the close of the present fiscal year June 30, 1915, the membership was 151,194, exclusive of the enrollment in the mother-daughter canning clubs.

This work is being carried on cooperatively in 26 of the 33 States in the northern, central, and western territory by the department and the extension departments of the State colleges of agriculture. In practically every State short courses for the boys and girls and special demonstration schools have been held at the colleges and in the field. During the past year 1,557 club members attended the midwinter courses at the colleges, 968 of these having their expenses paid by local contributions as a recognition of their achievements in club work. Of the 38 club members who, as champions in their States, districts, or counties for 1914, have become recognized as National All-Star Club members, 31 are now attending high schools, agricultural, or other colleges, 3 of the remaining 7 have already graduated from high school, and 1 will go to an agricultural college this fall.

Experience has shown that the work in the boys' and girls' clubs can be carried on with even greater success without the aid of large cash prizes and awards. The net profits from the work itself have been found to be the best possible incentive. The members have their attention directed to problems of farm and home management, crop rotation, soil building, etc., and in practically every State in which the work is being carried on a large number of club members are now working out three and four year rotations of crops. The profits which they derive from club work they are spending on getting an education or for purchase of pure-bred stock or on labor-saving machinery. Many are even buying land and thus acquiring an invaluable sense of dignity and independence.

In the canning work, 938 public demonstrations were held during the year, with a total attendance of 118,367. These demonstrations were held primarily for thec llub members, but parents were always invited, and, as a matter of fact, more than half of those present were grown men and women. One of theg reat advantages of this club work, indeed, is the fact that it serves to stimulate the parents as well as the children.

NEWBURG SYNOD CITY NEXT YEAR

Retiring Moderator Made the Choice in Preference to Watertown—Reception of Overtures.

Batavia.—The First Presbyterian church of Newburg was selected by the Synod of New York yesterday as the church of 1916 meeting of the synod. The Rev Walter Rockwood Ferris, D. D., of Syracuse, the retiring moderator, announced his selection of this city and his choice was approved by the synod. He stated that the Calvary and Union Presbyterian churches of Newburg would cooperate with the First Presbyterian church in entertaining the delegates. The Presbyterian church of Watertown had also asked for the synod.

Several standing committees were appointed by the new moderator, the Rev. Arthur Newman, who stated that he had deferred temporarily the appointment of a vice-moderator. Presbyterial records were placed in the hands of committees consisting of a minister and an elder each. These records will be examined today and tomorrow.

General Ralph Prime of Yonkers, a lay delegate and a Civil War veteran, was named by the new moderator to act during the present synod in the place of the Rev. J. Wilford Jacks, D. D. of Geneva, who is the stated clerk of the synod and is unable to be present on account of serious illness. Dr. Jacks is serving a fiveyear term as stated clerk. He is a brother of J. Corwin Jacks of Batavia.

There was a variety of overtures received by the Rev. Daniel A. Ferguson, D. D., of Hammond, the permanent clerk and referred by motions of various delegates to the committee on bills and overtures. Several of these communications were unsigned and several contained petitions to the synod to adopt resolutions regarding mormonism.

Another communication, which was unsigned, advocated that the synod adopt a resolution asking for an amendment to the constitution of the United States on the subject of prohibition. It was remarked that the matter was "political rather than ecclesiastical," and it was referred to the committee on bills and overtures.

Other communications, such as the request of the Presbytery of Long Island for a delegate from the synod to its bi-centennial celebration next year, and the request of the church of Victory, Saratoga county, to be transferred from the Presbytery of Lyons to another presbytery, were also referred to the committee on bills and overtures.

Dr. Newman, Moderator.

When it was announced that nominations were in order for the office of moderator of the synod the Rev. George J. Russel, delegate from the Presbytery of Long Island and pastor of the Presbyterian church of Southampton, L. I., immediately secured recognition. He made a brief speech in which he said that the Presbytery of Long Island would celebrate its 200th anniversary next year and that the presbytery was organized in the church of which he is pastor at Southampton. He thought it fitting that the anniversary of the Presbytery of Long Island be honored by naming one of its delegates for moderator of the Synod of New York. He characterized the Rev. Arthur Newman, pastor of the Presbyterian church of Bridgehampton, as "spiritually and mentally fitted" for the office of moderator.

Before the nomination could be seconded the Rev. Joseph M. France, D. D., of the Presbytery of Geneva, pastor of the Seneca Castle Presbyterian church, placed in nomination the name of the Rev. William W. Weller, D. D., of Geneva. He made a somewhat lengthy speech in which he claimed that Geneva was a pioneer presbytery, that it had never had a moderator of the synod and that the candidate he named had just completed his 25th anniversary in the pastorate of his present church, and finally that it was the wish of the Rev. J. Wilford Jacks, D. D., of Geneva, that the Rev. Dr. Weller be selected for the high honor.

Several laughs were raised before the voting was completed. One ministrial delegate demanded that the candidates take the platform until "we can see if they've good looking." Dr. Ferris replied that few candidates ever got through on good looks. Another wanted to know if the Rev. Mr. Newman had an initial in his name and the Rev. Mr. Russell, who nominated him, said it was "simple Arthur Newman."

After the vote was counted the newly elector moderator took the platform, where he received the felicitations of the retiring moderator and thanked the delegates for the honor conferred. He said he was the ninth minister in a church 250 years old and declared that the fact that he had bveen pastor for 33 years showed that the people of his section had the perserverance of the saints.

Though only forty years old he is an international figure in the musical world, having an unexcelled record in European centers. RECORD FOR SMALL LIABILITIES IS FILED

A record for small liabilities was made by Louis Graham, a lineman of this city, who filed a petition in United States Court in Utica yesterday, with liabilities of only $110 and assets of $25, consisting of wearing apparel. The bankrupt has but one creditor, Laura Abbott of New Haven, Oswego county, who has a judgment for $110. She secured the judgment before City Judge H. J. Wilson on October 12, the judgment being on a promisory note. The bankrupt paid $20 to H. L. Gilman, attorney, for filing the petition and $30, the fee, to the Federal Court.

OSTEOPATHS MUST HAVE LICENSES

Albany. N. Y.—In an important decision made public Attorney General Woodbury has ruled that general practitioners of medicine may employ osteopathy when the condition of a patient warrants such practice, but they may not advertise and hold themselves out as osteopaths unless they are licensed as such.

The opinion was given to the State Education Department, which asked for the ruling after protests had been filed by osteopaths against the methods employed by certain physicians who advertise themselves as oseopaths, although they are not licensed to practice osteopathy.

JEFFERSON COUNTY FREE FROM SIGNS

Watertown.—The crusade against advertising signs on the highways will not affect Jefferson county.

When asked if a campaign would be started in this county, President F. A. Empsall of the Jefferson County Automobile club said; "There will be no campaign started here for the reason that all highways have in the past been kept free of such signs, and therefore there is no need of any action. Firms or hotels in this vicinity doing such advertising in the past have, as we understand, generally secured permits and we have no complaint."

WOMAN WATCHERS AT WATERTOWN'S POLLS

Watertown.—For the first time in its history, Watertown is to have women watchers at the polls, November 2, when the proposed suffrage amendment to the state constitution comes up for the consideration of the voters. Miss Janet Moffet, head of the local suffrage organization, said this morning that every polling place in the city will have its full quota of women watchers, who will see to it that the interests of the suffragists are not jeopardized by illegal means.

This figures 14.32 cents per pound.

BABIES CAUSE TAX INCREASE

Dean of New York University Astonishes the Mills Committee With His Theories on Taxation.

New York. — Professor Joseph Frenc Johnson, dean of New York University's finance school, gave the Mills Legislative Tax Committee a surprise at yesterday's hearing. Invited to express his views as to ways of increasing the State's revenue, he advanced unusual ideas on matrimony, birth rate and allied subjects. Senator oylan, presiding, leaned forward in astonishment to exclaim:

"Surely you are not serious?"

The speaker declared that he was

There was a note of regret in his voice when he said that there was not time to elucidate his views completely.

The declaration which startled Senator Boylan and his associates came out in the course of the speaker's plea for equall taxes for married men and bachelors. He favored an income tax, and said:

For Birth Control

"I would not exempt married men. I could not give preference to the man who is married.

"I do not believe it is a good thing to encourage matrimony by lowering taxation. I would discourage it by making him pay a heavier tax.

"We should not do anything to encourage matrimony and child bearing Men should not be permitted to marry until they can convince some central authority that they are able to support children. The birth rate should be controlled.

"I am a confirmed disciple of Malthus. I believe the awful war in Europe is being fought because the race has rejected his doctrine."

"Don't you think the population would decrease if we adopted his theories?" Senator Boylan asked.

"Never. Nature would take care of that," replied Professor Johnson.

Later at his home Dean Johnson elaborated his views to a New York American reporter, saying:

"I am, as I said, a believer in the Malthusian doctrine. There are too many children being brought into the world without thought. There ought to be some public opinion aroused against large families. The man who is the father of twelve children ordinarily is not a benefactor of the state, city or nation. He is a detriment. It is such men who multiply taxation. It is the children of such families who fill the poorhouses and the asylums.

"I doubt whether families ever see be regulated by law. But we should cease, as Theodore Roosevelt does, holding up the father of a large family as an example to be followed.

"It is an easy thing for a man worth nothing at all who wants to marry a certain woman to get her consent and then pay fifty cents for a marriage license. But the result of the marriage is pretty surelya child. He has little or nothing to support it, and it is brought into the world with no future, little chance of getting a proper education, and a small chance even of being properly fed.

FRAUD PAINT

The worst mistake one is likely to make in painting is wrong paint; it is easy to make.

We all say "Ours is the best"; and there are 1000 of us. One is best; but a dozen are so near on a level that noone knows, for sure, that his is the one.

The worst paints are worst liars; they know what they are, put on a bold face, and braten it out.

Their one true argument is low price; but low-price paint is always what be, a fraud; it is made to cheat cheatable people. DEVOE

SOLDIERS AND GIRL INDICTED BY GRAND JURY

TWO DELICIOUS DISHES.

LUNCHEON MENU.
Macaroni Loaf.
Salad. Biscuits.

Tomato Marshmallow.

COOK and strain ripe tomatoes. If canned tomatoes are used they must be drained, cooked and strained. Make a sirup of one-half cupful of the strained tomato and one cupful of sugar. Cook to 230 degrees Fahrenheit. Pour this moistened with a quarter cupful of water. Stir, add one cupful of water and cook to 240 degrees. Remove from the fire and add three tablespoonfuls of gelatin dissolved in one cupful of water. Mix and strain. With a wooden paddle beat until it becomes foamy and white; then gradually add the beaten whites of two eggs and continue beating until it is stringy and almost set. Sift over one tablespoonful of cornstarch and pour on a marble slab or large platter which has been dusted with pulverized sugar. Let dry for twelve hours and cut in squares. If they are to be eaten plain, roll in pulverized sugar, or they may be dipped in melted chocolate.

Macaroni Loaf.

Three-quarters cupful macaroni, one cupful cream or milk, four level teaspoonfuls of butter, one tablespoonful of red or green peppers chopped, one cupful grated cheese, one teaspoonful of onion juice, one tablespoonful of chopped parsley, three eggs, one tablespoonful salt. Cook macaroni in usual way. Scald cream, add to this one cupful breadcrumbs, butter, salt, peppers, cheese, parsley, onion juice, beaten eggs and macaroni. Line a quart baking dish with buttered paper, pour in the mixture, set pan on many folds of paper in pan of water, place in moderate oven and bake from half to three-quarters of an hour. Turn out on deep platter and serve with tomato sauce. Sauce: Two teaspoonfuls of butter, two tablespoonfuls of flour, one-half teaspoonful salt (scant), one cupful stewed and strained tomatoes, slice of onion, one-half teaspoonful capers, three cloves. Brown butter and flour separate, then combine, add salt and pepper. Cook tomatoes with slice of onion, then remove onion, add tomatoes slowly to flour and butter, cook thoroughly and add capers and cloves, or these may be omitted. Pour over loaf and serve very hot. This seems a lot of trouble, but it pays, for it is delicious and just as good next day for luncheon as any meat dish.

THREE-PIECE JUNIOR SUIT IN BLUE SERGE.

Charming suit for girls of "awkward age" carried out in blue serge and satin.

Another elder mode has been adapted to junior uses—the three-piece suit. Cleverly designed is this model in blue serge, a waist of satin in the same shade being worn with the coat and skirt. The box-pleated skirt has a straight lower edge and is worn with a single-breasted jacket trimmed with a shoulder yoke and tabular belt. Fancy buttons are used on the belt and cuffs. A convertible collar finishes the neck of the satin blouse.

In medium size the costume requires 3⅛ yards 54-inch material for the skirt and coat and 1⅝ yards satin for the waist.

To make the skirt, slash to left of center-front on line of double "oo" perforations for an opening. Form box-pleats, creasing on slot perforations, bring folded edges to corresponding small "o" perforations and press. Close back seam. Turn hem on double "oo" perforations. Sew to belt, center-fronts and center-backs even.

For the jacket, underface rounded ends of front and back straps to one inch above small "o" perforations. Adjust on front and back, front edge of front strap, and back edge of back strap along lines of small "o" perforations; turn lower edges back on small "o" perforations; stitch, leaving openings to pass belt through. Adjust yokes on front and back, corresponding edges even. Close under-arm and shoulder seams as notched. Adjust underfacing under front, corresponding edges even. Underface pocket from upper edge to one inch below small "o" perforations; turn over on small "o" perforations, adjust on front upper edge along double "oo" perforations.

Close back seam of collar, indicated by small "o" perforation, cover with seamless, bias material. Sew to neck edge, notches and center-backs even.

Close sleeve seams as notched, easing any fulness between notches at elbow and leaving extensions free; turn under extension in slot perforations, lap to small "o" perforations. Turn hem on small "o" perforations. Adjust sleeve strap on sleeve, single small and large "O" perforations even. Sew sleeve in armhole as notched, small "o" perforation at shoulder seam.

The belt and pleats, as well as the yoke, could be outlined with braid if a more elaborate decorative effect were desired.

Pictorial Review Suit No. 6437. Sizes 8, 10, 12, 14 and 16 years. Price, 15 cents.

BUILT AROUND A DEAD TREE

Summer Rest Seat That Is Not Expensive, and an Ornament to Any Grounds.

The fact that summer rest seats do not have to be expensive to be attractive is demonstrated in the seat seen in the accompanying illustration. The seat has been termed the "Tree Summer Seat," from the fact that it is really built around a tree which was at one time growing at the point where it now stands. Upon finding that the tree had lost all signs of life, the gardener in this park devised the novel idea of turning the dead trunk into this artistic seat rather than dig it out bodily.

Suiting the action to the decision he cut the main limbs off about six feet from the ground and to the top of these he fastened a pretty roof, which is made of palm branches. This done, the seat, which runs all around the trunk at a distance of about a foot and a half from the ground, was made out of sections of palm branches. In addition to being inexpensive, this seat is one of the most attractive in this very elaborate park.

This suggestion might well be followed by others. It is not an uncommon sight to see unsightly dead trees in public parks, which might be converted into useful and ornamental objects instead.—World's Advance.

SCREEN OF GOOD APPEARANCE

Has Durability and Is Distinguished Looking, Is Claim Made for New Idea on Market.

The attitude of the average person toward screens is expressed by the epigram, "Screens is Screens." When the fly fooler is in need of repairs, the man who is doing the work gets a few yards of screen with no regard to its nonrusting and wearing abilities.

A western concern has invented a rust-proof which, acording to the manufacturers, is finished with ten coats composed of three different materials. The copper coats are put on first; then the zinc coats are applied, and lastly a finishing material of lacquer is put on, which protects the zinc and also adds to the rust-resisting qualities of the screen.

All these coats are applied to the wire cloth after weaving by an electro-galvanizing process.

The color after finishing is a dull aluminum, making a handsome, distinguished looking screen.

Billboards a Public Nuisance.

Billboards are a public nuisance. They are dangers to human beings who have to live near them. They present real perils from the standpoint of public health, fire protection, police protection and reasonable safeguarding against accident.

This is the new and practical principle upon which the city council is now asked to amend Sections 706 and 707 of the present building code.

It is a weapon against the billboard nuisance forged out of the perfectly definite practical rights of the citizen instead of from that newer metal known as his aesthetic rights. We may not have reached the stage when we have established the fact that a citizen has the right to be protected against eye-sores, but we certainly long ago reached the point when we recognized that his sanitary well being, the protection of his life and property were charges of the state.—Chicago Post.

Barters Soul for Lump of Soil.

The vice of earth eating is spreading through tropical parts of the Americas, the natives being from infancy addicted to the fatal habit, known scientifically as geophagy. It is always fatal, producing dysentery in adults and dropsy in the very young. Native mothers inculcate the vice into their children by giving them chunks of soft clay to eat. Once fastened on a person, the vice of geophagy becomes insatiable, and the victim will barter his immortal soul for a lump of soft, white clay.

Marriage and Mathematics.

"Yes," said the old mathematician, with a gleam in his eyes, "I've always looked at it that way. Marriage is addition; when the little ones come it's multiplication; when dissension looms up to cloud the horizon of their happiness it's division, and when the final parting comes it's subtraction!"

"And how about divorce?" asked the listener.

"Oh, that would come under the denomination of fractions!"—London Telegraph.

Cannon That Modernized Japan

By HERBERT KAUFMAN

Author of "Do Something! Be Something!"

BUSINESS is no longer a man to man contact, in which the seller and the buyer establish a personal bond, any more than battle is a hand-to-hand grapple wherein bone and muscle and sinew decide the outcome. Trade as well as war has changed aspect—both are now fought at long range.

Just as a present-day army of heroes would have no opportunity to display the individual valor of its members, just so a merchant who counts upon his direct acquaintanceship for success, is a relic of the past—a business dodo.

Japan changed her policy of exclusion to foreigners, after a fleet of warships battered down the Satsuma fortifications. The Samurai, who had hitherto considered their blades and bows efficient, discovered that one cannon was mightier than all the swords in creation—if they could not get near enough to use them. Japan profited by the lesson. She did not wait until further ramparts were pounded to pieces but was satisfied with her one experience and proceeded to modernize her methods.

The merchant who doesn't advertise is pretty much in the same position as that in which Japan stood when her eyes were opened to the fact that times had changed. The long range publicity of a competitor will as surely destroy his business as the cannon of the foreigners crumbled the walls of Satsuma. Unless you take the lesson to heart, unless you realize the importance of advertising, not only as a means of extending your business but for defending it as well, you must be prepared to face the consequences of a folly as great as that of a duelist who expects to survive in a contest in which his adversary bears a sword twice the length of his own.

Don't think that it's too late to begin because there are so many stores which have had the advantage of years of cumulative advertising. The town is growing. It will grow even more next year. It needs increased trading facilities just as it's hungry for new neighborhoods.

Newspaper advertising has reduced the value of being locally prominent, and five cent street car fares have cut out the advantage of being "around the corner." A store five miles away, can reach through the columns of the newspaper and draw your next door neighbor to its aisles, while you sit by and see the people on your own block enticed away, without your being able to retaliate or secure new customers to take their place.

It is not a question of your ability to stand the cost of advertising but of being able to survive without it. The thing you have to consider is not only an extension of your business but of holding what you already have.

Advertising is an investment, the cost of which is in the same proportion to its returns as seeds are to the harvest. And it is just as preposterous for you to consider publicity as an expense, as it would be for a farmer to hesitate over purchasing a fertilizer, if he discovered that he could profitably increase his crops by employing it.

MISTAKEN FOR ANOTHER MAN

An Episode That Resulted in a Change of Lovers.

I was in a frame of mind to get all the fun that could be possibly extracted from a two weeks' vacation. I extracted so much in the first twenty-four hours that—but I anticipate.

I alighted at the hotel, gave my hand baggage to a porter and was climbing the piazza steps when I saw a girl whom I was sure I had never met before coming to meet me with a radiant smile.

"Good gracious!" she exclaimed. "I thought you were not coming till tomorrow."

"But you see I have come today," I replied, humoring her mistake.

"Well, I declare! You quite take my breath away," she went on, looking at me admiringly from tip to toe. "How you have improved! I'd scarcely have recognized you."

"You are the same lovely girl; you couldn't improve."

"Those people over there are looking at us. Leave me till after supper; then we'll walk on the beach."

I was glad to comply, determining that as soon as I rejoined her I would let the fact come out that I was not the lover she expected. When we met again my resolution weakened. I could not resist the temptation to enjoy a brief period with so charming a girl. We went down on to the beach in the gloaming and strolled on the line of foam. The moon rising out of the ocean glinted the crests of intervening waves. The stars were coming out. There was no sound but the plash of waves. I knew that if I talked of anything except love I should expose my hand, and it seemed as natural for me to talk love to her as if we had long been lovers. I told her how during the four years of absence my heart had yearned for her and begged her to tell me if I was to be made happy. Sailing on the broad sea of love I struck never a rock, and when it was time for us to go in she had no suspicion that she had made an exchange of lovers.

"And now," I said before parting, "give your reply in a kiss."

She kissed me. The next morning I rose late and was the only person in the breakfast room. Sitting by a window, I heard voices on the piazza.

"Who was the fellow?" asked a man's voice, "and what did he look like?"

"Like you, very much improved from what you were when I saw you last."

"H'm! You don't seem to consider me improved."

"Not in disposition. You blame me for a very natural mistake."

"A very natural mistake! If you make such mistakes after we are married there'll be the deuce to pay."

"Who's got married yet?"

I peeped through a slat in the blind and saw a man sitting with the girl I had made love to the night before. He looked very like me, though I did not feel flattered by the likeness. What should I do, slink out unobserved and take the first train or brazen it out? I scorned to follow up my prank by leaving these two lovers to quarrel on my account. I marched boldly out and joined them.

I certainly expected both to receive me scornfully. Without waiting for either to speak I begged a thousand pardons of the girl for not rectifying her mistake at once, giving as my only reason that she was so charming I could not bring myself to do so. While I was speaking, which I did humbly, the face of the girl slowly broadened into a smile; that of the man grew momentarily surlier. Having done all I could to atone for my sin I turned to leave them. The girl gave me a look that told me I was forgiven; the man gave me no look at all.

I resolved to leave the place that afternoon, but, meeting the girl without her lover, she extended her hand to me and asked me to take a seat beside her. I did so and told her of my intention to depart, which had been formed on the ground that my presence there would not be agreeable to her and her lover. She declared that she would not be the cause of my departure and begged me to stay. I determined to remain for awhile, but if my presence proved objectionable I would go at once.

That evening, observing the young lady sitting alone on the piazza, I joined her. To my surprise at my mention of her lover she said that he had gone.

Then she gave me her confidence in a matter of which I already knew the principal part. At eighteen she had admired a man whom she had known but a short time when he removed to another place. They had corresponded, and after four years' absence he had returned, hoping to get a favorable answer to his suit. She had been disappointed in him and had rejected him.

I chatted with her till the moon rose, then boldly asked her if she would walk on the beach. She accepted the invitation and, walking over the same sands as the night before, I made the same love. She proposed that I should go away and return for an answer in four years, but I told her I had been in suspense for twenty-four hours and that was long enough. She considered that ridiculously short, but yielded. When later I rallied my wife on accepting me on such short acquaintance she said:

"H'm! Do you suppose I was going to let you go after that engagement kiss?"

Not Needed.

The young bride had clearly formed ideas on industrial questions.

"I will give you something to eat," she informed the tramp, "if you will get that ax"—

"Oh, I shan't need that," the tramp interrupted in a reassuring tone. "My teeth are all right."—London Stray Stories.

HOME TOWN HELPS

NEED FOR CAREFUL PLANNING

Adornment of Either Large or Small Areas Should Be Made Matter of Careful Consideration.

The first essential in the adornment of a home area is the formation of a suitable plan. In making this plan the principal things to be considered are the size of the area, the amount which the owner feels able to expend for the purpose, the climatic conditions, the soil, the exposure, the peculiarities of the site, and the style of treatment, whether formal or natural.

Small places, consisting of an acre or less, situated amongst others of like dimensions, can only be appropriately improved in a formal style. On the other hand, large suburban places or country seats should, in order to maintain unity and harmony with their surroundings, be treated in the natural style.

It is impossible to develop a forest, a park, or even a grove on an area less than an acre in extent; and it is equally impossible to maintain fountains, terraces, sheared trees, hedges, and carpet bedding over an area of several acres.

Before a tree or shrub is placed in its permanent location an outline map of the area to be treated should be made. This map should locate all existing structures, indicate the direction in which most pleasing outlooks are to be had, and also the contour of the ground to be beautified. The aim should be to hide by means of trees and shrubbery all objectionable buildings or portions of the place, and also to shut from view all unsightly objects maintained by neighbors.

To harmoniously arrange trees, shrubs, and herbaceous plants, and at the same time adjust them to the contour of the place, to the architecture of the buildings, and to the convenience of the walks and drives, is the aim of the landscape gardener. Every successful attempt to adorn a city lot, a suburban place, or a park has a valuable influence upon the community in which it is situated. It furnishes an object lesson which others will attempt to follow, and in this way it serves the useful purpose of stimulating in others a love for the beautiful in nature.

NEWSPAPER HAS RIGHT IDEA

Omaha Bee Points Out Necessity for Preserving Civic Improvements When Once Made.

Why not put the stress on "keeping" instead of "making" Omaha a city beautiful? We have a beautiful, a very beautiful city, as, of course, our "city beautiful" advocates realize. Omaha is made beautiful in the first place by its natural topography, its broad, well laid-out, paved and richly shaded streets; its attractive homes and their artistic surroundings and its lovely parks.

The combined efforts of public authorities and private citizens to promote the beauty and attractiveness of the city are indeed commendable, but for the sake of doing ourselves full justice and avoiding false impressions abroad, would it not be better to emphasize the idea of keeping this the beautiful city that it is?—Omaha Bee.

Properly Placed Monuments.

The submission of ready-made monuments causes embarrassment, not only to the art commission, but to the donors who have contributed the funds, usually a large number of interested persons who have been induced to give money with the expectation of seeing the monument erected. Presumably they have had nothing to do with business details of the matter, and they have but a faint conception of what a properly placed monument means in a city, and consequently, in case of rejection, are unable to understand why the city refuses to accept the monument. While the commission may be in entire sympathy with their desire to honor a distinguished person, or to commemorate an important event, nevertheless a city charter may impose on the commission the duty

Valuable Medical Advice.

An anxious inquirer writes to the medical department of a New York paper, "Would you kindly tell me if there is any cure for a bunion?"

To which the medical journalist replies:

"You will get help from (1) walking pigeon toed; (2) wearing sandals."

The doctor does not mention it, but a bad case of pigeon toes can be cured by walking bow legged. The remedy for chronic bowlegs is to walk knock-kneed. Should knockknees bring on pigeon toes again one can, of course, always escape back to bunions.

What would humanity do without the science of medicine as practiced in the newspapers?—Outlook.

Great Battle Films Come Here Tomorrow

One of The Evening Times War Pictures to be Shown at The Quirk, Friday, Oct. 22, Afternoon and Evening.

The loading and firing of some of the largest guns in the world, their demolishing effects, infantry, fighting at close range, the dynamiting of a bridge, destruction of aeroplanes and numerous exciting conflicts are among the many scenes found in the New York Sun "Battle Films," which are to be shown tomorrow afternoon and evening, from 2 until 10:30 o'clock, at the Quirk. The performance will be continuous for the one day only.

Theoretically speaking, nearly 2000 persons are taken right into the European battle fields and given an opportunity to see what war is really like.

Is it hard to believe that such wonderful pictures could be obtained, but it is nevertheless true. Cleverness, coupled with an abundance of courage on the part of the fifteen camera men, who frequently risked their lives, is the only answer to the question. That they escaped not only without injury but without being killed seems miraculous.

The pictures are unlike anything ever shown in this city before. The most skeptical person has only got to see a small part of these great films to be convinced that the scenes are of actual war.

From an educational and instructive standpoint these pictures rank among the best. They appeal to they oung as well as the old. Great care has been taken to eliminate all objectionable parts, such as gruesome scenes and anything that would have a tendency to create any feeling among people of any particular race. Although all the nations at war figure in the pictures, the films are neutral from beginning to end.

The audience is not left to cipher out what the various scenes are all about, for a capable lecturer explains everything during the exhibition. This adds greatly to the interest of the pictures.

To single out some particular feature would be a difficult thing to do, for too many of them are of equal importance. Some of the many scenes thrown upon the screen are: The Belgian infantry digging trenches, big field guns in action, a desperate hand-to-hand battle. German advance guard moving upon Antwerp, a battery in action, Belgians building pontoon bridges, engineers blowing up a bridge Belgian Red Cross caring for wounded after a battle, effect of shell fire upon property. Emperor Wilhelm reviewing his troops, Bavarian cavalry making a charge. German sharpshooters resisting an attack, Belgian lancers on way to the front, the mining of the bridge over the River Lys, bombardment of Slype, burning of German staff headquarters, armored train in action, ruins of Termonde, Belgium; Belgians bringing down a German aeroplane, snipers at work, ruins of Lille, France; troops resisting attack of an aeroplane, Belgian infantry moving into field of action in Alost, on the firing line with the French, French prisoners being taken to detention camps under heavy guard.

STATESMEN HAVE CLAY FEET—TAFT

New York.—Some of America's greatest statesmen "are men with clay feet."

This opinion was expressed last night by former President William Howard Taft. He did not explain the exact status of "men with clay feet." He left the inference, however, that although their intentions were good in the matter of reform they failed to put them into practice. The really great men of the country, he said, remained in the background. They were seldom heard of, he said.

"Newsies" See Pictures Today

One Scoutmaster Astonished at Intrepidity of Men Who Secured the Films---No Grewsome Sights---All Is Clean and Good and Historical.

"House full," was the word passed out of the box office at The Quirk this afternoon, but even that fact did not deter the crowd of eager persons from entering the pretty playhouse to see the wonderful pictures presented by the New York Sun and The Evening Times.

Tonight The Evening Times "newsies" will be the guests of the circulation department, with Mr. Freedman in charge of them, and then there will be some action. In other places where the pictures have been shown the young men scarcely get settled in their seats when they become so intensely interested that they almost forget that they are in an amusement place and not right out in the fields of action. Quietness among a large gathering of boys at such form of entertainment signifies two things—either the boys are pleased with the show or they are waiting a chance to raise the roof, to use figurative speech.

Boy Scouts who were at this afternoon's performance sat with wide-open mouths the entire time. While the boys do not represent a military organization, they are not unlike the grown-ups in showing interest in military affairs.

Among the scenes that appealed particularly strong to the scouts was the building of a pontoon bridge by the Belgians and the construction of block houses. The Scouts are taught to build temporary bridges.

In speaking of the pictures today one of the city's Scoutmasters said: "Words can scarcely express my appreciation of the pictures. They went far beyond my expectations. It is hard to conceive of any person taking the chances that the men took who obtained these pictures. To get behind a tree and take snapshots at such a time would be a trying situation, but to stand and turn a crank, which is necessary to do in order to make a motion picture, right in the midst of a conflict and amid the roar of big guns, requires a man to display a great deal more courage than is wrapped up in a person who is even considered courageous.

"I was very much pleased to have the boys see the pictures. They are good clean pictures and I failed to see anything of an objectionable nature or but was all right for any boy to see."

The production of the films began at 2 o'clock this afternoon and will last until 10:30 tonight—a continuous performance. No seat in the house commands more than 10 cents and many of the boys delight in a view from the gallery at five cents a look.

BICYCLE COLLAPSED; BOYS INJURED

Early this afternoon Glen Cole and Francis Wells, both pupils in Rochester street school, suffered severe injuries when a bicycle upon which both were riding collapsed.

The boys were riding in Rochester street when the front wheel struck a stone and instantly the bicycle collapsed, throwing the boys with great force to the ground. As a result Glen Cole has a broken arm and Francis Wells several severe cuts and bruises.

ALDERMEN TO CONSIDER PROPOSED BUS LINE

The Common Council will meet tonight at the City Hall to take action on the Wilson & Stott proposed bus line to Hannibal. The application was submitted to the Council at its last regular meeting and it is expected that the permit will be granted.

MRS. YOUNG RESIGNS HER SCHOOL POSITION

Chicago, Ill.—Mrs. Ella Flagg Young, superintendent of the Chicago public schools, will step down from that position on December 8. The announcement was made in a letter readto the School Management Committee this afternoon, Mrs. Florence Vosbrink, of the committee, immediately resumed a discussion of the transfer of a teacher, following the reading of the letter by a clerk, and no action was taken on Mrs. Young's note.

Constant wrangling and repeated heckling, Mrs. Young declared, caused her to give up her place.

BAYARD B. WEBB'S VOICE WAFTED O'ER LAND AND SEA FROM HONOLULU TO PARIS

This morning's newspaper stories of the succecc attending the first attempt to waft through the air the voice of man, from Arlington, Va., to the Eiffel Tower in Paris, were greeted here with real interest, because of the fact that Bayard B. Webb, son of Mr. and Mrs. George H. Webb of East 3rd st., South, was the especially favored man in the wonderful event.

The New York Herald of today gives the following account of the latest achievement of the A. T. & T. Co.'s engineers, of whom Mr. Webb is one. The Herald says:

Conversations between Arlington and Paris were accomplished three times, but no announcement was made until last night, out of deference to the French government, through whose courtesy, they were able to use the Eiffel Tower. The first conversation was held on Tuesday night, October 12, and the second, on thefollowing night. The latest conversation which proved that the human voice could span land and sea occurred early Wednesday morning.

The equipment used was the same with which conversations were held the last week in September with Honolulu, San Francisco, San Diego and Mare Island, Cal. The conversation with Honolulu, across a busy continent, and through mightily conflicting stratas of atmosphere, was regarded as the most difficult of the scientific feats, but the final test—conversation with Paris, was delayed because of the unusual conditions caused by the war and the fact that the Eiffel Tower is being used by the French government as its base for military wireless operations.

"Hello, Shreeve!" Called Webb

After overcoming all obstacles and objections the first successful attempt was made Wednesday night, when at Arlington Bayard B. Webb the engineer for the telephone company adjusted his transmission apparatus, the only one of its kind in the world. At the Pearl Harbor station in faraway Honolulu, Lloyd Espensheild, another engineer, tuned up his receiving apparatus and waited.

In the Eiffel Tower H. E. Shreeve and A. M. Curtis, other engineers, waited for the signal which would tell them that all was ready, when they would take over the tower and its great radio station from the business of directing a war to dedicate it to the cause of science.

From Arlington the wireless apparatus crackled its message, and in the Eiffel Tower French military officers stepped aside and watched with intense interest the American engineers while they adjusted their delicate instruments. In the radio station, which overlooks the national capital, Mr. Webb spoke anxiously time and again into the transmitter, and in Paris, with bated breath, the word was whispered about:

"The experiment is a success; we are talking to America."

Final Experiment Succeeds

The following night the experiment was continued with equal success, but it was not until Wednesday morning that extended conversation was attempted. The instruments in Paris and at Arlington were adjusted. With Mr. Webb in the radio station was Captain W. H. G. Bullard, U. S. N., in charge of the United States radio service.

At five minutes to one o'clock in the morning, when it was deemed that conditions were favorable, the wireless of Arlington crashed out its signal, and in return came the answer:

Mr. Webb leaned to his transmitter.

"Hello, Shreve!" hec alled. "Hello, Shreve!"

Then after a moment:

"Hello, three! Hello, three!"

In the dim silence of the tower his voice rang out loudly and the men strained their eyes as if waiting for an answer. After a minute Mr. Webb talked again into the circular disk which was carrying his voice into space and beyond the sea—to where, he could only hope.

"One, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine," he counted slowly. And then: "Do you hear this Shreve? Do you hear this, Shreve?"

Repeats Test Phrases

Finally, after he had repeated and repeated test phrases, raising and lowering his voice like an actor studying a part, he cried his farewell:—

"Goodby, Shreve. Goodbye Shreve."

Then he rose and with trembling hands, unhitched his transmission tele phone, and in a few moments, the wireless operators at Arlington and in far away Eiffel Tower, too, were crashing out theiraerial dots and dashes of peace and war.

In the New York offices and at Arlington, officials and engineers waited anxiously yesterday to hear whether their most elaborate attempt at transatlantic conversation had been a success. Late in the afternoon came a cable message from Mr. Shreve, announcing that he had heard Mr. Webb plainly. A few hours later came another cable message, this time from Mr. Espensheid at Honolulu, announcing that he, too, had heard the conversation, and heard it so plainly that he recognized the voice of his colleague, Mr. Webb, who was speaking.

Engineers at the radio station in San Francisco, San Diego and Mare Island also heard the conversation, but to this not much importance was attached for within the last two weeks it has been proved conclusively that the human voice can be projected through the atmosphere across this continent.

"Stevenson Signed My Nominating Petition"—Mr. Lewis

Mayoralty Candidate Bears Party Leader No Animosity---Promises to Reveal Some Facts Concerning His Opposition---Battle Waxing Warmer Every Day.

John W. Stevenson's announcement, made public yesterday, to the effect that he will support the entire Republican ticket with one exception, the party candidate for mayor, has added some interest to an otherwise lifeless campaign.

Victor Lewis, when asked to make a statement in reply to Mr. Stevenson's assertion that he has not shown a spirit of loyalty to the Republican party, stated that he will soon issue a statement of facts that will concern Mr. Stevenson's assertions. "We must consider that we are taking part in politics and surprising things are apt to loom up in a political campaign," said Mr. Lewis.

Mr. Lewis also mentioned the fact that Mr. Stevenson's name is attached to the petition which was circulated for the Republican mayoralty candidate.

One of the party leaders who circulated thep etition, stated today that Mr. Stevenson signed the petition at the time the other Republican committeemen attached their signatures to the paper.

The circumstances connected with the indorsement of Mr. Lewis's candidacy by the Republican committee were discussed freely today by a number of politicians. It has been customary in the past, stated one of these men, for the city committee to name the candidate they desire to represent the party, but the primary law permits any man to run for office, providing a petition is circulated in his behalf and the required number of signatures is obtained; namely, one-tenth of the enrolled voters in his district.

Another party man, in discussing Mr. Lewis's nomination, stated that he, together with several other men of the party drew up the petition in Mr. Lewis's behalf and the following day the indorsement of the committee was obtained.

It has been stated on good authority that in addition to Mr. Stevenson's opposition to the Republican mayoralty candidate, several other committeemen are opposed to Mr. Lewis but will not advertise their opposition.

It is the opinion of many men that the hottest fight that has ever taken place in this city, is waiting for the gong to strike.

GOVERNMENT TAKES CENSUS OF INTERNES

A report has reached Rear Admiral Beatty, commandant of the navy yard that the yacht Eclipse was seen in Chesapeake Bay off the Potomac River at noon last Thursday, heading for Baltimore.

SUFFRAGE PARADE MAY NOT BE QUIET ONE

New York.—Twenty-five thousand women or more will march in the Suffrage Parade Saturday and the officials of the parade have asked that they refrain from talking. The anti-suffragists say they can't get away with it. They contend that some of the well beloved "Suffs" will talk or die of auto-asphyxiation.

The parade managers, conscious of how terrible a thing a parade may be in certain circumstances, determined that in any case it would not resemble a progressive conversation. And the love the suffragists bear the cause is shown by the acceptance of the order to refrain from uttering one word.

Of course the Anti do not care much what happens to the parade. They don't care for it anyway, even if it happens to be the best managed and most attractive procession they ever sneered at. They are content to watch their rivals walking with head erect and shoulders straight for hours, and if suffrage is silenced for that long— they should worry!

SNAKE IN THE CANAL ZONE

Culebra is Spanish for snake; while culebrear, to move like a snake; culebrino, snaky; culebrona, a woman with the guile of a serpent, and half a dozen other derivative words carry into various secondary meanings the idea of reptilian cunning, sinuous, stealthy motion and suddenness and treachery of attack.

The Culebra Cut was well named. The name was officially changed some months ago to Gaillard Cut, in honor of the memory of David Du Bose Gaillard, whose fine mind and life of great achievement and greater promise were crushed out of being in thec oils of this same crafty and treacherous monster.

Until the ingenuity and perseverance of our engineers crush the snake that crushed Gaillard, it would be well that the cut should continue to be known as Culebra; for that is what it is. When the snake at last is conquered let the name Gaillard reappear on the official maps.

And people who read with amazement of these unexpected and repeated writhings of the ophidian monster beneath the Isthmus hills, setting in motion by this latest writhe ten million cubic yards of obstruction and blocking the canal to traffic for months to come, ought to begin to understand that this is not only a question of superficial landslides but also of underlying strata in unstable equilibrium and of untested mobility and unknown capacity for mischief.—N. Y. Sun.

DOES HE KNOW WE KNOW?

Again the pot is boiling, and the witches of Macbeth are once more at work. Whether it was the complete failure of Mr. Victor Lewis to at all times speak in softened tones of the Fox administration or the dire disappointment resulting from his treatment of a previous administration; or, that the concrete standpipe is not waterproof; or, that somebody at some time or other wanted the city to own a site upon which a high school might be erected—in short, the ire of Mr. John W. Stevenson is aroused, and after proclaiming his true blue Republicanism, he heaves to with the avowed intention of supporting a Democrat for mayor of the city, as might be expected after suffering every one of the abuses mentioned—and then some.

But with all these things before us, even the man with the shortes memory possible cannot fail to recall a time when Mr. Stevenson did a little skyrocketing before the eyes of the people. Some of us have pleasant memories of the specific events, when the doughty West Side warrior held the defensive line and hurled the gauntlet of defiance into the camp of the present city administration, whose every member did not share his views and sympathies on matters of public policy.

The attack as recorded in last night's Times, we will dismiss in a few words, granting that, as one of the city's most illustrious dissenters, Mr. Stevenson still considers himself privileged to deviate from the straight and narrow path of regularity, and we pardon, therefore, his neglect in acquainting himself with what we know that he knows to be true regarding his relationship with Mr. Lewis's petition on file in Oswego before making the statement accredited to him. We must indulgently overlook Mr. Stevenson's weakness in barking at the poor victims of political impetuo sity, and we have little doubt that, as soon as the supply of mayoralty timber is exhausted, the moon will have to submit to his share of inspection.

We are bound to become solicitous for the purity of Mr. Stevenson's politics, fearing that his announced step may result in cleaving a fracture where one should not exist. And finally, we would ask Mr. Stevenson to read and ponder these words:

"Every kingdom divided against itself will fall and cannot stand."

Courage is the mud good men are made of. Never let your courage collapse.

Let opposition make you more resolute, more determined. Remember, it only requires the small man to fill a small job. And remember, the pay is always in proportion to the man.

The big men were compelled to fight against big odds in order to get where they are at present.

Courage is your cash on hand—your biggest asset. Courage is the coin that will stick when all else has fled. Remember, when things look the darkest, it will soon be light. In the language of the slang laureate—nothing lasts.—The Silent Partner.

NEW YORK'S COSTLY POLICE

Close to eleven thousand policemen costing city taxpayers about $34 a minute managed to cope with lawlessness last year by arresting on an average one New Yorker out of every thirty.

The total number of arrests and summonses in 1914 was 190,184, an increase of more than 8,000 over the figures for 1913. Arrests for felonies showed an increase of 22.5 per cent. and convictions in this class increased 24 per cent. Burglars were rounded up and convicted in numbers about one-third ahead of the preceding year.

Three times as many drug vendors were caught. One thousand seven hundred and twenty-three persons were arrested for carrying dangerous weapons, an increase of 341 over the figures for the year before.

While it is true that murderers get away with amazing frequency, there is no reason to belittle a creditable year of police work in other directions. Seven policemen gave their lives last year in the service of the city. The general condition of the force is better than it has ever been. There are more good men and brave men ready on all occasions to be a credit to it. Department reports show that New York policemen are healthier than London policemen, healthier than the soldiers in the United States Army.

"It is necessary to give to police officers adequate power, full responsibility, and then to demand from them results," says Commissioner Woods.

Taxpayers do their part to the tune of nearly $18,000,000 a year. We are anxious tob elieve the city grows better. Weh ave a right to demand that its hall grow safer.—New York World.

Anti Literature, Vile in Nature, Insults the Home

To the Men and Women of New York:

The State of New York has been flooded with anti-suffrage literature. Some of it bears the imprint of the Women's Organization Opposed; and an enormous quantity carries no clue whatever to the identity of its authors. Yet there is a uniformity of attack in all of it which indicates co-operation. In none is there the slightest attempt to meet the argument that the opinions of women must be counted in any government claiming to be representative of the PEOPLE.

On the contrary, all of this literature aims to obscure the main question by "throwing mud" at the leaders of the movement. Woman suffrage is pronounced a step in the direction of immorality, the leaders are called advocates of free love, the abolition of marriage, the elimination of the home.

In all the world's history of reforms there was never so unfounded, treacherous and conscienceless an attack made upon those who have led them.

In the name of those leaders of blessed memory—Lucretia Mott, Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Lucy Stone, Susan B. Anthony, Clara Barton, Julia Ward Howe, Antoinette Brown Blackwell, Mary A. Livermore and scores of others who gave their lives to obtain political freedom for women in behalf of the seven millions of women in twelve Western States, Australia, New Zealand, Finland, Norway and Denmark, who have earnestly striven to secure by their votes greater good to a greater number of their fellow citizens; in behalf of the million women in New York State who have expressed a desire for the vote; in behalf of the thousands of organized workers under our Campaign Committe whose names and characters are well known in the communities where they live and the conscientiousness of whose efforts are unquestioned, I repudiate every such charge made. It may be that here and there they live an individual woman who wants to vote has expressed opinions not in accord with established codes of morals but no leader of a suffrage association in this or any other country has ever done so. In the United States all woman suffrage organizations stand upon a platform of a single plank and that is "Votes for Women." Officers are elected annually by delegated conventions, and should an officer be discovered advocating or holding loose views about morals, she would be promptly voted out of office.

The suffrage movement has been instituted and furthered by the desire of women to dignify theh ome, to strengthen family ties, to uplift the standard of morals, to "make the world better."

Evolution is not going to stop or turn backward when women get the vote. Society is not going to lose its common sense or its decency. The testimony is overwhelming that it has not done so in those countries and States where women have voted for years.

If at any time "free love" or loose morals should become questions of public moment, sensible people will give them sensible attention and in my judgment will relegate them to the realm of reactionary morals where they belong.

Meanwhile "mud" serves a badly frightened opposition with a trench in which to hide the weakness of its real posiion. We shall not ask you, men and women of New York, to believe in those who are personally unknown to you, but we do entreat you to ask yourselves whether the women of your own acquaintance who are working for the suffrage merit such attacks.

Is it believable that the finer qualities of women are to be lost because they stop at a polling booth and drop a bit of paper in a box expressing their opinion on candidates and measures? Are a woman's strict sense of morals, loyalty to the husband of her choice, tenderness to her children, so ephemeral and artificial that a vote will stead them away? Can you not trust the morals of your mother and your wife as other men trusted theirs when giving them the suffrage? To the hard-headed men of New York we put the questions:. Are such charges made to convince or to frighten? Are they ARGUMENT or SLANDER?

TOWN 75 YEARS OLD GETS FIRST CHURCH

Jackson, Miss.—For the first time in its history, extending over a period of seventy-five years, the town of Meadville has a church. Dr. A. F. Watkins, president of Millsaps College, is back from a trip to Meadville, where he went to dedicate a new Methodist edifice, just erected there.

The little town was headquarters for many years of thef amous Newman-Byrd feud, which did not end until all of the feudists had been killed. Since then the town has begun to grow and prosper, and now it appears to be gaining rapidly in population and influence.

SOCIETY WOULD HAVE AMERICA FIRST TAUGHT

New York.—The National Americanization Committee has asked 150 universities and colleges to train men and women to become leaders in Americanization by establishing courses and lectures for instruction in the art of inculcating in immigrants civic pride and patriotism. The committee bases its appeal upon its conviction that preparedness in American citizenship should go hand in hand with preparedness for war.

Thec ommittee has worked out a definite course, and has commended it to the colleges. The preparedness it advocates pre-supposes common social ideals, respect for laws, a common language, a common understanding of industrial conditions and American standards of living. Such preparedness, the committee says, is essentially as practical, as the buillding of battle ships. It is time, it declares, to lay the keels for both.

The committee urges the waging of three distinct campaigns in Americanization—an "English language first" in the night schools, an "American first" in naturalization classes and citizens' training camps and an "efficiency first" in factories by ascertaining and dealing with causes of strikes.

Frank Trumbull is chairman of the committee. Other members are Thomas A. Edison, eneral Wood, Cardinal Gibbons, John Mitchell, Mrs. Vincent Astor, Mrs. E. T. Stotesbury, Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, C. H. Mackay, P. P. Claxton and Robert Bacon.

The Department of Interior, through its Bureau of Education, has sent to many post offices, public schools and factories large lithographed posters to be hung in conspicuous places. Under the caption "American First" immigrants areu rged to attend night school, learn English and become citizens. According tog overnmental statistics, there are 3,000,000 foreign born whites in the United States ten years old orm ore who are nuable to read or speak English, and nearly 2,000,000 who cannot read or write any language.

BAD FALL BREAKS LEG

Frank O'Neil, a former resident of Oswego, now residing at 423 Erie st., fell last night on West First st., near Broadway and sustained a fractured right leg.

Mr. O'Neil is an employe of Contractor Stauring and he was on his way home about 6 o'clock when in some unaccountable way he fell heavily to the sidewalk and was unable to rise. Bystanders rushed to his assistance and noting that the injury seemed of a serious nature, summoned a taxicab and had the man removed to his home.

Dr. Gladman was called and applied a temporary cast. The doctor will have Mr. O'Neil removed to the hospital on Monday where an X-ray examination will be made

Mrs. O'Neil, the injured man's wife, believes the accident was due to Mr. O'Neil having a troublesome knee, which has been weak for some times and has been the source of much trouble to Mr. O'Neil by suddenly giving way when he was walking

FRIENDS FILLED M. E. CHURCH

The People Were There to Pay Loving Tribute to Memory of Mrs. E. R. Redhead.

Impressive services marked the funeral of Mrs. E. R. Redhead yesterday afternoon in the State Street Methodist Episcopal church, and the auditorium was filled with loving friends of the family who were there to pay final tribute to the memory of one who has done so very much for the church and the community at large.

While the services were in charge of the Rev. Mr. Holmes, pastor of the church, other ministers were there to join in telling of the love and esteem in which they held Mrs. Redhead. Mr. Holmes read the Scripture and offered prayer and one of Mrs. Redhead's favorite hymns was sung by Mrs. Herbert B. Husted of Syracuse and Mr. Frederick W. Revels also of Syracuse. This hymn, "Saved by Grace," was sung in duet form.

The Rev. Dr. C. E. Hamilton, until recently the pastor of the University M. E. church of Syracuse, and now president of Cazenovia Seminary, and a close friend of the family during the last thirty-five years, paid a beautiful tribute to the life of Mrs. Redhead, and to her character and her work in the church and community. His talk was that of a most intimate friend. Dr. Hamilton was followed by Rev. Dr. F. D. Torrey of Brooklyn, pastor of the Summerfield M. E. church, and who was a former pastor of the State Street church, this city, when the auditorium of that edifice was built. He referred in glowing terms to the life of Mrs. Redhead in a three-fold manner, namely, social, literary, and finally, spiritual, in all of which she excelled, especially in the development of the latter phase—the spiritual during the latter years of her life.

The Rev. Mr. Holmes made a few remarks in which he said that the occasion was in sense a funeral, but a coronation—the coronation of a life lived to the full in devoted service to the community. At the conclusion of Mr. Holmes' remarks the impressive service was closed by the singing of that beautiful old hymn, "In the Sweet Bye and Bye." The singing was done by the entire congregation.

The floral offerings as last tokens of love and esteems from loved ones and friends, were profuse and beautiful in the extreme. They came from all classes of people, indicating the wide range of her friends.

CITIZENS BANK SUES TOWN OF VOLNEY

The Citizens' National Bank, of this city, has started an action against the Town of Volney to recover money advanced to Eugene Rowe, former Supervisor of that town.

There were two certificates; one July 10th, 1913, for $825 for highway repairs, to which is added interest amounting to $26; the second was under date of September 1st, 1913, for $950, forr a bridge at Black Creek, to which is added interest of $28, making the total indebtedness claimed by the bank against the town of $1.829.

At the time these certificates of indebedness were issued, Eugene Rowe was Supervisor, and George J. Coles was Town Clerk. It is alleged that on the dates these certificates were issued the records show that meetings of the town board were held but no such certificates were authorized by the town board, and further that the signature of George J. Coles was forged to the same, and the cash thereon was obtained by said Eugene Rowe, who soon afterwards suddenly left this section and no trace has ever been heard of him since. The Grand Jury subsequently indicted said Rowe for fraudulently issuing the certificates and forging Mr. Coles's name thereto, and obtaining the money on the same, which he is alleged to have misappropriated to his own use and the Town of Volney never received any of the money so obtained.

MISS WILSON REBUKES SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENT

Cleveland, Ohio.—Miss Margaret Wilson, the President's eldest daughter, and the School Superintendent, Mr. Frederick, had a lively little word tilt Wednesday afternoon when Miss Wilson, the guest of the wife of Mayor Blake, was seeing the city schools.

They were inspecting the social center of one of thel arge school buildings, when Mr. Frederick was asked by Miss Wilson if the parents were allowed to gather there in the evenings.

"No," replied the superintendent. "Most of them are foreign born and could not be organized."

"I think you are mistaken," replied Miss Wilson. "I believe any people in the United States can organize themselves if given the schools for a meeting place."

Mr. Frederick said itm ight lead to politics and rowdyism, and Miss Wilson replied very spiritedly:

"What of it? We have plenty of arguments in the Senate that might be termed rowdyism, but they don't do any harm. Good politics always helps.

When told that the school board sometimes allowed the parents to use the school buildings, by paying rental Miss Wilson said the rooms should be free to the people who pay the taxes.

A Few Jellies.

BAR-LE-DUC Currant Jelly.—Clean and pick over ripe currants, detaching the stems. To each pound of fruit allow a pound of granulated sugar. Pour the sugar on the currants, set in a cool place and let them stand overnight. Next morning turn the berries carefully into a colander so as not to break them and let the juice drip from them. If the mixture is too thick to let the juice flow freely, add a little water. Put the sirup over the fire and cook steadily for half an hour. Drop in the currants and cook slowly for fifteen minutes. Put up in jelly glasses or small jars. This is nearly as good as the imported bar-le-duc and is better at the end of a few months than when first made.

Crabapple Jelly.—Wash stems and cut in halves one peck crabapples. Put in kettle with just enough water to keep from burning and cook until soft. Strain, but do not squeeze. Measure the juice and boil twenty minutes, then add same amount of warmed sugar and strained juice of four lemons. Boil till it jellies on spoon. Makes twelve small tumblers.

Cherry Jam.—Wipe the fruit and remove the stones. Put in a pan a pint of red currant juice and three pounds of preserving sugar and boil fast for five minutes. Add four pounds of cherries (weighed after stoning) and boil gently, stirring frequently, and skimming it well, till the fruit is perfectly tender and the sirup will jelly when put to cool.

Preserved Quinces.—Wash, pare and core the quinces, weigh and allow equal weight of sugar. Cover fruit with cold water, cover kettle and cook slowly till tender; then put in the sugar and cook slowly till as thick and dark as you want it. It takes quite awhile to cook. Can hot, as usual. Cover parings and cores with cold water and cook until soft, let drip and cook with equal measures of sugar to make jelly or add pared and cored sweet apples to make sauce.

DOUBLE BREASTED COAT OF CLOTH.

Little maids of fashion have designed for them this stylish coat in broadcloth, made in double breasted effect, with a box-pleated skirt.

Fashion has provided for the small girl this smart double-breasted coat with straight box-pleated section. It looks exceptionally well in broadcloth, and the collar and cuffs may be outlined with bands of beaver or some other fashionable fur. Velvet, serge and other materials that pleat easily will also be serviceable.

For six-year size the coat requires 2⅝ yards 54-inch material, with nap.

This is a pattern with which the home dressmaker can practice the utmost economy. If carefully placed upon the material the section can be fitted so that there will be very little surplus cloth. After folding the material, for instance, the skirt is placed on the lengthwise fold; then followed by the piecing, which is laid on a lengthwise thread. At the opposite side of the cloth along the selvage edge the belt is placed. The back and one of the collar section, marked "D," are also laid on a lengthwise fold of the goods to avoid seams. Both sections of the sleeve, the cuff, the collar section marked "C" and the front are laid on a lengthwise thread of the cloth.

The coat is both comfortable and practical, and the busy mother will appreciate the simplicity of its design.

There are many ways in which it can be elaborated. For instance, where one has an inclination toward a more decorative effect the belt could be scalloped and embroidered in buttonhole stitches with coarse silk thread. It also could be braided with splendid results.

A very military effect is given to the coat by the omission of the belt, and this may be enhanced by the addition of brass buttons.

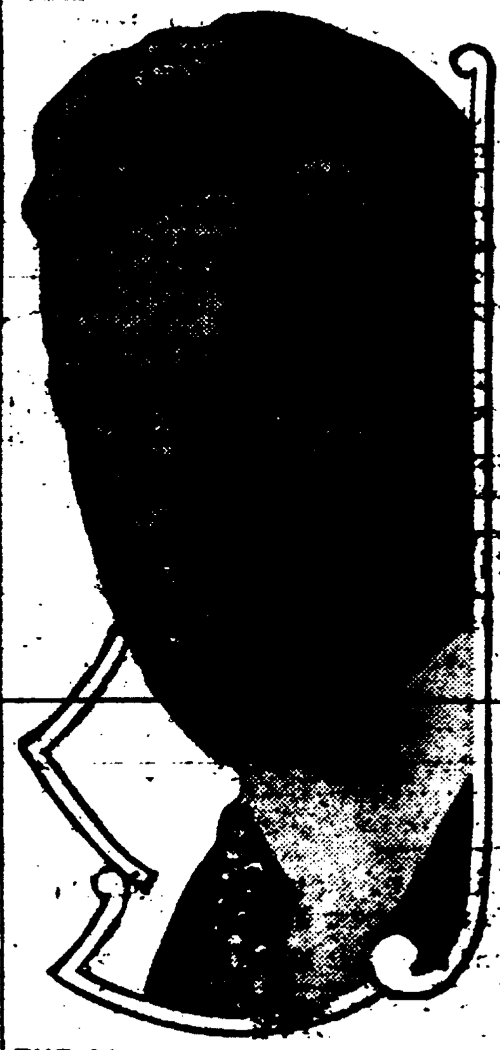
DONALD MACKENZIE



THE LUCKY COIN THAT PROVED A POOR TALISMAN—DONALD MACKENZIE'S STRANGE ADVENTURE.

Donald Mackenzie, the well known Pathe producer, several months ago happened to be sitting at the same table in a Broadway restaurant with a distinguished looking stranger who looked like a Spaniard. Conversation started between the two, and an impromptu friendship was struck up. The stranger had some interesting experiences to relate—he had been for twenty years in South America, had accumulated a fortune, and was now on his way home to Spain after a trip through the United States. He was lonely, very lonely, and Mr. Mackenzie was the first congenial acquaintance he had met since he left Peru. He regretted that on the morrow he would have to sail for home, for he had enjoyed the acquaintance of the senor much. But wait, he would like to leave the senor a slight token of his regard, a coin, a very old coin, which he had dug from the prehistoric ruins of Peru. He had found two of them years ago when he was destitute and discouraged, and they had given him much luck. From that day he has prospered. The senor with that coin must prosper, too.

When the stranger left after a warm handshake, Mr. Mackenzie found in his hand the coin. It was weird enough in looks to be an extraordinary luck bringer, so "Mac" slipped it into his pocket and forgot about it.

A week later he had a letter from an old [illegible] saying that he had enlisted to fight for England in the great war and was leaving for the front probably within two or three weeks. "Mac" thought of his lucky coin, and decided his friend needed it to ward off hostile bullets. He sat down at once and wrote him, enclosing the coin, telling his friend that it was "big medicine" and would bring him glory, medals and promotions galore. Thus endeth the first chapter in the tale of the lucky coin.

Last week "Mac" heard from his friend again for the first time since he sent the coin. It was from an army hospital somewhere in France, and ran in part as follows:

"You may have your 'big medicine' coin and welcome. You'll find it enclosed herewith. Here's what it's done for me. We left for the front the next day after I got it and I was sick as a dog all the way over the channel, being the only man on board who was, for it was a remarkably smooth passage. Landing on the dock a rifle accidentally fell on my foot and smashed it. We were at once ordered to the front, and my regiment was stationed in that part of the trenches where the fighting was the hottest, and it's my private belief that I was at the hottest point. I was wounded in the arm almost at once, slightly it's true, but painfully. I stuck it out and about two hours later had a bullet part my hair very neatly, but the hair will never grow again where the bullet cut. Not long after that something hit me a wallop, and I woke up in this hospital bandaged from head to foot—one wound in the head, one in each arm, one in the stomach, and one in my right leg. That wasn't the end of it. I've just heard that my fiancee back in Scotland has married another man. Take back your 'big medicine'—I spurn it."

Somehow, or other, the ocean liner carrying the "lucky" coin back to America escaped being torpedoed, but the captain never knew what an ill-omened token was aboard.

Mr. Mackenzie got this letter while he was directing a scene in Richard Carle's play "Mary's Lamb." He told everybody to wait for a few minutes, and then dashed for the door. He isn't the least bit superstitious, but two minutes later he might be seen making a bee line for the Palisades, on the edge of which are located the Pathe studios. Pausing on the rim of the dizzy cliff, he flung the coin as far from him as he could. As near as he could judge it fell on the West Shore Railroad tracks, two hundred feet below. Now he's afraid the accursed thing will cause a bad train wreck "for," as he says, "you never can tell!"

Getting the Dollar From Under the Stump

How Up to Date Farmers Are Easily and Economically Realizing on Land Hitherto Impossible of Cultivation.

ABOUT 400,000,000 acres of land included in farms throughout the United States are unimproved. Figuring that each acre could be made to produce at least $25 worth of produce per year, there is approximately $10,000,000,000 production being lost annually. Quite a tidy figure. And when we take into consideration that in many cases it requires only the removal of sundry stumps and boulders to make this land profitable, it certainly looks as though something might be done to save the waste. "Stumping with dynamite" is both an economical, quick and labor saving method as well as one that is growing in popularity daily.

The method involved in the blasting of a stump is to confine a quantity of explosive in such a manner that when exploded the expanding gases will lift the stump out of the ground. To secure best results the charge should be placed in the soil well under the base of the stump at the point where the resistance offered to the force of the explosion will be equal on all sides.

Where the soil is of a heavy clay or plastic nature a slow acting powder is preferable, such as farm powder or stumping powder. Where the earth is sandy or loose and is apt to permit the easy escape of gases a fast explosive, such as 40 to 60 per cent dynamite should be used. The condition of the soil with respect to moisture also has a great influence upon the amount of work that a certain quantity of powder will do. After heavy rains when the soil is saturated to the base of the stump and the subsoil is just damp is a most favorable condition.

No set rules as to the amount of powder necessary to blast a certain kind or size of stump can be given, since different conditions govern all cases. Two stumps of the same size, kind and age of cut, when one is grown on well drained soil where the roots must penetrate a great depth for water and the other is grown on soil where there is always water near the surface, will demand different treatment for extraction. The older stumps, especially if from timber free from resin, require less powder. The exact amount necessary for set conditions can, however, be readily determined with a little experimenting.

Few tools and supplies are required. A one and one-half inch wood auger with a shank about four and one-half feet long, a medium sized crowbar, a round pointed shovel and a wooden tamping stick, together with the powder, fuse and caps, will serve to fill the bill.

Deepening the Farm For Bigger Crops

The Third Dimension of the Farm an Important Factor to Greater Crops and Bigger Dividends.

WISE farmers are beginning to realize that a farm goes farther than length and breadth. Depth is a vital factor, and incidentally this third dimension has a clearly identified influence upon the producing value of the earth's surface.

Thus "vertical farming," a newer method of agriculture, is rapidly developing. Merely to scrape the bristles from a hog's hide is not enough. Deeper cutting is essential in order to reach the bacon. And experience has shown that to simply plow or turn the top soil is very often only the scratching of the surface when it comes to bumper crops.

Often the productivity of a farm is limited by the tight clay or hard pan underlying the top soil. Costly implements for tilling this upper soil and taking care of increased horizontal or surface acreage are all right in their way, but to go deeper into the farm, to increase its fertility and productiveness by increasing its depth, is a matter that the practice of vertical farming accomplishes quickly and economically, and very often a single cartridge of explosive will convert several yards of otherwise useless subsoil into half an acre of new root feeding surface. Thus, instead of spreading out and embracing more territory, vertical farming enables the farmer to really concentrate and by intensive methods economize in both labor and expense. At the same time the resulting increase in crops emphasizes the profitable features of the process.

And there is a practical reason for this. By breaking up the subsoil oxygen is admitted into the ground, and the pent up natural fertilizing elements of the lower soils are released and utilized. A reservoir for the storage of water is created, and a good home for the roots is produced. Good roots are essential to good plants. Men who look below the surface realize these facts. They know also that a plant produces only in proportion to the extent of air, water and nourishment given its roots. Thus is the newer method of vertical farming both logical and profitable.

This method of farming vertically is in itself easy, simple and labor saving. A half cartridge charge of farm powder placed well down into the tight subsoil at intervals of about a rod, tamped properly and fired carefully will do the work quickly and economically. Subsoil blasting, however, can be done successfully only when the subsoil is dry.

Few tools are required for the work.

Straightening Streams With Dynamite

The ancient Egyptians were noted for their crops because, as history states, they "sowed their seeds in the Nile." This does not mean that they actually cast the seed in the river. At certain seasons of the year the Nile overflows its banks, depositing on either shore a rich silt or earth that is highly conducive to bumper crops, and the wise ancient Egyptians, realising this, profited thereby.

Water is a necessity. The tiniest brooks up to the largest rivers play an important part in the scheme of things inasmuch as they are nature's way of both irrigation and drainage. But being formed according to nature's dictates their courses do not always jibe with man's desires or needs.

Diagram of Stream Troubles That May Be Corrected by Blasting.

Rock ledges impede their progress. Overhanging stumps and trees retard their flow. Numerous irregularities cause them to meander about in apparently wasteful ways, and man's carelessness has added to these troubles by allowing driftwood and loose earth to form dams and sandbars.

All of these things help to hold the flood of waters back and cause either flooding or swamps, which not only occupy land that could be more profitably used for farming, but also form fine breeding places for mosquitoes and other obnoxious pests. Incidentally they cause an annual loss running into millions of dollars per year.

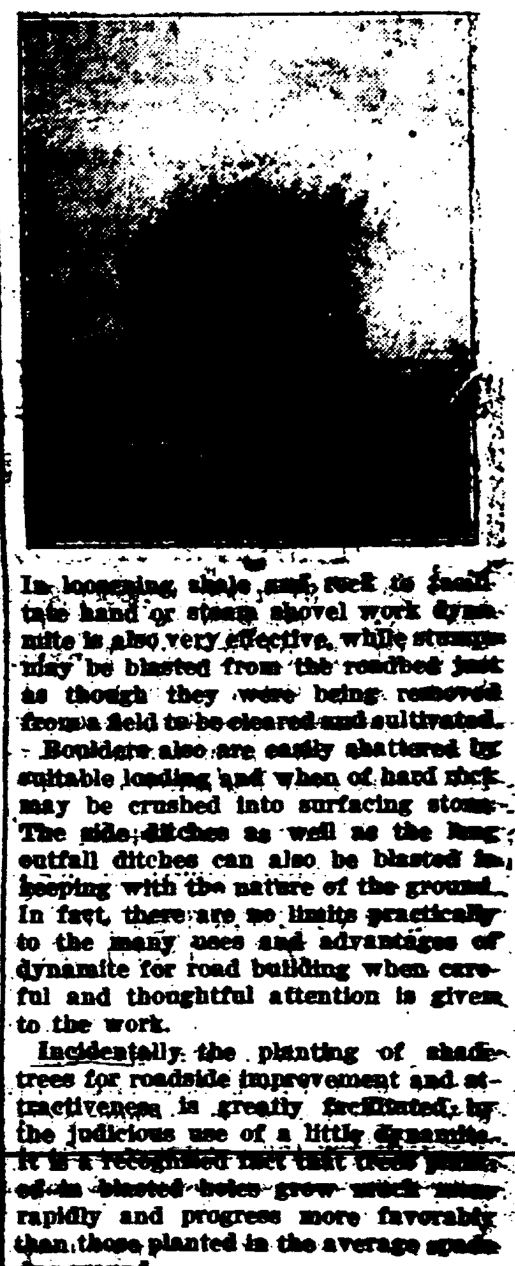
In this day of enlightenment such things are both wasteful and, one might add, criminal, especially so in view of the fact that almost instant relief may be had by a few well placed charges of dynamite. Not only will these blasts straighten out the kinks and bends and remove ledges and sand bars, but they will deepen and improve the channels as nature has really intended. Incidentally by straightening the winding course of a creek much area of tillable land can be obtained and farm operation in many instances made much easier.

AN UNPROFITABLE STUMP COVERED FIELD — ONE MORE OUT OF THE WAY — TEN MONTHS AFTER $500 WORTH OF CELERY PER ACRE

Explosives In Road Building

One of the newer methods of road building that is fast winning the indorsement of the better versed contractor is that of employing dynamite for reducing the heavy work.

Grading through hard ground or rock, for instance, is tedious and requires time and labor. The use of dynamite for blasting such material is a welcome relief. Both rock and hard clay may be loosened in the cut by well placed charges of explosives if holes are drilled into the ground a little way up the bank and loaded. Careful spacing and loading for electrically fired blasts will result in bringing down both classes of materials in the best possible manner.



In loosening shale and rock to facilitate hand or steam shovel work dynamite is also very effective, while stumps may be blasted from the roadbed just as though they were being removed from a field to be cleared and cultivated.

Boulders also are easily shattered by suitable loading and when of hard rock may be crushed into surfacing stone. The side ditches as well as the long outfall ditches can also be blasted in keeping with the nature of the ground. In fact, there are no limits practically to the many uses and advantages of dynamite for road building when careful and thoughtful attention is given to the work.

Incidentally the planting of shade trees for roadside improvement and attractiveness is greatly facilitated by the judicious use of a little dynamite. It is a recognized fact that trees planted in blasted holes grow much more rapidly and progress more favorably than those planted in the average spaded ground.

Blasting Ground For Tree Planting

Much has been written on how to plant a tree or trees, but if the experiences of scores of famous orchardists have any weight on the topic, then the practice of using dynamite preliminary to planting young trees has fully proved its merits.

The writer has personally seen specific examples of the value and excellence of tree planting with dynamite on a private orchard in Delaware, the difference in growth between the undynamited tree and the tree planted in blasted ground being so unmistakably in favor of the latter that no adequate comparison could be made.

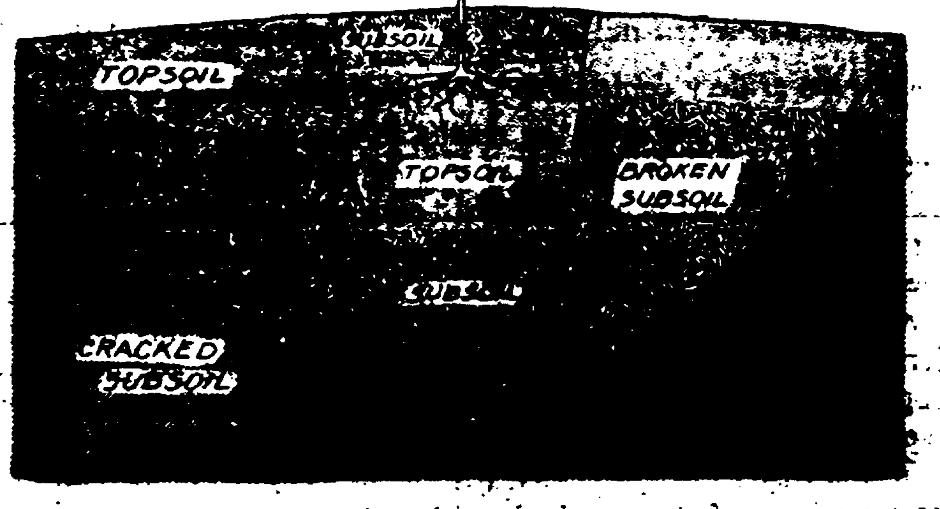
Furthermore, there are so many sane and logical reasons for this method of tree planting that even the most skeptical could not fail to be convinced. Obviously when a tree has to use a large part of its energies in forcing its roots through the hard soil it cannot be expected to make the same rapid growth and come into such early bearing as a tree would that had had the ground in which it was planted thoroughly prepared by dynamiting beforehand.

No tree should be planted over hardpan or impacted subsoil without first resorting to blasting, so that the soil may be made open and porous. Such blasting not only creates channels, increases absorption of soil moisture and permits deeper rooting, but it also induces better growth and larger yields.

Blasting for tree planting is best done in the fall, because at this time of the year it is easier to catch the subsoil in dry condition. Blasting in the spring for spring planting, however, is much better than planting in dug holes, notwithstanding the fact that the subsoil is apt to be wet or damp.

If the holes are blasted in advance of the time of setting the trees they are left without further attention until tree planting time, unless it is desirable to add some manure or fertilizer to be diffused through the soil. This is an excellent practice, especially in poor soil. If the earth is sour, sticky clay a few pounds of lime scattered in the hole will materially assist in flocculating the clay and keeping it permanently granulated and sweet.

Immediately after the blast the soft blasted ground should be dug out down to the location of the charge, where a hole will usually be found about the size of a bushel basket. This must be filled to prevent settling of the tree after planting. The roots should be placed in a natural position in good top soil, covered with more top soil and tramped down firm. The hole can then be filled to a little above the surface with subsoil.



THE ROOTS ARE FIRMLY EMBEDDED IN RICH TOPSOIL, SURROUNDED BY MELLOW, WELL DRAINED SUBSOIL.

The fact that nearly all commercial orchardists use this method proves that it pays in reduced first year loss, earlier fruiting and larger and better yields.

Burrowers—Beware!

Gophers and prairie dogs are the bane of western farmers, while in the east woodchucks are the type of burrowing animals that cause the tillers of the soil to forget some of the things the dominie tells them on Sundays.

Don Leonardo Ruiz, a California rancher, says "dynamite is the proper medicine to give ground squirrels, gophers, prairie dogs, etc."

Take an inch and a half or two inches of dynamite. Put it in a bit of cloth or several thicknesses of paper to form a small round cartridge. Tie the cloth or paper firmly about one end of a piece of fuse twelve or fourteen inches long, but do not use a cap.

Insert one of these charges well into the mouth of every hole and pack loose dirt around the fuse, leaving enough of the end outside to light easily. Light the fuse and go on to the next hole. There will be no explosion.

There being no cap or other detonator, the dynamite will simply burn, filling the hole with dense, poisonous fumes that will almost instantly stifle and then kill every living thing inside.

Digging a Ditch In a Flash

Things move quickly nowadays. The village of yesterday is tomorrow's metropolis. Speed is a requisite, and newer methods that smack of rapidity and labor and money saving are in demand.

Ditches that once consumed many days of hand or machine labor are now being blasted out in almost the twinkling of an eye. By degrees man is learning to adopt some of nature's simple, but mighty forces. And the gullies and valleys that old Mother Earth has created by her natural upheavals and eruptions are being duplicated in a smaller way by some of the more progressive and up to date farmers.

Digging ditches with dynamite is simply a newer and more improved method of trench building. The method employed in wet work is simply to punch holes from eighteen to twenty-four inches deep along the line desired to ditch and then load each hole with a charge of 50 per cent straight dynamite.

Long stretches of ditch can be loaded and fired at one time. One cap placed in a cartridge of dynamite in the middle hole of the line of charged holes and fired will do the work.

A single row of holes can usually be depended upon to excavate a ditch from seven to nine feet wide and about thirty to forty inches deep. Where larger ditches are required the holes can be made deeper and loaded heavier, or two or more lines of holes, spaced from three to four feet apart, can be used. Incidentally the holes can be made in the roughest kind of swamp or in flood muck beds, where other methods of ditching are practically impossible.

When the soil is dry or the weather is too cold to use the propagated method of blasting described above, low freezing farm or stumping powder is used in holes spread farther apart, often in large ditches as far as four or five feet. In this case each hole must be primed with an electric cap, as the explosive shock will not propagate in dry ground.

The cheapest lineal foot of small ditch is obtained by using the electric firing method and farm or stumping powder.

BLASTING DITCHES THROUGH SWAMP.

Priming a Dynamite Cartridge

To properly prime a dynamite or farm powder cartridge four things are essential—the cap, the fuse, the cartridge and a crimping tool. The method in itself is very simple.

First crimp the priming cap about the fuse, using the crimping tool as shown in the illustration. Next punch a diagonal hole in the cartridge with the end of the crimping tool, making the hole deep enough to entirely bury the cap. Insert the cap into this hole and tie the fuse to the side of the cartridge securely with a stout piece of cord.

Crimping the Cap to the Fuse.

Making Cap Hole in Cartridge.

If the job is done carefully and correctly, the entire outfit will look like illustration No. 4, and the priming will be complete.

Ignorance, fear or carelessness are the causes of most accidents. There is no immediate danger in handling a stick of farm powder if the user will use but an ordinary amount of care and intelligence.

A common incorrect method of priming is to punch a hole right through the cartridge, pass the capped fuse through it, then insert in another diagonal hole below the first hole. No tying is necessary to hold the cap in the cartridge. This method is called "lacing the fuse through the cartridge." It is unsafe and unreliable. The fuse is likely to break at the sharp bends, and the powder train spit fire through the break, setting fire to the cartridge instead of exploding it, or the fuse may miss fire altogether, leaving an unexploded charge in the hole, or it may hang fire for half an hour or half a day [illegible]. Short cuts do not pay in handling explosives.

Tying Fuse and Cap to Cartridge.

Serbians' Capital Menaced by Bulgars

Teutons Push Back Their Armies in the North---Bulgars Invade In Four Places and Threaten Them in the Rear.

London.—An urgent cry for help comes from the Serbian War Office; which says the situation is growing more and more serious and the arrival of the allied troops is awaited anxiously.

The Austro-German forces in the north are steadily pushing back the Serbians.

The Bulgarians from the east are invading the country at four principal points. In the north they are advancing on the Negotin front to meet the Teutons. In the centre they are moving toward Nish, threatening to cut off the Serbian army, which is desperately opposing the Teutonic advance. Further south they have cut the railway at Veanja, between Nish and Salonica, driving a wedge between the main Serbian army and the Anglo-French forces, which landed at Salonica. A fourth drive is being made down the valley of the Bregalnica, toward Istib, to meet the advance of the Allies coming up the ine of the Vardar.

The desperate situation of the main Serbian army which is now facing the German army in the lower Morava Valley is seen in the advance of a strong Bulgarian force by the Vidin-Paracin Railway, which advance will place the Bulgarians directly in rear of the Serbians, thus cutting off their retreat toward Nish.

Below Nish the entire stretch of the Nish-Salonica Railway embraced Vrahja and Dupliñane is now in Bulgarian possession. Nish is thus cut off from the Allies moving up from the south unless the Bulgarian force at Vranja can be defeated.

The Bulgarian first army, constituting the main Bulgarian force, is at present advancing toward Nish, along the Pirot Railway. This last force threatens to attack Nish at a time when no assistance can be rendered that place, either by the main Serbian army in the north or allied troops from the South.

To the west of the Morava River the Serbians are holding the line from Asagna to Kosmai. The former place is only three miles north of Belgrade1Paanka Railway, which line is the main Orient route from Paris to Constantinople. Three miles north of Asagna is Selevac, which place the German troop entered yesterday. In the past twenty-four hours the Teutons have advanced from the direction of Semendria towarrd Selevac, a distance of six miles. The advance has been a steady one, and in the face of dogged resistance.

Kosmai, the extreme western flank of the main Serbian army, is four miles west of the Belgrade-Nish Railway and thirteen miles distant from Asagnac. In other words, the Serbians on the Kosmai-Asagna line are presenting a thirteen mile front to the enemy with one army, and in the Alexandrovatz-Rakhanatz line a seven mile front, or a total of twenty miles' frontage.

The Serbians have their backs to the narrowing vallep of the Morava. In ordinary circumstances every foot of retreat would mean the bringing of the foe into territory which can be more readily defended than captured, and this situation would hold good today but for the fact that powerful Bulgarian armies are cutting in behind the Serbians in the vicinity of Nish, Vranja and elsewhere on the Salonica-Nish railway, and not only cutting off the means whereby reinforcements can be received but threatening to surround the main Serbian army itself.

As the situation is now revealed the entire railway line from Matejevac to Kofisnica is now in Bulgarian hands. The locations of Bulgarian forces on the line of this railway are announced as being at Zajecar and Knjazevac. The latter city is only twenty-two miles from the juncture with the Begrade-Orient line at Matejevac.

GERMANS WITHIN TWELVE MILES OF DESIRED POINT

London.—Field Marshal von Hindenburg's battering ram tactics have brought his left center to Olai, a village between Milau and Riga, and twelve milesf rom the Russian fort. His offensive is making progress east of Olyai in the direction of Kekkau, ten miles directy south of Riga, and his right has reached the Dvinal River on a stretch of nearly ten miles, at a point thirty southeast of the fort, whence his arillery controls the Dvinsk-Riga railroad.

This briefly sums up the results to last night of the desperate battle being waged for thec hief city of the Baltic provinces. The main German effort is being directed on a twenty mile front, extending from Oloi to the Dvina, but the general offensive is taking in a line seventy miles in length, running in a semi-circle from the Aa River to Dvinsk and the lake region beyond. Into this region the Germans have brought large units from the Pripet sector and the Upper Niemen, which have been immobilized either by the smaller rivers or the strength of the Russian defence. These reinforcements in men have been supplemented with great increases in artillery, and the cannonade of the Russion positions has exceeded anything yet experienced in the northern zone. Last night's official communication from Petrograd mentioned particularly the violence of the bombardment on the front east of Olai.

As an offset to the German advance in the north the Russians, by a dashing attack, have carried the German positions southeast of Baronovichi, an important railway junction east of Slonm on the Lida-Rovno Railway, taking more than 3,000 prisoners, and, according o a German official admission, have continued their success on the middle Styr, south of the Pripet marshes, in Volhynia and Galicia.

SALESMANSHIP CLASS GETS DOWN TO WORK

The first meeting of the class in Saleshipmanship and Business Effciency course will take place in the office of the Chamber of Commerce tonight at 7:30. At this time the class will begin the actual work of the course. Complete instructions have been received from the Knox School of Salesmanship and the members of the class have for several days been preparing themselves for the discussion of the opining lesson—"Salesmanship Analysis." This course is being conducted by the young Business men themselves who are interested in improving the quality of the service they can render to their employers and to the public. There is nothing spectacular about the course, it is simply a business-like attempt to study the methods that have been used successfully by brainy business managers thec ountry over It is building for the future.

If the course proves to be all that its sponsers claim for it, it is quite likely that another class will be organized in the Spring. In the meantime the business men of the city will watch thee xperiment with considerable interest.

DENTAL SCIENCE PROMOTES HEALTH OF ENTIRE BODY

Sound Teeth Necessary to Digestion —Decayed Teeth the Cause of Half Humanity's Ills.

The enlightenment of the age in which we live is demonstrated nowhere more strikingly than in the increasing care given to the teeth and the cleanliness of the mouth by the average man, woman and child; and this advancing hygienic intelligence is due principally to the campaign of education which has been conducted in recent years in the form of dental clinics in American cities.

One of the pioneers and most systematic workers along these lines is Dr. John Benz, a leading dentist of Syracuse, N. Y., and president of the Benz Manufacturing Company, makers of Dr. Benz Tooth Paste. No one better than Dr. Benz knows the serious consequences of habitual neglect of the teeth, gums and mouth.

"The structure of the human body contains nothing so hard as the enamel covering of the teeth: and yet this substance is doomed to a quick process of disintegration and decay when subjected to the action of mouth acids. These are produced as a result of germs, microbes or bacteria, forming in tiny particles of food lodging and decomposing between and about the teeth.

"A day or two's neglect is sufficient to create this condition, the germs working on the enamel, wearing it away little by little, until a puncture is made and the bacteria find their way to the softer, limy substance, of which the interior of the teeth is composed, and the work of destruction is accomplished with greater ease and rapidity.

"Decayed teeth are responsible not only for indigestion, dyspepsia, headache, neuralgia and rheumatism, but also for many cases of deafness, blindness, and even insanity.

"Every man, woman and child should visit a dentist at least once in six months for examination and thorough cleaning of the teeth; and the home care of them should consist in the careful removal after each meal of particles of food, and the cleaning of the teeth and mouth three times a day with a dentifrice of acknowedged worth."

The ideal preparation is Dr. Benz Tooth Paste, which embodies the latest discoveries in dental science. It is compounded of magnesia and bicarbonate ofsoda, with the addition of certain costly essential oils, to which last are due its smooth, polishing quality, its tonic healing properties and its agreeable flavor.

It is free from grit, contains no potasium chlorate or other dangerous drugs; it destroys germs, prevents the accretion of acids in the mouth, hardens the gums and gives the teeth that pearly white luster which is the natural appearance of healthy teeth. For sale by E. A. Putnam, 108 Oneida St.

In the same October in which New York state men are gravely debating whether woman suffrage is a safe political venture, in Norway women by the hundred thousand calmly invaded the polling places and deposited their ballots.

To the charge that woman suffrage and divorce are always in company, the Norway women reply that in equal suffrage Norway there are but six divorces per one hundred thousand while in Japan where votes for women is still a far cry there are thirty times as many.

2 MEN KILLED AND 4 HURT WHEN NEW BUILDING FALLS

Oswego.—Two men were killed and four more badly injured yesterday afternoon at 3:30 o'cock when the roof of the new Pierce building in West 2nd st. collapsed, and the men were buried under a mass of concrete and twisted iron girders.

The collapse came practically without warning to the fourteen men, who, under the direction of Moses I. Fournier, the foreman, were engaged in the construction of the building. The dead are:

Eli Field, 60, of Bridgeport, brother-in-law of Horace D. Pierce, an undertaker in Altmar.

Stanley Wawzomek, 38, a Pole, residing at No. 320 West Fifth street.

The injured are:

Thomas Davis, Newark, rib fractured, cut and bruised.

Frederick Clark, No. 299 East Second street, Oswego, ankle sprained, cut and bruised.

Charles Janauschek, No. 314 West Fifth street, Oswego, laceration of wrist, bruised and shaken up.

Robert P. Henry, No. 48 West Bridge street, wrist and arm lacerated; also bruised and shaken up.

Last night's Oswego Times gives the following account of the accident:

A large force of workmen under Mr. Fournier's direction dug away the mass of wreckage and within a few minutes had recovered the bodies of the victims. Crushed in and death had probably been instanteneous.

Stanley had his face and head crushed and Mr. Field had been caught underneath one of the huge girders and his back broken and chest crushed. The Pole had been caught across the head by a heavy piece of steel and practically his entire face had been shorn off. Death in both cases had been instantaneous according to physicians present when the bodies were removed.

Mr. Pierce's collie dog was on the roof beside Mr. Field at the time of the collapse and was buried in the wreckage but when he was dug out of the ruins was apparently uninjured.

Mayor Hennessey was in the city hall when the colalpse occurr ed and saw the accident from a rear window. He hurried to the scene, accompanied by others, including Acting Chief Gillen, and city officials and Patrolmen Mowatt and McGrath.

The accident occurred opposite fire headquarters and the men of Hose Company No. 1 and the hook and ladder trucks were called out. They raised ladders and furnished axes, bars and other implements with which the wreckage was removed.

It was later stated that Mr. Field was a resident of Bridgeport, Conn.

Two employer of Corregan & Son, Margaret Bonner and Ernest Halfelt had narrow escepes, the debris from the roof striking the rear of the Corregan store and crushing through a skylight and tearing away a portion of the roof.

The electrric light wires were brought down in the collapse and firemen were stationed at he wires unti linemen could pick hem up out of the way.

Oxy-acetylene tanks were brought down from the S. C. B. Garage to be used in burning the steel girders so that the body of Mr. Field could be removed.

A number of Fulton people were near the scene of the accident, among whom were: Mr. and Mrs. Ross Eaton, Mr. Morris Powers, Mrs. Merton E. Reynolds and Mrs. Charles Locke.

Mrs. Reynolds and Mrs. Locke were in the McDonald store, which is located close to the Pierce building when the lights in the store suddenly went dark. They heard a deafening crash, and clerks and shoppers rushed for the street.

30,000 PERSONS MARCH IN SUFFRAGE PARADE IN NEW YORK TODAY

New York.—The consternation that spread through suffragist ranks when it was announced that dogs would not be permitted in the parade today was relieved last night when it was announced that a checking station for the pets would be established in Washington square.

Every woman who appears at the rendezvous for the start of the parade with her dog will be taken from the line and led to the dog checkery, it was explained. There her animal will be placed in a box or wire cage, borrowed from a kennel show, and a corps of women experts on handling dogs will be in charge. The dog will be checked just as one checks her dripping umbrella upon entering a restaurant. A brass check will be attached to the dog's collar and its corresponding check will be given to the animal's owner.

No discrimination will be made against men marching in the woman suffrage parade. They, too, may check their dogs.

Twenty thousand women and ten thousand men will march up Fifth avenue from Washingon squarre to Fifty-ninth street this afternoon to show publicly that they believe in the political equality of women. The demonsration will be the biggest of its kind ever held anywhere, and has been arranged by the various "votes for women" organizations to impress the voter favorably when he casts his ballot November 2 for the suffrage amendment.

Thousands of women stormed the suffrage headquarters yesterday purchasing buttons, pennants and parade hats until the supply gave out. There isn't n official model in millinery to be had for any price. The shops sold out completely early in the day, and disappointed marchers had to dig up last summer's sport hats of white, which are somewhat the same style as the official model, and rrim them up with suffrage colors.

Mrs. Herbert Carpenter, one of the carshals for the New York State suffrage division, issued strict orders yesterday that nobody in her column would be permitted to march if she wore earrings.

"It doesn't look neat and trim to have long dangling ornaments in your ears," was he answer she gave to any who demurred at the for he sake of parading for the political advancement of women."

HANNIBAL AND TERRITORY ADJACENT TO BE MADE PART OF THIS COMMUNITY

The Fulton-Hannibal bus line will be put into operation about November 1st, according to Theodore Wilson, a member of thhe firm of Wilson & Scott, which company will operate the new line. Five trips daily will be made with a new seven-passenger automobile. No trips will be made on Sunday. The first trip out of Fulton in the morning will be at 7 a. m. The last trip out at night will be at 6:15 p. m., with the exception of Saturday night when the car will leave Fulton on the last trip at 10:15 p. m.

The car will leave the Wilson & Scott station in Cayuga street and will stop at the corner of Oneida and 1st sts., Hannibal and W. 1st sts., and the city line to pick up passengers only on the trip west. Passengers will be discharged at these points on the return trip.

The fare from any point between the city line and Granby Center will be 10 cents, and the same fare will be charged to Granby Center. It will cost 15 cents to ride to Dexterville, 20 cents to Fairdale and 25 cents to Hannibal.

Merchants who purchase coupon books will receive them at the rate of 2 cents per mile.

Wilson & Scott have received a number of inquires in regard to the proposed bus line and the residents along the route are enthusiastic in regard to it. A number of parents of school children have signified their intention of making arrangements to carry the children to and from school.

WITH THE SUFFRAGISTS

If woman suffrage loses out in the campaign states on November 2, it will not be the fault of the press. A poll of editors throughout the country on the question of votes for women taken by theh Literary Digest showed that more than half of the thousand editors whose opinions were asked, replied, which is a most unusua percentage to respond to a questionaire, and that of the 526 replies 391 were affirmative.

In New York State alone the generosity of editors has given to the suffrage campaign an amount of publicity which must have mounted to figures fairly staggering if it had been charged for at advertising rates. But this is not all. The excellent editorials which have appeared all over the state, if collected, might be issued as a text book of arguments for the benefit of future suffrage campaigns. If the suffrage amendment carries to the editors must be given no small share in the credit.

In the same October in which New York state men are gravely debating whether woman suffrage is a safe political venture, in Norway women by the hundred thousand calmly invaded the polling places and deposited their ballots.

To the charge that woman suffrage and divorce are always in company, the Norway women reply that in equal suffrage Norway there are but six divorces per one hundred thousand while in Japan where votes for women is still a far cry there are thirty times as many.

All over the state suffrage workers are girding on their armor to battle on November 2 for the success of their amendment. Leaders are reminding the rank and file that Califonia was won for suffrage by a majority of 3,500 which was also the number of the election precincts in the state. When Mrs. Blatch carried the torch through the state, her call to the workers was to round up the voters on election day; that, as one voter lost in each precinct in California would have lost the state, so in New York a little extra diligence in each precinct may carry the state. So it will be watchers and as workers women will be an intimate part of the coming election and if the polling place is sure to contaminate women there will be plenty of them cheerfully exposing themselves to this danger, not, as a voter might for a few moments only, but from six in the morning till the last vote is in.

"When a girl grows up—graduates from college and turns from ancient history to modern," says The Survey of October 9, "when she looks to the way her men folk have run things, she makes such discoveries as Lord Byrce in his American Commonwealth never dreamed of. There's the 'stupid prehistorie monster' of her town government, the control of theb osses, and at the bottom of all else the brewery money, which is sheer waste and bound to go. The direct primary was the beginning of the end of money in elections, and votes for women will finish rubbing the dollar mark off the ballot."

MR. FOSTER IS A STICKER

In reviewing the work of the men who have placed before voters of the city three candidates for mayor, it cannot be said that there is a quitter among the products of the primaries.

In the case of the senior of the three, Mr. Brooks steps forth as a man with ripened experience in business, but he is lacking in certain other requisites; he is not gifted with experience in the maze of municipal politics and the conduct of city business, which should be a big business.

Mr. Lewis comes before the voters too as a successful man of business, and like the senior candidate for mayor, he is lacking in knowledge of he intricacies of a position that demands much and gives little in return.

Mr. Brooks and Mr. Lewis are not quitters—they are stickers.

And now we come down to a tall, lean man with clear, keen eyes, Mr. Foster, who has never, during his public life, been known to quit a job as long as there was a thread of hope left within sight. Mr. Foster has not made a brilliant or spectacular record for himself as an alderman, but he has been known as a man who could and would set about the task of placing himself squarely between a wrong principle and what his conscience indicated to him was right. For this, the people of Fulton are bound to hold Mr. Foster in higher esteem than ever. Many times during his term of office as alderman it would have been easy for him to regard his task as completed, and to ask of himself that he be allowed to pursue the policy found convenient by some of his colleagues, viz; That of the least resistance. Many times during Mr. Foster's career as a public official it has been necessary for him to "stay on the job" when by staying he was made to feel somewhat uncomfortable, but his devotion to duty won out, and now it is quite apparent to most of us that he has won the admiration and approval of the people of this city.

Mr. Foster deserves to be elected as mayor of Fulton.

SALESPEOPLE—CLERKS

Salespeople engage themselves to work for the best interests of the store, the organization.

Clerks work for their own selfish interests until they can engage themselves to some man or some rich widow.

Salespeople dress modestly, talk modesty. They consider their position as one of honor—a trust.

Clerks gossip, chew gum and gad nights. They resent suggestions for theiro wn good, and are instantly offended over criticism. Clerks will not like this article.

Clerks expect employers to tolerate many more things than they should, simply because they are women and have to work, or because thhey are small men and must be supported.

Salespeople are the most important factors in a store.

Clerks are the greatest disappointment.—The Silent Partner.

RURAL SCHOOL NEEDS

A speaker at the recent BankFarmer Conference in Chicago shed an odd little sidelight on that much debated question of a literacy test for immigrants. It is contended—cogently too—that a man who has had no educational opportunities in his childhood is less apt, on the whole, to make a profitable citizen than one brought up in a community where education is prized. On that principle Congress declared that persons unable to read and write in any language should be excluded.

It is well known that the immigrant usually settles in a city, and there his children attend a public school that cost all the way from a hundred thousand to half a million dollars, a school probably well built, well ventilated and well equipped. Public school libraries, laboratories, gymnasiums, lecture rooms, will probably be available to that immigrant child.

"Turn now," said Professor Christie, of Purdue, "to the children of native stock engaged in the basic industry of agriculture." We find them tramping down a muddy road into a little bare, two-by-four schoolroom that has no pictures, no shrubs, no books, no laboratory, where they are taught by a girl sixteen to eighteen years old, just out of high school, with no training, burdened with a multiplicity of duties. And we say that upon these native farmers' boys and girls the hope of America depends!"

Think that over. Does the unattractive, incompetent, out-of-date, one-room country school still obtain in your region? Or have your neighbors waked up and begun consolidating the rural-school districts—with a tolerably convenient, fairly well-equipped, comparatively modern graded school in each new district?—Saturday Evening Post.

WHY BUSINESS IS BETTER

Recent refusal of an order for 2,000,000 blankets for the entente allies by F. C. Huyck & Sons of Renssalaer, because they are so rushed with other work, is cited by the Albany Argus as being one of the signs of a rising tide in business.

The newspaper referred to backs up its statement by calling attention to the following facts: United States Steel Corporation's unfilled tonnage increased 409,163 tons during September; iron and steel exports broke records in August with 401,000 tons shipped to foreigners; railroad earnings showed 2 per cent increase over last year; idle cars now number 78,701 against 106,701 on April 1st, railroads have placed largeo rders for equipment; bank clearings, estimated at $4,225,777,320 last week, reached $4,471,406,684 the week previous; an addition of more than 50 per cent to the record of the corresponding week of 1912, when business was ranked as "good."

Those facts are indeed signs of better times. Furthermore they show that in spite of the mighty handicaps inflicted upon business by Washington, the country is sound at heart and is able to carry the load imposed by the tariff tinkerers.

But it has been a hard pull and one the United States will not want to repeat for a long, long time.—Batavia News.

DUTCH TREAT IN LONDON

The anti-treating law which was tried in Liverpool and found to be successful in reducing the consumption of liquor has now been put into effect in London. Reports from London indicate that on the first day law was well observed by patrons of hotels and the better class of restaurants and bars, but in some sections of the east end the patrons of low bars, for whose benefit the law was passed, were inclined to evade it. The penalty is a fine of $500 and it would seem that if the police are determined to put a stop to treating they should have no trouble after a few widely advertised convictions. Soldiers were the chief offenders. for the reason no doubt, that they believe their weeks in the trenches entitle them to a certain license.

Saloon keepers are agreed that the new order means a depreciation in their business of from 30 to 40 per cent. This may be enough to make the traffic in. liquor so unprofitable that many saloon keepers will have to go out of business. Ones aloon more or less is nothing when the welfare of a nation is involved. And while this thought may be little consolation to the bankrupt, it should sustain him until he can see the effects of the anti-treating law on the recruiting. Conscription is in the air in England, but it may be put off for some time if the brains of impoverished drunkards can be kept clear long enough to enable the government to do its work if persuasion. The point is that Great Britain needs soldiers more than saloons.

But the vast majority of saloons in London will continue to do business. Under present conditions they supply artificial stimulant and cheer, to a great many persons who believe they need it. Under the anti-treating rule men who formerly drank at home, where they could take one drink and stop, will go into saloons because they know that if they should happen upon a group of friends they will not be compelled to observe the unwritten law of thhe barrom—a drink round, whether you want it or not. It will be ac ase of have a drink on yourself.—Watertown Standard.

Elect a Republican Assembly

The coming session of the Legislature will be one of the most important in years. Should the new constitution be adopted at the polls it will be the duty of the Legislature to frame laws carrying out the constitutional changes. Moreover, important legislation, proposing to eliminate use less offices and to put the state departments on a businesslike basis is to be presented.

Tammany already is growling at the new constitution. Tammany has no use for a measure which would save the taxpayers money; no use for a consolidation of departments that would cut out useless jobs and establish a responsible centralized government.

Tammany controls the Democratic Party of the State of New York. The Tammany group in the Assembly controls the destinies of the Democratic Party in that branch of the Legislature. To elect an Assembly which could be managed and controlled by Tammany would be to put state affairs back to the days of Dix, Sulzer and Glynn.

The one sure way of keeping Tammany out is to elect a Republican Assembly.—Ithaca Journal.

W. C. T. U. NOTES

(Compiled by Local Union)

Prohibition is in nowise a detriment to a state or county fair. Despite the dismal predictions of the liquor sympathizers to the contrary, the dry West Virginia state fair at Wheeling this year broke all previous records. One West Virginia paper said of it: "Wheeling's great fair reached its greatest proportions with its largest crowds under prohibition." Another, in an interesting front page story acknowledged the superiority of this year's fair, and added these significant words:

"A particular note of the big crowd was that it was a distinguished delegation of theb est people of the Wheeling district, to say nothing of the thousands who came from afar. It was the most orderly crowd that ever collected in the Ohio valley at a similar affair. The police were simply ornaments, for there were no fights or disorders of any kind. Rather different from the stories that appeared when Wheeling was filled with saloons, now isn't it? It also nails a lie of the wets that without booze the state fair could not be held."

"The liquor men haven't had a new idea in forty years," said Mrs. Mary Harris Armor, in a recent address in Ohio, at the same time offering one dollar in cash for every new argument in favor of the liquor traffic.

The beautiful silk flag of the National W. C. T. U. floated triumphantly inf ront of Rest Cottage and National Headquarters the morning the news of the victory in South Carolina was received. Thhe telegram from the state president read; "Hoist Old Glory high; South Carolina has gone dry."

Miss Julia Lathrop, head of the Federal Children's Bureau in Washington, said in a recent interview:

"I do not care so much for the vote for myself or for men as I do for mothers. Theg reat test is whether it will be useful in the hands of 13,000,00 0children. I believe it will."

The sheriff of Hudson county, New favoring woman suffrage, and he is Jersey, has a very definite reason for favoring woman suffrage, and he is not afraid to state it. According to The Woman's Journal, he says, "During my service as sheriff of Hudson county I have found that there are fifty men in our jail to one woman. My conclusion is that since women know how to obey the laws better than men, they should know how to aid in framing them intelligently."

VOTE "YES" ON CANAL QUESTION

It Is Proposition No. 1 on the Ballot.

A BUSINESS-MAKING STEP.

Completed Barge Canals Will Be a Money-Making, Cost-of-Living Reducing Asset to Every Section of the State.

The Citizen voters of the state by voting "yes" on the barge canal referendum will cast their ballot for a business-building, work-creating, trade-increasing, state-wide, money-making proposition.

This is known on the ballot and voting machines as Proposition Number One.

Proposition number one is the Canal Referendum.

The voters are asked to authorize an issue of $27,000,000 in bonds to complete the barge canals.

Of this $27,000,000 the state is now committed to pay $13,500,000 for land damages.

The state treasury must also be reimbursed to the extent of $3,654,000 for money advanced on going contracts.

These amounts, totaling over $17,000,000, must be paid by bond issue if the voters vote yes or by direct tax if the voters say no.

The remaining $10,000,000 will complete the canals and open to traffic the greatest artificial waterway in the world.

By voting "yes" on the canal referendum the cost of completing this gigantic undertaking is spread over a long period of years.

If the cost is not met by bond issue, the property owners of the state will be compelled to meet the cost by direct tax.

Chambers of Commerce, Boards of Trade, Associations of Manufacturers, Business Men's Clubs and Organizations, Local and State Organizations of many branches of labor are urging upon the voters the importance and necessity of having the state's barge canals completed without further interruption or delays.

After a very careful survey the State Engineer, Frank Williams, has compiled figures showing that the barge canals within a single year, after they are completed, will be able to save the shippers of the state from $7,500,000 to $15,000,000.

The May, July and August numbers of the Bulletin of the American Geographical Society has carried a series of articles on the New York State barge canals, written by traffic experts, pointing out that "there is cause to believe that the tonnage on the barge canals will be greater than tonnage developed on the old Erie canal and it will rank high among the world's biggest waterways. The communities that will be chiefly benefited are those within New York state, but the entire Great Lakes and St. Lawrence regions and the Atlantic seaboard will be helped and stimulated."

This in a nutshell explains why the state Committee on Canal Referendum, headed by Seth Low and men prominent in the industrial, commercial, financial and other organizations of the state, are urging voters to remember the Canal Referendum.

"Remember it." "Vote Yes." It is proposition No. One on the ballot.

Valuable Medical Advice.

An anxious inquirer writes to the medical department of a New York paper, "Would you kindly tell me if there is any cure for a bunion?"

To which the medical journalist replies:

"You will get help from (1) walking pigeon toed; (2) wearing sandals."

The doctor does not mention it, but a bad case of pigeon toes can be cured by walking bow legged. The remedy for chronic bowlegs is to walk knock-kneed. Should knockknees bring on pigeon toes again one can, of course, always escape back to bunions.

What would humanity do without the science of medicine as practiced in the newspapers?—Outlook.

FLOWERS FOR THE ROCKERIES

Makes an Attractive Substitute for the Flower Garden—White Blossoms Very Effective.

If one has not space enough for a flower garden, or does not wish the care of a garden, a little rockery will be an attractive substitute and one that involves little labor in maintenance.

A rockery of white blossoms is especially effective. Here is a combination that is easily grown; Sweet alyssum, which blossoms profusely and can be cut all summer; candytuft, gypsophila and white portulacca. Do not sow portulacca until the weather is warm and settled; but once under way it is a sturdy plant and needs little care. All these flowers are hardy annuals, may be sown from seed in the spring and will flower during the summer.

If the rockery is to be permanent it would be better to plant some perennials. Kenilworth ivy, a small trailer that bears small lavender or purple flowers, and the helianthenum or rock rose, which comes in various colors, are good selections. For a yellow and white effect use, say, the yellow dwarf nasturtiums and the yellow portulacca. The nasturtiums spread rapidly and flower profusely during the greater part of the season.

Dwarf morning glory is a pretty vine for rockeries, and the pink and white flowers are especially effective when grown with a mass of lavender flowers, rose-colored portulacca, rock rose, Kenilworth ivy, gypsophila and sweet alyssum.

VALUE OF SCHOOL GARDENS

Encourages the Child to Get Into Close Communion With Mother Nature.

The value of school gardens in placing the child in close communion with Mother Nature cannot be overestimated. In these times of warfare we recall the words of one writer who asked:

"What conqueror in any part of life's battle could desire a more beautiful, more noble or a more patriotic monument than a tree planted by the hands of pure and joyous children?"

Ex-Gov. Curtis Guild of Massachusetts said: "Let the children in the public schools be taught that every egg they take from the nests of the birds means the loss of a little friend of Massachusetts; means one less winged crusader against the gypsy moth, the brown-tail moth and the crawling pests that destroy the food of the people and the beauty of the land. Save the trees! Save the birds that we may save the trees!" In the school gardens the children have some very practical and often painful lessons regarding damage to plant life through destructive insects.

Take Care of the Parks.

Years and years ago the necessity for presenting any extended argument in favor of the ownership of extensive parks by municipalities was obviated. It has come to be generally understood and appreciated that these outdoor breathing places afford not only pleasure, but profit, and that instead of being a liability they are a very valuable asset in the community which has them. To be sure, those who have automobiles or horses and who can go out into the country as far and as often as they like are not particularly anxious for these nearby grass plots, and yet when they have visitors they are sure to take them there, and they point with pride to these evidences of municipal enterprise. They ought cheerfully to pay their share to provide these parks for those whose lack of means prevents them from getting out into the country at their will, and having an hour or an afternoon in the sun or the shade, in the fresh, pure air. There is no other tax in town which ought to be more cheerfully paid than that which goes for parks.—Utica Press.

Finnish Respect For the Law.

In Finland there is a deep and prevailing respect for law.

"Can I have a shot at an elk?" asked a stranger of a peasant who lived on the fringe of a forest well stocked with this noble game.

"No, sir. It's against the law."

"What is the penalty?"

"Two hundred Finnish marks."

"All right. Will you come along with me if I agree to pay the fine?"

"No, I won't. It's against the law, and I'm not going to break it."—Russian Characteristics."

STIRRING CAREER OF "WALLINGFORD" STAR

BURR McINTOSH, NOW PLAYING FILM ROLE, HAS LIVED ADVENTUROUS LIFE.

STAR ATHLETE AT COLLEGE

Journalist and Editor of Wide Repute, Famed Photographer and Noted Actor Among His Many Experiences.

Actor, author, photographer, publisher, lecturer, and coal mine magnate, here is a list of activities any one of which is sufficient to engage an ordinary man his whole life, but Burr McIntosh is no ordinary man. That's why he has been signed for the Wharton production of Pathe's "The New Adventures of J. Rufus Wallingford." George Randolph Chester said Mr. McIntosh was the one man to play "Wallingford", and his advice has been followed.

Mr. McIntosh was a classmate at Princeton University with the Hon. Job Hedges, Senator Pomerene of Ohio, Hon. John Harlan of Chicago, Wm. Steward Tod, the philanthropic millionaire; the late "Alec" Moffat, and others, and he is by no means the least famous of that famous group. Look at the height and width of him and you will readily believe that back in his college days he held the 100 yard intercollegiate championship and played on the varsity baseball and football teams.

BURR McINTOSH

On leaving college he went back to his home in Pittsburgh where his father was president of the largest bituminous coal mining company in the country. Our college athlete at once jumped into both business and politics forming the "Six Foot Republican Marching Club" of 150 men, each of whom was six feet or over in his stocking feet. Pittsburgh still speaks with pride of that remarkable organization.

Tiring of the coal business, Mr. McIntosh left to become a journalist in Philadelphia, and got a job at $10 a week on the "Philadelphia News." Within five weeks he had a full page expose of the most notorious thieves' resort in the city. The proprietor of the dive, James Kane, was starting for the "News" office with a gun in his pocket when he ran into McIntosh's brother "Andy" and killed him instead.

Having sufficiently proven his versatility in business and reporting, Mr. McIntosh went on the stage, making his debut in Bartley Campbell's play "Paquita" at the Fourteenth Street Theatre. Some of the parts which he made famous are "Colonel Moberley" in "Alabama", "Jo Vernon" in "In Missoura", "Joe", the cowboy in "The Cowboy and the Lady"; and other southern character parts. His best work, perhaps, was as "Pudd'nhead Wilson" as "Senator Langdon" in "The Gentleman from Mississippi", "Col. Watterson Blossom" in "Cordelia Blossom", and "Taffy" in "Trilby."

The Burr McIntosh Monthly is everywhere admitted to have been the most perfect pictorial publication of its time, and it was Mr. McIntosh's own product. As a photographer he won the Grand Prize (1000 francs) in the Paris Figaro contest of art and beauty with a portrait of Maude Fealy. In 1905 he was the official photographer of the Taft trip to the Philippines. He also secured some wonderful photographs in the Spanish-American war. His experience in these two trips he made into the lectures "With Secretary Taft in the Orient," and "The United States and Its Menaces", which he has given before hundreds of thousands of people.

Mr. McIntosh, as may be seen, has done many things and done them all well. It is safe to prophesy a splendid interpretation of "Wallingford" by him in this new Pathe series, especially as in the cast with him are the famous Max Figman and the charming Lolita Robertson.

Miss Robertson, herself, has experienced many exciting happenings, although they do not compare with those of her co-star.

LOSSES WILL BE STOPPED

State's Previous Big Investment Useless Until Canals Are Finished and Equipped—Canals a Vital Agency in Promoting Industrial, Agricultural and Commercial Welfare.

Approval of the canal referendum at the election in November will provide funds for the equipment of the entire canal system so that the canals can be put into operation and any further loss of interest on the investment be stopped.

As soon as the great barge canals are put into operation the people will begin to realize the benefits from economical transportation of the products of the fields, the mines, the factories and of general merchandise. That has been the chief economic cause in building up all parts of the state. This must not be lost sight of in determining how to vote on the pending canal referendum.

The direct benefits arising from cheap transportation by water are generally recognized, but the indirect benefits are far greater. As a regulator of transportation rates in this state, whether by water or by rail, its canal system has been of incalculable benefit to all its people. All traffic experts recognize this, and the interstate commerce commission has on more than one occasion called attention to this fact.

The state has within its possession a canal system which in several respects outranks the Panama canal as a vital agency in promoting the industrial, agricultural and commercial welfare of its people. The voters need only to have this brought to their attention to appreciate the importance of voting affirmatively upon the pending canal referendum, which will complete the project and make it useful and serviceable to all classes. But little remains to be done.

Most of the canal construction is already completed. Let us finish the work and put it into operation and realize the benefits that will accrue from this modernized enlarged canal system to all parts of the state.

Do not fail to vote affirmatively on the canal referendum for the bond issue and thus enable the barge canals to be completed and put into operation rather than be delayed and necessitate the legislature making appropriations of funds from the treasury and thereby imposing unnecessary burdens upon the taxpayers for the next few years, which will be avoided by the sale of the state's bonds.

The work is nearly completed. Let it be finished as expeditiously as possible and save the commerce of the state, which is already imperiled by its diversion through the Montreal and other routes to the sea.

Vote for the canal referendum.

FUN RAYS

By Ray I. Hoppman

CIVILIZATION

THE caveman slammed his brother with a heavy wooden club. We lift our hands in horror at the antics of this dub. The red man chopped the paleface with the feathered tomahawk and danced in joyful manner when he heard the victim squawk. The savage in the jungle gayly grins from ear to ear a'stabbing missionaries with a poison pointed spear. We voice our indignation at the fierce, bloodthirsty Turk — too handy with the pistol and the scimitar and dirk. We read of middle ages with a horror that's intense and shiver when we think about the armor covered gents. The Puritan his victim put in pillory and rack and gave him sixty wallops for a trifle, on the back. The pirate tortured seamen on the high seas by the score. They did not waste affection in the awful days of yore. We thank our stars we're living in this grand enlightened age. We compliment ourselves for having reached this cultured stage. We teach the howling heathen that it's naughty, don't you know, to slam a loving brother with a mallet on the toe. And so we pride ourselves that we're as noble as can be. We're boastful of our culture and our high mentality. We're civilized, I tell you, though we use the Gatling gun to mow 'em down by the thousands as we put 'em on the run. We're civilized, I tell you, though we drop bombs from the sky and kill 'em by the hundreds in the twinkling of an eye. We're highly cultured mortals, though we use the submarine to sink a thousand sailors—from the ocean depths, unseen. Ah, yes, we're much more civilized than people were before. We've made a lot of progress in the noble art of war.

SUCH IS LIFE.

WHILE one-half, bejabers! toils steady and labors, the rest of the world lolls in ease. And when we feel happy, our neighbors are scrappy and do just about as they please. And, gosh! ain't it funny? Some people have money and others can't scare up a dime. Some mortals are lucky, while others, real plucky, lose out ev'ry dodgasted time. Some laugh long and loudly—some strut with mien proudly and others are chucking the bluff. And folks that are healthy, quite seldom are wealthy, and healthy folks lack the green stuff. If half the world knoweth not what this half doeth—a funny old world it is sure. It's full of the toilers, the crooks and the spoilers—the honest, the rich and the poor. Now, why should a favored old guy, money savored, loll 'round in a big limousine? And why should another, his poor luckless brother, clean streets for a small stack of green? And why should a poet, a poor unwise "know it," write verse for the price of a prune, while others will squander the coin as they wander, and live in perpetual June? It does seem unequal; but hark to the sequel—it's time that I finished this rhyme. One lives by his working—the other, his shirking, and thus will it be for all time.

Heretofore summers have been known to do the "comeback" act well into October.

MAKING FARMING PAY

EVERY farmer hopes to make a profit as the result of his labors. He toils early and late and spares no trouble to see that his crops are properly planted and harvested. His stock requires constant attention, and, taking it altogether, he has few spare minutes.

Most of the farmers in our community are prosperous. Our market is a good one, while there are certain things to be desired, and we all reap our share of the results to our advantage.

There is one benefit which the farmer receives from his labors that we do not share in but in the making of which we all have a hand. That is the added value of his holdings as they grow in desirability and as the demand for land in our neighborhood increases.

Because increased land values come as the result of conditions which afford additional opportunities of profitable crop raising, not the least of which is the market which permits of a quick and desirable sale. Naturally there can be no need of a market if there is nothing to sell, nor can there be a profitable sale unless there is the right market.

So the increase in the value of the farm comes with the better market conditions, the farmer finding better prices as the market becomes more popular and the market becoming more popular with the number of farmers.

THOSE WHO HELP TO MAKE THE MARKET BETTER ARE ENTITLED TO THE THANKS AND GOOD WILL OF THE FARMER. We all try our best to bring about such a condition and in this way we help to make farming pay.

As a result of our efforts to help the farmer we expect him to do something in return. And when the thought is carefully analyzed it will be seen that we are actually asking him only to help himself even more than he will be helping us, by doing that which we ask.

We ask the farmer to buy his merchandise at home instead of sending to the big mail order houses for his goods. We believe that he can buy at home just as advantageously as to send his orders out of town and that he will be even better satisfied with his merchandise if he buys of our local storekeepers. But the main point is this: We need all of the money in town. We need it for the purposes of business and we need the business that he is accustomed to send away to the mail order houses.

We want to stop their encroachments on local trade. We want to encourage local business men to provide stocks suitable and sufficient for local consumption, but if we send away for the goods we need, then the local business men will become discouraged and decline to invest their money and credit in stocks for our town.

In order to help himself the farmer must help the local merchant. It is only by such reciprocal conditions that a community can become prosperous and grow into a bigger community. And it is only by the fact that a farm is located in proximity to a good market that the farm will become more valuable.

Even if a farmer can make a profit on the buying of certain goods from a mail order house, in the end it will mean that he has helped to stultify his home market, which tends to keep down land values. A DULL MARKET NEVER MADE A BIG TOWN.

In this, we can all help and we are trying to help. The farmers who send their orders to the mail order houses do not think of the effect which their acts have on the community. They do not realize that they are helping to create a sentiment which cannot but injure the financial condition of our home town; a sentiment which interferes with the growth of the community and with the prosperity of every owner of land.

So, to make farming pay, in both the direct and the indirect way, stand by the townspeople and help local business conditions. Every farmer has a share and an interest in his home town. He is as much affected by the prevailing conditions in the town as he is by the conditions on his own farm. THE TOWN CANNOT HAVE PROSPERITY WITHOUT HIS CO-OPERATION AND HE CANNOT LOOK FOR PROSPERITY IF HE DOES NOT LIVE IN A PROSPEROUS COMMUNITY.

Any man can injure his community by failing to co-operate with those whose interests are similar to his own. Shortsightedness may make a man believe that he is not included in this general rule, but few can successfully evade its application.

Make farming pay by helping to "boost" your home town. Do your business with our local storekeepers. You will prosper more in the long run.

PARCEL POST BUSINESS HEAVY IN TWO WEEKS

Postmaster Peter T. Conley reports an increase in the parcel post business at the local postoffice. For the first fifteen days of the month 1438 parcels were mailed the total weight of which was 3295 pounds, and the aggregate postage amounted to $120.95.

For the same period more parcels were received here for dellivery than were sent out, the number of the former being 3251, of which the city carriers delivered 1385; the rural carriers, 708; special delivery, 5. The general dellivery window had a share in the distribution, there being 161 packages dellivered at that point and in the lock boxes. The horse-drawn vehicle employed by the post office delivered 1262 parcels at a cost of $31.28. Quite a number of parcels were delivered without cost of any kind, the number being 2259.

Mr. Conley says that the parcel post business at the local office shows a substantial increaseo ver the same period of 1914.

FOSTER SAYS CITY IS TOO POOR TO PAY SALARY TO SUCCESSFUL CANDIDATE

Common Council last night granted the Wilson & Scott Company permission to operate a bus line from Fulton to Hannibal and adopted a resolution to transfer from the excise fund $1,700 to the police, poor and improvement funds. A resolution to accept an offer made by the State Superintendent of Public Works to make use of the State land situated at the corner of First and Oneida sts. for city park purposes, was also offered and acted upon.

In granting the license to operate the bus line to Hannibal, four conditions were attached, namely:

1. The license is to expire on December 31, 1916.
2. The license fee is to be $2.00.
3. The fares announced in the schedule already prepared by the company are not to be changed during the life of the license.
4. The lincense will not be trasferable unless by special consent of the Council.

A letter from General Wotherspoon, State Superintendent of Public Works, was read, in which the state grants the city right to use the abandoned Oswego Canal land adjoining the Waldhorn property for park purposes only, the one condition being that no permanent structure shall be placed on the site.

Mayor Fox suggested the possibility of having a soldier's monument erected at the corner.

In the $1,700 item transferred from the excise fund, $1,000 will go to the police fund, $500 to the poor fund, and $200 to the improvement fund.

Alderman Quirk wanted to know whether the new mayor of the city should receive a salary, to which Mayor Fox replied, "Our next mayor is here and he can speak for himself," at the same time nodding to Alderman Foster.

Mr. Foster stated that he did not believe the present financial condition of the city warrants an appropriation for this purpose. "It would be necessary to borrow the money," said Mr. Foster, "and for that reason I don't believe the matter should be taken up at this time. Besides, there are other candidates for the mayoralty."

NOTABLES IN THE LIMELIGHT

General Carlo Porro, Italian Subchief of Staff.

According to recent disclosures, the entrance of Italy into joint military action with England, France and Russia against Turkey was arranged by General Count Carlo Porro, subchief of staff of the Italian army, during his visit to the Anglo-French front in July.

Count Carlo Porro is the son of a former member of the Italian senate. He chose a military career and has risen to the rank of major general in the Italian army and is now second in command of King Victor's forces. General Porro is a man of strong character and by many of his countrymen is regarded as the leading soldier of the kingdom. On Dec. 4, 1905, Premier Fortis proposed General Porro for the post of undersecretary of war, although he was not a member of the house of deputies, a requirement. He was offered election to the chamber, but refused, and then, for the first time in the history of Italy, he was placed in the cabinet without having been elected a member of parliament.

Early in his military career General Porro reached the conviction that the Italian army was far behind other European military establishments in efficiency. Last year when Salandra became premier in succession to Giolitti he was strongly recommended to appoint General Porro to the post of minister of war. During the negotiations concerning the offer Porro submitted his views and declared himself willing to accept the post under conditions that Salandra would include without change Porro's reform program. This was refused. General Porro was then given command of the Sixth army corps and on April 1 this year was appointed subchief of the general staff of the army.

Head of New Labor College.

Eugene Victor Debs, national leader of the Socialist party, who recently announced the establishment of a national labor college known as the People's college at Fort Scott, Kan., has been elected president of the college. In his announcement President Debs says in part:

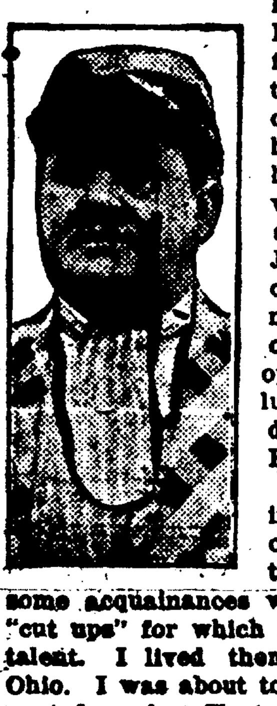
"The devotion and loyalty of the members of the People's College union will make this college a great working class school and a tremendous factor in the struggle for labor's emancipation. The People's College union is the one organized effort of the working class to control education. Through the correspondence department we are reaching thousands of the working class with education. This is real service in the social revolution."

EUGENE V. DEBS.

Mr. Debs is a native of Terre Haute, Ind., and is sixty years old. He began his business career as a locomotive fireman in 1871 and later served as city clerk of Terre Haute and also as a member of the Indiana legislature. For a number of years he was grand secretary and treasurer of the Brotherhood of Locomotive firemen, and from 1893 to 1897 was president of the American Railway union. In connection with a strike on western railroads in 1894 he was charged with conspiracy, but acquitted; then he was charged with violation of an injunction and sent to jail for six months. He has three times been candidate of the Socialist party for president of the United States.

Otis Harlan, King of American Comedians, Writes of the Personal Side of Charles Hoyt, Playwright

By OTIS HARLAN.



In the spring of 1887, at the Neil House, Columbus, Ohio, I first met the late Charles Hoyt. It was before I ever thought of going on the stage; I had been in Columbus for the wedding of a school friend. Jim Miller, an old circus man, then manager of the old Metropolitan opera house, Columbus, introduced me to Hoyt.

That evening in the historic old hotel I entertained Hoyt and some acquainances with some comic "cut ups" for which I had a peculiar talent. I lived then at Zanesville, Ohio. I was about to leave for home next day when Hoyt called. To make a long story short, he put me in his play "A Hole in the Ground." He was in Columbus rehearsing for the opening.

I remember that Hoyt was taken into the Elks lodge in Columbus the night before we opened. Flora Walsh was Hoyt's leading woman and he married Flora on July 25, 1887. She was seventeen on July 24th and Hoyt was twenty-seven on July 26 and they selected the day between for the wedding day. Charlie Reed, an old minstrel man, Fannie Stevens and I were at the wedding, which occurred at Charleston, N. Y.

"A Bunch of Keys," Hoyt's first success was suggested by Willie Edowin, who in later years starred in "Flora-dora." Hoyt never got a cent of royalty for writing the play.

"A Parlor Match" was developed by Hoyt from an old skit called "The Book Agent." This skit belonged to Evans & Hoey. The first real financial success that Hoyt enjoyed was his play "A Rag Baby." He had written a piece called "Cezelia," founded on a mythical patent medicine. It was never produced right and it became the theme for the last play Hoyt ever wrote, "A Dog in a Manger."

In 1884 Hoyt wrote "A Case of Wine," which was played in Texas by Charles Bishop. "A Case of Wine" later proved the foundation for Hoyt's play "A Texas Steer," recently filmed with great success by the Selig Polyscope company.

While we were playing "A Hole in the Ground," opening September 14, 1887, in the Fourteenth Street theater, New York city (my first appearance in New York city as an actor), Hoyt started writing "A Midnight Bell," which was first produced in Frisco by L. R. Stockwell in his stock company. Hoyt saw its possibilities and then produced it in the East.

Charles Hoyt had a way of writing about his players' personality and it was while "A Hole in the Ground" was on the boards that he wrote "A Brass Monkey" and put me in to do the song "Razzle Dazzle." The writer of this song, Wm. Barton, was so pleased that he made me a present of the song "The Wild Man of Borneo," which we did in "A Brass Monkey."

Hoyt always produced his pieces for two weeks in the spring around New England, then remained for a week in Jersey City, then closed for the summer, almost ready to produce the piece without change in the fall. Any alterations in the plot he would make in the summer months.

Hoyt has an unusual method of developing his plays. He would begin by telling his intimate friends about an idea and it was wonderful how he would enlarge it. Every time Hoyt told his idea he had some new comedy interest and he built up his plays by telling it over and over again. He would then sit down and write an entire show in two or three days for he had all the construction in his mind.

I have seen Hoyt sit in our Pullman sleeper, even in the day time, with the window shade drawn down over his head, looking out, but seeing nothing but the funny ideas that were tumbling out of his fertile brain. He was undoubtedly the most prolific and most successful playwright that American has ever known. He wrote all of his manuscripts in long hand, later having them typewritten.

Hoyt was a man difficult to approach. His most intimate friends never called him "Charlie." As a man he was cold and reserved. Frank McKee, his partner, even called him "Mr. Hoyt." He was also most economical with the pay roll. For three years I drew $25 weekly. He liked to split the difference in salaries as for example: One actor demanded $40 weekly and got $35, another asked for $35 and got $32.50. But outside business hours, in the cafe or the dining room, he corralled all checks. In business he was close, in social life unusually liberal.

Flora Walsh, loved by everyone, died in Boston while we were playing "A Texas Steer." Hoyt's second wife, Caroline Miskel Hoyt, died in New York city, while we were playing "A Day and a Night."

Poor Charles Hoyt died at Charleston, N. H., in November, 1900. Governor Rollins of New Hampshire had been petitioned to investigate his case by the people who asserted that Hoyt was not insane, but was being kept in charge for some ulterior purpose. I had called upon Hoyt previously and knew that he was not in his right mind. I have seen him shave himself, in his later years, while wearing a hat and overcoat in sultry weather. He was undoubtedly losing his mind for several years before anyone appreciated the fact. He had a horror of the fleur de lis. Did he spy the device at any time or place he would beat a hasty retreat. He could be very sarcastic at times.

Hoyt had a great fund of stories and his humor was wonderful. Everything seemed to strike his funny side. Even the names of his characters were studies in true humor.

"A Trip to Chinatown" was Hoyt's first failure. It failed to make any money on its preliminary presentation. Hoyt took the show to New York city, engaged the Madison Square Garden, put in a good cast and it went over and was the biggest hit he ever had. Society had never seen that class of stuff in those days.

There is no case on record where Hoyt ever wrote a play for a star. He didn't like to write for people he did not know well. He started "A Black Sheep" for William Hoey and with reluctance. Before the contracts were signed there was a hitch and Hoyt tore up the contract. Then he sent for me. He told McKee in my presence that he would rather write the play around my personality. "A Black Sheep" was a great success.

"A Contented Woman" was written for his wife. It is as up-to-date today as it was years ago, for it deals with suffragettes. You have perhaps noticed that all of the Hoyt's comedies start with "A." It was just another one of his peculiarities.

It is worthy of notice that one of the Hoyt plays "A Black Sheep," in which I achieved one of my biggest hits as an actor, is to be released as a Selig Red Seal Play. Little did I believe when acting in this comedy that I would again appear in the production as a motion picture star.

PRUNE TREES IN SUMMER

Farmers Trim in Foliage Season in Order to Check Wood Growth.

Summer pruning, as contrasted with the regular practice, is the pruning of trees while in foliage. Its influence upon the tree in many respects is opposite to winter pruning. The latter stimulates wood growth, while the former tends to lessen wood growth.

As a rule, any practice that checks wood growth tends to induce fruitfulness. Growers have taken advantage of this fact for many years. In England the result is attained by root pruning. The method consists in digging a trench around the tree at some considerable distance and severing some of the roots. This interferes with the food supply and necessarily reduces growth.

In the famous Ozark apple region of Missouri and Arkansas the same result is attained by ringing or girdling the trunk or main branches of the tree, thus checking the downward flow of sap. The roots in this way are partially starved and are, therefore, unable to induce a strong wood growth the following season. The work is done during the growing season and, as a result, the wound soon heals over. A complete or partial defoliation by insects, disease, or spraying injury during the early summer seems to have the same effect.—Farm and Home.

CITY MANAGER PLAN GROWS

The Commission Form of City Government Being Carried a Step Forward.

Though the so-called commission form of municipal government had its origin in Galveston, Iowa has done much to popularize the idea. The Des Moines plan of commission rule, which is a modification of the Galveston plan, has been much advertised. Several other cities of Iowa have the same system in operation.

The city manager plan, which is simply the commission plan carried a step further, is believed by many to represent the best thought on the subject of city government. Under this plan the commission chooses an executive officer to carry out its policies and holds him responsible for results obtained, whereas under the simple commission plan the commissioners divide the administrative responsibility among themselves, each commissioner taking the headship of a department of municipal service.

Iowa has shown its progressiveness by making it possible for cities of that state to add the city manager feature to the commission plan. An enactment of the legislature at its recent sessions permits cities governed by commissions to adopt the city manager feature by popular vote.

IDEA IN ORNAMENTAL POSTS

To Maintain Proper Alignment Property Owner Builds Them Over the Gutter.

In planning to place a pair of ornamental pillars on opposite sides of a roadway intersecting a thoroughfare in front of his grounds, a property owner found that the posts would be out of proper alignment if erected back of the curb line as had been intended. To overcome this difficulty he had the stonework constructed over the gutter, the back edges of the two members resting on the curb and the foreparts projecting into the street. In order not to obstruct the drain, the bases of the pillars, each of which are 20 inches square, were built with passages 18 inches broad and 8 inches high, beneath them.—Popular Mechanics.

Matter of Position.

Photographer—Why don't you bring your candidate up here for a photograph?

Manager—He says he won't stand for a thing.

Photographer—I believe he's lying.—Farm Life.

CHILD WELFARE HINT.

No garment should bind or restrict the chest of your girl. The ribs, especially in youth, are very elastic, and much of the development of the lungs depends upon their flexibility. Neglect of proper breathing and free exercise out of doors will bring rigid, unyielding walls. Unless the chest expands readily and properly the muscles gradually weaken, the back becomes aged and rounded, and the body actually suffers from malnutrition.

Such abnormalities are acquired unconsciously. A girl may fall into the habit of carrying one shoulder higher than the other, or she may bend forward at the shoulders, or there may be a slight curvature of the spine. In all these conditions the breathing space is lessened. An improper attitude when writing or reading will often ruin a woman's figure. This is especially true of a girl who is growing.

AN OLD BOXWOOD BORDER

There Are Some Survivals of Beautiful Garden Ornaments Still to Be Found.

Time was when the boxwood border was considered the very top notch of frontyard garden ornamentation. And it was thought to be very beautiful when trimmed into fantastic shapes or clipped evenly in rectangular outline. Take almost any of the old time novels, and in them will appear a description of the boxwood borders running a perfectly straight line from the colonial porch to the front gate. Boxwood hall was a favorite name for many an old time home.

The privet hedge has largely usurped the place of the boxwood border, says the Newark (N. J.) News. The latter was such a slow grower. Years after it was out it seemed hardly larger than when first planted. But it didn't send out impudent shoots in every direction; it grew slowly, sedately and in deliberately chosen directions. It was never in a hurry to be big. Boys may cut whips from an untrimmed privet hedge, but no one ever took such liberties with the dignified old boxwood bush. It did not promote corporal punishment.

There were two things about the boxwood border that none who are acquainted with it will ever forget; its dark green foliage, winter and summer, and its persistently unpleasant odor. The latter isn't like that of birch, sassafras, sandalwood, willow, butternut or cedar. It is more like that of the simplocarpus fetidus—the skunk cabbage. But the box bush stands up as stiff and dignified as if it were disseminating the perfumes of Araby the blest.

Now and then some very fine specimens of boxwood are found in this country, and wherever they are they point out a place having a history running back a century or two. These bushes have not been clipped or otherwise mutilated since our grandfathers' days, and have grown into great trees—that is, great for boxwood. Just such a bush was recently sighted near Mount Holly by a Long Island millionaire, and he paid a small fortune to have it removed to his estate. It was 12 feet high, more than 15 feet in diameter and with a great clump of clay attached to its ramified roots, weighed ten tons. It may live in its new home, but as a rule, these grand old box bushes resent removals after they are a hundred years old.

A fine group of box bushes adorns the old Elias Boudinot mansion on East Jersey street, Elizabeth, where both Washington and Lafayette were entertained in the old days. Four large bushes are still flourishing on the Stoudinger property, 353 Broad street, corner of Clay, in Newark. The house was built in 1832, and the box must have been planted later, but each of the four specimens is at least ten feet high and as many in diameter. Large sums have been offered for them time and again, but have been refused. Doubtless there are many other fine specimens of the old-time favorite box, but a large and shapely tree is still a valuable and cherished heritage.

SEMI-PRINCESS COSTUME IN SERGE.

A blue serge costume made in semi-princess effect. It is trimmed with fancy braid ornaments.

Serge is one of the safest materials to select for the fall suit, and the semi-princess costume is certain to find fashionable favor. The design shown here is in dark blue serge, trimmed with collar and revers of the same material. Frogs or braid ornaments may trim the front. In medium size the dress requires 4⅝ yards 54-inch material.

While there are a great many small things to be remembered in making the dress, its construction is very simple if rules are followed carefully. First, underface the side front from front edge to 1 inch inside of line of small "o" perforations; turn over on small "o" perforations to form rever and stitch the shoulder edges together. Close under-arm seam as notched. Gather lower edge of side front and side back between double "TT" perforations, sew stay to gathered edge, notches and small "o" perforations even, double "oo" perforation in stay at under-arm seam; leave stay free forward of single small "o" perforation and from notch to center-back.

Turn under front edge of side gore on slot perforations and baste; gather upper edge between double "TT" perforations. Adjust to position, lapping upper edge on stay matching corresponding notches; single small "o" perforation in skirt at the double "oo" perforation in stay.

Adjust the front and front gore to position underneath the side front and side gore, bringing the folded edges to line of small "o" perforations in front and front gore, notches even; stitch side gore ⅜ inch from fold, leaving edges to left of center-front free above single large "O" perforation in front gore for opening, press pleat and close seam underneath. Turn under the edge of back and back gore on slot perforations, lap folded edges to lines of small "o" perforations in side back and side gore, notches even; stitch ⅜ inch from folded edge as illustrated on reverse side of envelope; press pleat and close seam underneath. Close center-back seam. Close shoulder seam as notched.

Sew pointed collar to neck edge, notches and center-backs even, and underneath folded edge of rever in side front, large "O" perforations even.

Adjust the belt as illustrated, bringing single large and small "o" perforations to corresponding perforations in side and back gores.

Finally pleat the sleeve, bringing "T" to corresponding small "o" perforations and tack. Close seam as notched, leaving extensions free; turn under extension on slot perforations, bring folded edge to small "o" perforations. Gather upper edge between double "TT" perforations. If long sleeve is desired with cuff, cut off pointed end of sleeve on single small "o" perforations and cut off extensions; close seam of cuff as notched and sew to sleeve, notches and seams even. Sew sleeve in armhole as notched, small "o" perforation at shoulder seam.

An excellent idea for trimming is to have inlaid revers and collar of satin to be stitched over the serge foundation. The inlays may be removed at any time, leaving the original rever and collar in perfect condition.

A BLOUSE THAT IS VERY LIKEABLE.

A separate waist which any woman would like to wear more or less throughout the Winter is shown here. It has a collar that may be worn high in turn-over effect, high and straight, or turned down to form a roll collar low in the front. The most practical blouses are made of crepe de Chine, foulard silk and chiffon taffeta in plain colors, but to relieve the plain effects there are delightful little bits of embroidery that may be worked in color on the revers, collar or cuffs. For the design shown here 2⅝ yards of 36-inch material are required.

The first step to take to make the waist is to underface the front edge of the front. Place underfacing about an inch inside line of small "o" perforations and roll back on small "o" perforations to form rever. Lace may be used for the underfacing and the material cut away. The under-arm and shoulder seams are next closed. If collar is made of lace sew to neck edge as notched. If a flare effect of the same material, face before sewing to neck edge. Turn hem in vest at notches and adjust vest to position, bringing the line of small "o" perforations in front to line of small "o" perforations in vest, double "oo" perforations even; tack vest to position invisibly. Sew standing collar to neck edge as notched; large "O" perforations indicate center-front. Gather lower edge of waist between double "TT" perforations and two inches above. Adjust stay to position under gathers, center-backs even, small "o" perforation at under-arm seam and bring front edge to center-front.

Next, gather the upper edge of the sleeve, also the lower, between double "TT" perforations. Sew deep cuff to lower edges, notches and edges even, drawing gathers to fit. Close seam as notched, leaving extension in cuff free; turn under extension on slot perforations, lap to small "o" perforations. Face turn-over and sew to cuff as notched. Sew sleeve in armhole as notched.

A peplum, either circular or gathered, may be added to the waist, and the lower edge finished with fur.

FOUR GOOSEBERRY VARIATIONS.

GOOSEBERRY FOOL.—Take two pints of gooseberries and stew them in as little water as possible. You don't have to have a lot of juice. When they are quite soft work them through a sieve. Make a thick custard. Let the gooseberries get nearly cold; then stir the custard thoroughly into them. When the whole thing is perfectly cold serve it in a glass dish or in little custard cups.

Gooseberries which are just "on the turn" are much more acid than those which are quite green. If you get them when they are turning add a great deal of sugar or your food will not be eatable.

Gooseberry Trifles.—Use two pounds of gooseberries and stew them with six ounces of sugar and a very little water till they are tender. Cut three sponge cakes into three or four slices. Arrange them in a glass dish. Pour the hot stewed gooseberries over them. Let the fruit cool down a little and then cover it with half a pint of thick custard. When the custard is quite cold decorate it with cherries or little bits of angelica.

Sunday Pudding.—You can use almost any fruit for this pudding, but gooseberries are nice. The ingredients are: Stewed fruit, sugar to taste, custard and thin slices of white bread. Cut the crusts off thin slices of stale white bread and line the inside of a basin. Fit them neatly into one another so that there are as few gaps as possible between them. Stew the fruit with plenty of sugar. While it is still quite hot pour it into the basin. Cover in the top with another slice of bread. Put a saucer on the top slice and a weight on the saucer to press down the contents of the basin. Let it stand a whole day, then turn it out in a glass dish and cover it with thick custard.

Potato Dumplings With Spinach.

STEW some spinach in butter until tender. Mix in six eggs, some butter, a teaspoonful salt and a tablespoonful chopped onions. Peel and slice four large potatoes and grate fine. Add enough flour to make dumplings. Cook in boiling water from fifteen to twenty minutes. Sprinkle with chopped onions fried in butter when about to serve.

Green Peas a la Menagera.

Cook two cupfuls peas in a stewpan with butter. Add a few small onions and several hearts of lettuce finely chopped. Season with pepper, salt and a small lump of sugar. Add a little butter before they are cooked.

Endives a la Creme.

Take off the coarsest outer leaves and pull three endives apart. Wash thoroughly in salted water and boil like spinach, pressing out all the water. Chop fine and pass through sieve, adding enough melted butter to make it the consistency of spinach. Season with salt and pepper. Cook thoroughly for ten minutes.

Salmon Gravy.

To half cupful salmon allow a cupful or more of water. Season with salt and plenty of pepper and thicken with a teaspoonful corn starch. This is very nice either with pancakes, potatoes or toast. It is a good way to use left over salmon.

Lemon Whey.—One-fourth cupful of milk and two teaspoonfuls of lemon juice. Add lemon juice to milk and let stand five minutes. Strain through double cheesecloth and sweeten, if liked.

Junket. — Three-fourths cupful of milk, one teaspoonful of cold water, one-fourth junket tablet or one teaspoonful of liquid rennet. Heat the milk until lukewarm, and add the tablet or rennet, which first has been dissolved in the cold water. Let stand in a warm place until set, then stir, using a silver spoon until thoroughly separated. Strain through double cheesecloth.

TODAY'S FASHION NOTE

Graceful in line without closely following the contour of the figure is this semi-fitting princess in brown serge, with a guimpe of satin and trimming of fur. Braid outlines the yoke, and in medium size the dress requires 3 1-8 yards 54-inch serge, 2 yards, 36-inch satin and 3½ yards fur.

Salt and Health.

Few persons understand the therapeutic value of salt. A little salt in one's drinking water is "good medicine." Salt applications to the skin are wonderfully soothing and wholesome. There is nothing better as a wash for the throat and the nasal passages to prevent or to cure catarrhal troubles than a solution of common salt in plain water—the cheapest remedy one can find. Many persons give their eyes a daily bath of cold salt water with satisfactory results.

FUN RAYS

By Ray I. Hoppman

THE OLD DAYS

THEY talk about the good old days, the days of long ago—when people lived the modest and simple life, you know. Reformers say we're living in a time of graft and greed—they say we're breaking records with our modern life of speed. The graybeard sadly shakes his head and heaves a heavy sigh. He says the present can't compare with former days gone by. We hear the benedictions poured on good old days of yore—we almost wish that we were born a little while before. They had some things we haven't got in those days, I agree, but just the same the modern time is good enough for me. They travelled by canal boats with the swiftness of a snail. Nor did they go much faster by the omnibus or rail. They used no gas to fix your teeth in blessed days of yore—the dentist yanked your molar till you landed on the floor. You wet your thirsty whistle in the old days, so they tell, by drinking from a bucket that you lowered in a well. If sickness would befall you and you voiced a painful screech, they'd hustle for a doctor, who would bleed you with a leech. They had no elevators and they lumbered up the stair until they shook their systems from their insteps to their hair. Their lives were slow and peaceful, and the times were picturesque, but seems to me some things they did just bordered on burlesque. Why should we worry what they did in those days, anyhow? I'm dog-goned glad I'm living, and I'm glad I'm living now.

CORNERED HIMSELF.

There Was Only One Way Out, and He Just Had to Take It.

William F. Cody one day engaged in a spirited talkfest with a white haired, gray bearded trapper, who was by way of being the greatest and most unsuccessful liar in the locality.

"Sho, Cody, that there b'ar story o' yours ain't puppy high to a little seance I had with a ol' she grizzly back some twenty years ago. I come on that plum critter at th' mouth of a canyon. Bing! I plops a shot f'om my ol' muzzle loader into her, but she don't even tarry. On she comes 'thout givin' me nary chanst t' load. I th'ows th' gun at her, hits her on th' snoot an' takes out up th' canyon with th' old gal, plum' mad, pitty pattin' after me.

"We runs fer 'bout a mile, she paddlin' along behind an' gainin' a bit. Them canyon walls kep' gettin' higher an' smoother an' narrower 'ntil they was about a thousan' feet up, an' I c'd most touch each side. I couldn't a-clim' 'em if I'd tried, an' that she varmint wasn't givin' me no chanst. All of a suddint th' path got still narrerer till me an' the b'ar had to most squeeze through, an' then I come slap into a straight up wall in front o' me. There I was, slick as glass walls on three sides and th' mad b'ar pitty pattin' ten feet in m' rear. I couldn't go ahead, turn round ner go straight up."

The trapper paused, enjoying the deep silence of the crowd.

"Yes, but what did your bear do?" asked Cody.

The old man's face began to take on the purplish hue of pent emotion. His features strained and twitched as his brain sought a way out of his own mendacious cul-de-sac. Looking helplessly around and meeting no friendly glance from the audience, he finally blurted out:

A Biter Bit

By F. A. MITCHEL.

[It is obvious from this story that the story teller was a young man bent on an adventure.]

One morning the postman left me a letter with the firm name of Outcault, Hardy & Dunn, attorneys-at-law, stamped on the left hand corner of the envelope. I opened it and read the following, signed by the lawyers:

Your proposition to unite the properties so long in legal dispute by marrying Miss Auchincloss has been referred to her with our assurances that the tangle between the two can never be unraveled except by such a union. Present circumstances if continued will in time eat up a property which removed from litigation would produce an income of $5,000 clear of all expenses. Miss Auchincloss, never having seen you, desires us to send her your photograph.

It was evident to me that the letter doubtless intended for another Anthony Page had come to me. I inclosed my photograph in a note stating in substance the note I had received from the attorneys and adding that I did not care to act further through them, but would be pleased to form her acquaintance direct. I chose this course, thinking that the real Anthony Page might be known personally to Messrs. Outcault, Hardy & Dunn and my photograph if sent to them would give me away.

In due time I received a note signed Bertha Auchincloss acknowledging the receipt of my photograph and inclosing one of her own. It represented a young girl of eighteen or nineteen, pretty as a peach and in whose eye lurked an inexhaustible fund of mischief. This will be a case of diamond cut diamond, I said to myself, and I see a lot of fun ahead. The letter was very short, stating that the writer agreed with me in direct action instead of the "horrid lawyers" and inviting me to call.

Without proper consideration as to the risk I ran of being horsewhipped by some of the young lady's relatives I went to see her. She came into the room smilingly and extended her hand, which I grasped and pressed. We began our acquaintance without the slightest reference to the subject of the union of property and, so far as that first meeting was concerned, made no progress in coming to an understanding with regard to a union of properties. This was gratifying to me, for the moment we should enter into details I would betray myself. On leaving I asked permission to call again, which was graciously accorded.

Having made no reply to the note of the lawyers, I did not hear from them again.

So delighted was I with my success that on my second visit to Miss Auchincloss I ventured to mention the object of my calls. She dropped her eyes to the floor and said that before the matter could be considered she must take time to have inquiries made concerning me. She could not even contemplate such a step without knowing more about me. I winced at this, for it seemed impossible for her to make such inquiries without discovering that I was an impostor. Nevertheless I brazened it out and offered to give her references. To this she replied that she already had the names of some persons who could give her the required information. Of course she meant friends of the real Anthony Page and I hoped he had a better character than I, though I did not express the hope to her.

Notwithstanding the perils by which I was surrounded my bark sailed on over an untroubled sea. At times I wondered how I could escape the dangers that beset me, but the truth is I was falling heels over head in love with Bertha Auchincloss and was infatuated not only with her, but the part I was playing. My calls grew more and more frequent, but instead of taking up the matter on account of which we had come together she not only refrained from mentioning it, but discouraged my doing so. This, taken with the fact that nothing adverse had come from her injuries, gave me quite a clear coast.

Plunging headlong into love as I was, the time soon came when I made a declaration without confessing my identity. I told her that I loved her and were the property on account of which we had come together sent to the bottom of the ocean still would I love her, still would I marry her if she would consent. She did not drop her head on my shoulder and whisper "Yes." She burst into a laugh.

"The next time," she said, "you play a game like that, keep your wits about you. My aunt, for whom I am named, is the lady you have supposed you were visiting. Since you first came to see me she has married the other Anthony Page. She is forty years old, and he is fifty. I took an interest in that case and remarked the handwriting of the letter he wrote my aunt and which was sent her by the lawyers. Believing that their reply to him must have fallen into the hands of a scamp—for the writing was not his—I sent for your photograph, thinking to have a little fun. Being pleased with it and realizing that it takes two to carry out a lark, I invited you to call. Accept my thanks for having afforded me the most amusing episode of my life."

I was madly in love with a girl who had been fooling me. Nevertheless, I began all over again and in time captured her. She says that in marrying me she did better than her aunt with the other Anthony Page, since their property involved only a hundred thousand dollars, while mine is half a million.

Not Needed.

The young bride had clearly formed ideas on industrial questions.

"I will give you something to eat," she informed the tramp, "if you will get that ax"—

"Oh, I shan't need that," the tramp interrupted in a reassuring tone. "My teeth are all right."—London Stray Stories.

NO PRACTICE, NO PLAYING

If Baehr's Men Do Not Think Well Enough to Get on Practice Job Disbarment Game From Results.

Captain Baehr of the Tiger football squad, has made up a strong alignment for tomorrow's practice and game afterward—in the afternoon—with the fighting Cayugas of Oswego. He announces also, that practice will begin tomorrow at 9:30 a. m. sharp, and that unless a man who wants to enter the afternoon game appears for practice, that man shall be barred from playing against the Cayugas.

The Cayuga team is rated in this section as one of the fastest, weight considered, which is 120 pounds.

Tomorrow's lineup will be:

Barnes and Marin, at quarter; Wheelhouse and Yondow, f. b.; E. Frawley, Hill and Baehr, h. b.; Mansfield, center; Robrhaugh, Wellwood, Richardson and Brennan, guards; Waterhouse, Allen and Kinney, tackle; Green and M. Frawley, ends.

The Tigers are anxious to secure games from out of town teams, the Duncans of Oswego, preferred; but the local boys will not object to taking on games with any team in Central New York whose weight is 120 pounds. The Runovers, Wanderers and other Syracuse teams may have games with the Tigers.

B'VILLE TEAM PICKED TO GIVE HARD FIGHT

That the local high school football team has a job on its hands Tuesday, is shown by the defeat given East Syracuse High by the Baldwinsville High on Thursday. The Baldwinsville team scored two touchdowns and did not permit their goal line to be crossed by the Syracusans.

In their first game of the season the local team was sent down to a disastrous defeat at the hands of the Syracusans, so that Baldwinsville looks for an easy time of it next week. Newspaper accounts of the Baldwinsville—East Syracuse game mention particularly the irresistible line plunging of the Baldwinsville backfield and this fact should serve as a warning for the strengthening of the F. H. S. line. Fulton High has been showing a weakness in defence, but this fault has been to a large extent corrected. Efforts are being made to bring out a large number of rooters.

CUBS LOOK FOR HARD FIGHTING

They Stack Up Against a Bunch of Hyphenated Young Men Who Weigh Very Heavy.

The Nondescripts will meet the Cubs of Syracuse tomorrow. The Cubs come from the north side of Syracuse and comprise mostly Italian boys who are trained to the minute. They are heavy, averaging in the neighborhood of 160 pounds.

The Cubs' headquarters is also the meeting pllace of pugilists, such as "Young" Fisher, "Young" Murphy, Tony Michaels, and others who have made names for themselves in encounters at the Arena. With these boys in the llineup, there is no possibility of thhe Nondescripts piling up a score such as they did last Sunday against another Syracuse team. In fact, George Ward scurrried aver the wholle of Syracuse to get a team which would move evenly match the local team. Most of the weight of thhe Syracusse team is located in the line and them anager claims his forwards will set up a stonewall defence. The backfield is fast and shifty and the team by frequent practice and playing in several games this season has developed into a smooth scoring machine.

The preliminary game between the Tigers and Oswego A. C. comences at 1:30 sharp.

The Nondescrip lineup will be as follows:

Center—Battles or Le Roy.
Left Guard—Brennan.
Right Guard—J. Le Roy or Miller.
Left Tackle—Van Buren.
Right Tackle—Johnson.

Vardar Valley Swept By French and Serb Troops—Heavy Losses

London.—French troops who have joined with the Serbs above the Greek frontier have been engaged for thel ast two days with a strong force of Bulgarians south of Strumitza. The French contigent is receiving constant reinforcements from Salonica and is expanding its operations until its left wing rests on the Nish-Salonica railway and its right is near the [illegible]-Bulgarian border below Strumitza. With this frront it is sweeping up the Vardar and the mountains to the east and has cleared the intervenifig country of invaders as far as Gracko.

The Bulgarian army moving down the national highway from Kostendi has passed Kumanova and has captured Uskob after a hard battle, according to an official report sent last night from Sofia. This places another important Bulgar army across the allied path to Nish. Uskob il an important junction on the railroad to Salonica and is a little more than forty miles south of Vranja, where [illegible]

The Austro-German army under Field Marshal von Mackensen has begun a more vigorous offensive along the Danube by forcing a crossing of the river at Orsavia. Orsava is situated almost at the point where the Serbian, Hungarian and Roumanian frontiers meet and iss nearly opposite the zone in which the Bulgars, crossing the narrow neck of land separating Bulgaria from the Danube, will debouch from the mountains. The last reports last night placed them in possession of Negotin and brings them much nearer to a linking up with the Teutonic armies.

Success is not being achieved without heavy losses, as the Serbian veterans, well intrenched in their mountains, are offering stubborn resistance and are making the invaderss pay a big price for every mile of country invaded.

Advices from Athens say important steps are being taken by the Allies to help their small partner. Additional troopss are being landed at Salonica. Bulgarian ports in the Aegean and Black Sea are being bombarded, and it is believed men and munitions will be sent to Serbia by atsill another route.

Zeppelins Killed 300 in London, Says Returned Traveller

New York.—Passengers who arrived here yesterday afternoon by the St. Paul of the American line, said that in the Zeppelin raid on London on October 13 probably three hundred persons were killed instead of fifty-six, as the official reports stated.

Mr. Thomas Evarts Adams, of New York city, who is a wealthy automobile distributor, is authority for the statement that three hundred lives were lost by this latest raid.

" I was informed by a friend, who is in the British Admiralty," he said, "that the list of dead in the last Zeppelin raid exceeded three hundred persons. The damage wass not so much to property in this raid as to life. The air craft penetrated to the heart of London dropping their highly explosive and incendiary bombs in the Strand."

From other passengers the reports of the raid gave rise to a brutal spectacle of indefinite proportions. Various persons estimated the list of dead as ranging from 150 to 250 persons. Mr. F. W. Whitridge, president of the Third Avenue Railroad company, stated that the dead were 154, of which number thirty were soldiers.

One passenger, who desired that his name remain undisclosed, was in the Gaiety Theatre when the raid began.

"Four bombs fell in the vicinity of the Gaiety Theatre building. That is the headquarters of the Marconi Wireless Company and atop

Lincoln's Address Was Not as Follows:

Four score and many years ago our daddies brought forth upon this continent a "Carry Nation," who deceived us in liberty and established the proposition that men and women are created equal.

Now we are enraged at a great civil war, testing whether that Carry Nation or any orther Cary Nation so conceited can long be sure. We are met on a great battlefield of that war. We are met to dedicate a portion of it as a final resting place for those who here gave their wives that that nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this, but with more sense, we cannot eradicate we cannot eliminate, we cannot hallow this ground. The raving women, living and dead, who struggled here have desecrated it far above our poor power to add or keep tract. We men will little dot on what they said here but we can never forget what they did here. It is for us, the men, rather to be dedicated to the unfinished work which they have thus far so deliberately carried on. It is for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us; that from these dishonored dead we take increased devotion against that cause for which they gave their last full measure of commotion, and that we here highly resolve that these dead shall have died in pain, that Cary Nation under us shall lose her term of freedom, and that misgovernment of the women, by the women, and for the women, shall perish from the earth.

GOVENOR CAPPER OF KANS. REPORTS ON SUFFRAGE

The Utica Herald prints a letter [illegible] Capper of Kansas, in which he says the adoption of woman suffrage has resulted in better conditions in his state. He says:

Many persons interested in the success of the equal suffrage campaign now being conducted in New York, Pennsylvania and Masssachusetts have requested me to write to your paper as to the results of woman suffrage in Kansas. I am glad to say that it has been a success in this State, and if the question were again submitted to our people, it would carry almost unanimously. All political parties here believe in it

The adoption of woman suffrage in Kansas has made it easier to elect men of good moral character to office and harder to foist a man of shady reputation on the people. Election day in rural Kansas with the women voting, is more like a big neighborhood picnic than a political fight.

The extension of equal suffrage to the women of Kansas has had immediate effect for good.

It has impelled all political parties to include in their programmes and platforms humanitarian projects and moral issues which previously they had ignored.

It has made imperative a more careful selection of nominees.

The immediate passage of wise, human and beneficial laws for the safeguarding of women and children and the betterment of conditions of living, which followed the adoption of equal suffrage laws in Kansas, affords convincing proof that the enfranchising of American women is a most important step in the advancement of State and National progress.

Kansas is proud of her new citizens and appreciates the great, big part they are taking in every movement which has for its purpose the betterment of the State.

The extension of suffrage to Kansas women has not caused them to neglect their homes in the slightest degree. What time they devote to politics is not taken from their house hold work, but from pink teas and similar functions. Their spare time, formerly devoted to social functions, is partly spent now in the study and discussion of economic and political questions. No woman is neglecting her home when she is trying to improve the conditions under which she and her children live.

It is claimed by anti-suffragists that the influence of women's votes has been deterious to the social fabric of the State. The direct contrary is true in Kansas. Women now discuss vital governmental issues, along with the men, and with a keen appreciation of their new responsibilities of citizenship. The participation of women in public affairs is having a wholesome effect in cleansing the State of for higher ideals in both public and private life. The aptitude of the women in political affairs has challenged the admiration of the men, instead of their resentment. The women have not attempted to foist themselves into office, but in a modest way have insisted on clean candidates who stand for the best in social, educational and political progress.

I cordially and earnestly invite the Eastern States to send their best and keenest business men to investigate conditions in Kansas with particular reference to the results achieved through equal suffrage and Prohibition and equal suffrage as they have found them.

The saloon has never been found on the right side of any question. The most hostile, and bitter protests against woma nsuffrage always have come from the vice and saloon element—the evil, corrupt and roughneck element in politics. This ill-smelling crowd has always fought for "the sancity and purity of the home" by voting solidly and invariably against woman suffrage and every other question of real value in actually bettering the condition of our homes.

Arthur Copper,
Governor of Kansas.

Topeka, Kan., Oct. 20, 1915.

JENNINGS PLEADS FOR BILLY SUNDAY

Brooklyn.—Al Jennings, evangelist and exbandit, thinks Brooklyn needs Billy Sunday. He expresed this belief in an address to more than 300 men at the Sumner Avenue Baptist church, Brooklyn, yesterday:

"Many say I am not in good faith in my evangelistic work," re declared. "They have said the same of Billy Sunday. If I was merely looking for money I could have made much more in California. As for Sunday, there's a lot of work for him in Brooklyn, and you ought to bring him here to clean up the city."

Baldwinsville Coming; Nons. Disappointed; Tigers Lost to Cayuga

The football game scheduled for tomorrow between Fulton High and Baldwinsville will start promptly at 4 o'clock. The students will be dismissed from school at 3:45 and will go directly to Athletic field.

The Baldwinsville management advises that at least sixty students from that school have expressed their intention to come here. It has been the complaint of many students that on account of business duties on Saturday they could not attend games on thatday. A great deal of enthusiasm has been awakened in the high school during the past week hence the low attendance at the last game should not be repeated.

Coach Merrrill will probably use the same lineup as appeared in the Auburn game with the exception of possibly substituting at quarterback and the ends. This afternoon's practice may result in several new men being seen in tomorrow's lineup. The officials for the game have not been selected.

For the second time this season, the Nondescripts' opponents failed to appear yesterday. An Italian team from Syracuse was scheduled to battle with the Nondescripts and a large crowd was disappointed.

The Cubs, as the Syracuse team termed themselves, instead wallowed in the cinders of the gridiron on Star Park, Syracuse, against another Salt City team. The Nondescripts manager will here after do as he did two weeks ago when he went to Syracuse on Sunday morning and brought the team along with him,

The Tigers, however, furnished the disappointed crowd with a good game of football, going down to defeat at the hands of the Oswego team by a small score.

REPUBLICANS TO WIN ASSEMBLY—FORECAST

New York.—The Herald today prints the following forecast of the coming election:

From present indications the woman suffrage amendment in the State will be defeated.

The proposed constitution is hanging in the balance.

The next Asssembly will be republican, but probably not so heavily as at present.

From their reports alsso it is to be inferred that political conditions remain about the same throughout the State ass las year. There is no intimation anywhere that national issues are injecting themselves into the general political situation. There is no suggestion that there is either a swing away from the republicans or a heavier drift than was recorded last year toward the republicans.

Interest all over the State centres in the suffrage amendment. Tentatively thirty-seven counties are placed in the list headed "Against suffrage." In each of these sections there is a silent element in the voting population, and it is hard to calculate with accuracy with them as a rather formidable element of the population. But the regular organizations are against votes for women. They are not working againsst it except in scattered sections, but everywhere it is apparent they would prefer to see the amendment defeated. This attitude in past elections has been found to be even more dangerous than outspoken hositility.

New York city is likely to decide the suffrage issue. Kings county leans strongly toward it. Manhattan and the Bronx lean strongly against it. Queens is apparently figuring on giving a majority for it. The word privately passed by them achine representatives is that suffrage will be buried in New York city. In Erie county (Buffalo) there are evidences that it will be overwhelmed also. Perhaps as significant a piece of news as the Herald presents in this sympasium comes from Albany, the home of William Barnes, republican national committeeman. It is that suffrage will be defeated there and that there also will be a majority against the constitution.

Against suffrage such populous counties as Chautanqua, Monroe (Rochester), Niagara, Onondogo (Syracuse), Rensselaer (Troy), Richmond and Westchester are said to be turning their eyes away from the women.

Large counties classed as favorable are Chemung (Elmira), Dutchess, Orange, Oneida (Utica) and Schenectady.

On the constitution the division of sentiment appears to be more evenly divided. On the basis of the special reports the Herald tentative places twenty-five counties in the column favoring the constitution, twenty-siv against and ten doubtful. Here again is found significance in the grouping. For instance, among those classed as unfavorable are Albany, New York, Erie, Oneida and Westchester. Doubtful counties are said to include Kings, with a strong leaning toward the constitution; Chautanqua, Nassau and Niagara. Important counties in which the organization is expected by the leaders to swing a majority in favor of the constitution are Chemung, Monroe, Dutchess, Oswego, St. Lawrence, Schenectady and Suffolk.

Opinions

A GOOD RELIANCE

If you do not understand the proposed constitution in every detail it is safe to vote for it relying on the fact that is received almost the unanimous approval of the ablest republicans and democrats in the constitutional convention. It is entirely non-partisan; it is an earnest effort to provide af undamental law of the state, which shall hang on to all that is good, and be progressive toward betterg overnment. It provides a long step toward the abolition of invisible government; for order and simplicity in the administration of the state; for economics in the cost of state; for economics in the cost of the state government; for speedier and less expensive justice in private law suits; for greater powers of local self-government of our counties and cities; for a great improvement in legislature and in the quality of legislation.

The new constitution has the endorsement of such men as Elihu Root Alton B. Parker, James W. Wadsworth, jr., Joseph H. Choate, D'Cady Herrick, Nicholas Murray Butler, J. G. Milburn, Francis Lynde Stetson, Henry L. Stimson, Jacob Schurman, Morgan J. O'Brien, all leading republicans and democrats. The judgment of these men can certainly be taken on the merits of the new constitution without the necessity of close study on the part of the individual voter. It provides for better and more systematic government of the state of New York, and better, more systematic and more economical management of its finances. It makes direct nominations practicable and simplified and less expensive,and bring government nearer to the people and to the consent of the governed.—Watertown Times.

A WARNING TO YOUTH

A young man, the product of the local resorts for loafers, stood before Supreme Court Justice Swayer yesterday to answer an indictment for a crime. There are many whose steps, despite the devoted efforts of many hard-working mothers, are leading in the same direction.,

It was a stroke of good fortune that caused the district attorney to concur with others who pleaded for the youth, and Justice Sawyer granted him one more chance tod odge the gate that leads straight to Auburn Prison and the sorrows that such a course would bring in thef uture. The address by Justice Sawyer has such a broad application, however. that we print much of it herewith that many other young men may pause and examine the paths along which they are traveling.

"Young man—said Justice Sawyer —I am animated by one thought, and one only; and that is that I feel sorry for your mother and I do not like to send a boy of your age away. Just for that reasson I am going to give you one more chance upon parole under thep robation officer. But role under the probation officer. But I want to say to you—the first thing you do, is to cut out cigarettes. Do not misunderstand me; I mean what I say. The next thing to do is to go t owork.

"If you cannot get a job in one place, get it somewhere else, if you cannot get one kind of work, get another kind. If you cannot get a job that pays, you anything, get one that is for nothing. But go to work. The next thing, you areg oing to stay home nights with your mother. You are not going to forget that woman who has given up her life for you. You are old enough to have a little sense, but you are still going to be under her care. You are old enough to realize what this all means. If you follow out the road that you have started, what will it lead you to, saying nothing of losing the respect of your fellows, saying nothing of the breaking of your mother's heart? You suffer more than all the rest. Men who follow that road never live half their days. Thirty 35, 40, 50 to the outside and you are done. You will die either in the poor house, in the insane asylum or in prrison. You look to me as if you had some brains if you wanted to use them. If you follow the right path there is no reasosn why you shouldn't be able to pay your mother for all these sacrifices and to make something for yourself. I say to you again, that the first cigarette, the first loitering, the first commotion in your home over a question of your not acceding to your mother's wishes you will come back here and will be sent to the Elmira Reformatory. It's up to you."—Auburn Citizen.

THE PEOPLE DESERVE CENSURE

With election day not far away, it is up to every man to lay seriously to heart the fact that if ever there has been a time when he should think about voting for the right candidates, that time is at hand.

The people have made the nominations, the people do the electing. They have full swing and they will control the result. That being so, theirs is the greater responsibility which cannot be dodged, cannot be delegated.

People occasionally take the newspapers to task for some points in which they fall short, and then again a newspaper wil take up a topic and do a little preaching to the people. Here is a little sermon by a newspaper:

If there is one thing the people of this city have not paid enough attention to, it is politics. Not that the people should involve themselves in what is commonly called the game or use themselves for one party or another, but that each individual member of this community should become thoroughly interested in public affairs, and take part in the agencies adopted for their direction. The primaries have been held and election day is almost upon us and the election should be attended as a religious duty. There are any number of dissatisfied persons in this city—persons who decry the extravagance and mismangement of this and that administration, but has the average voter been faithful at all times to his duty as a citizen? Has he not too often listened to the voice of a party, of a leader? And right here, we challenge the voters of this city to convince us that the voice of the people who now complain of wretched municipal conditions has been at all times heard at the elections. Figures show that comparatively few of the city's voting population have expressed themselves at the polls; therefore, the consequences are not the people's work.

Men go to church and think they are complying with their duty. The man who goes to church and not to the polls takes only a half view of his Christian duty. The importance of what we are called upon to do next Tuesday should thoroughly impress the people of this city right now. Upon the character of that impression and the action which accompanies it, will depend whatever befalls Fulton in the putting in operation of a new administration.

The citizen who is too good to take some interest in the coming municipal election, and who will not erase from his mind every indication of adhering to party lines in making his choice for mayor of this city, is too bad to belong to an audience of any group, any clique, any party, any church.

The city's business, as has before been said here, is a big business; it is the people's business; therefore, it is the opinion of this newspaper that the people's business can best be served under the present system of government by the election of Myron Foster as mayor of the city. Mr. Foster's experience should place him in position to serve the people well, but should he fail to make good by reason of inefficiency or the breaking of pledges, he shall deserve the greater measure of public condemnation and The Evening Times will not be a party to shielding him from censure.

COURT CORONERS GET INVITATIONS TO MEETING

In preparation for a big gathering of all people interested in the elimination of grade crossings, Secretary George C. Donahue of the New York State Motor Federation, desires to publicly invite all county coroners of the State of New York to attend the conference with the Public Service Commission to be held at the Onondaga hotel, Syracuse, October 27th, It is the desire of the Public Service Commission to have great interest aroused on thiss ubject of eliminating accidents at grade crossings and the meeting is open to all who can attend.

County Coroners could give a vast amount of information on this important subject to the Public Service Commission. They investigate all such accidents that result in death and there are many of them throughout the state each year.

LITTLE TALKS ON THRIFT

By S. W. STRAUS

President American Society for Thrift

How many people have any idea how much they have earned all told in their lives? How many have ever during their workaday hours stopped long enough to ask themselves how much they could have saved if they had wanted to and how much they possess free and clear now? How many know what percentage of their earnings has been frittered away?

How can one know without a definite system of finding out—without keeping track of all of one's receipts and expenditures?

How could a corporation tell where it stood financially if it kept no books? It would be unable to plan for future outlays, because it would have no records to go by.

It is the same with individuals.

They cannot tell how or where to save unless they know what they spend their money for.

Every person should keep a personal account book. It need not be a specially made book; any ordinary note book will do. Rule each page into columns and head each column as follows.

Received—Date; Items Paid Out—Living Expenses; Cars, Phones and Postage; Clothing; Laundry; Health; Amusements and Vacation; Education; Gifts; Charity and Donations; Insurance and Investments.

Each payment should be entered as soon as possible after it is received. It is not well to trust to the memory, even for a single day.

Under "Received" enter the balance of your checking account, the savings account and total cash on hand. Enter receipts from all sources. Under "Date" enter the day on which an amount was received or paid out. Enter under "Items" the source from which money is received as salary, interest from any investment or otherwise. Keep track under "Paid Out" of every cent paid out in cash or by check. "Living Expenses" accounts for everythhing spent for food, shelter, light, heat, furnishings, household service, etc. "Cars, phones and postage" need no explanation. "Clothing" covers millinery, footwear, glooves, etc. "Laundry" includes washing and dry cleaning. "Health" includes doctor and dentist bills, medicines and toilet articles. Enter under "Amusements and Vacation" all sums spent for theatres, week end trips, entertainments, half holiday excursions, and vacations. Enter under "Education" everything spent for self-improvement, books, lectures, classes, etc. "Charity" covers contributions to the needy and "Donations" money to church or mission work. "Gifts" represents presents to family or friends. "Insurance and Investments" explain themselves.

A column should be left blank in which to enter items that do not belong in the other columns. The difference between the sum total in the "Received Column" and that in the "Paid Out" column is the amount you should have on hand either in investment, savings or your pocketbook. A monthly and annual summary should be made of all expenditures.

By keepiing such a personal account book, one can readily see just how much has been uselessly spent and can guard against this in the future.

HIGH GRADE BUTTER GOES UP IN PRICE

New York.—A somewhat firmer feeling seems to be developing on high grade creamery. Exports are showing no renewal of interest, but there is a little more speculative demand hhere and recent saless indicate a full quarter cent advance on high grades.

Cheese

Market continues firm. Exports demand is not following the higher asking prices very readily, and, while some negotiations are pending, we hear of no actual business with shippers as yet over 15c.

Beans and Peas

New York.—Market continues very much excited and firm. There has been an embargo placed in California againsst shipments of beans via Galveston and this is shutting off many shipments for this market. Choice new marrow jobbing mostly at $8.25 and very few here. Choice old mediums arep ractically exhausted and we omit quotation; we know of no new ones here as yet. Choice old pea beans are selling mostly in range of $6.40@6.45; most holders asking $6.50 at the close, and the situation is a very firm one. Small white beans are offering at the close at $6.20@625, though we have heard of no sales over $6.20. Choice old red kidneys close quiet but firm.

STOCKS SHOW SIGNS OF DEVELOPMENT

New York.—Ignoring such significant developments as the Balkan situation, the crisis in the English and French cabinets and the continued decline in foreign exchange. last week in the stock market was one of general improvement, albeit gains were largely limited to war specialties. Speculation in these issues were renewed almost on the large scale of recent weeks and the freedom with which round amounts of these saecurities was absorbed on steady advances to new high records implied undiminished belief in the intrinsic value of some of those properties.

CONCRETE IN THE BASEMENT

Four-Inch Slab Is Recommended by Expert as Giving Best Possible Results.

Over the entire floor area of the basement a four-inch slab of concrete should be laid after the earth has been firmly tamped down. This slab of concrete should be insisted upon, wether the finished floor is to be of cement, brick, tile, or wood; and it is well to re-enforce it against shrinkage, stresses, and to bridge any soft places in the ground, by imbedding in the concrete some form of coarse wire mesh or expanded metal, says Ernest I. Freese in the House Beautiful.

Where cement finish is desired, this should be not less than three-quarters of an inch in thickness, and it should be applied before the concrete has become "set"—otherwise the cement finish will not properly unite with the concrete base.

In rooms having a cement floor, the cement can be carried up on the walls to a height of six or eight inches above the floor, thus forming a waterproof and sanitary base. Then, if the floor is slightly graded to a sump connected with the underground drainage system, the floor can easily be kept clean by turning the hose on it occasionally.

All cement floor finish should be jointed at regular intervals, not exceeding three feet, so as to concentrate at these jointings any probable shrinkage cracks. Here again, a simple, inexpensive wire mesh imbedded in the cement finish will react against the shrinkage strains and lessen the liability of cracking. For this re-enforcement, common chicken-wire mesh answers admirably.

LOOKING TO CIVIC BEAUTY

Builders Have Come to Recognize Value of Good Appearance of Buildings and Streets.

Gradually all phases of commercial industry are coming under the influence of the city-beautiful movement, comments the San Francisco Call. Factories erected today secure sufficient ground area to have some landscape gardening round-about the building or buildings. Even railroads, those supposed "soulless corporations," are now quite generally embellishing station grounds and rights of way. The schoolhouses, both rural and city, are being much improved in surrounds, being much helped by the school gardens, and the whole land is becoming, each year, more deeply engrossed in making a more beautiful America, and California is well up in the list. Let us not grow faint-hearted in the work.

IMPROVING NEIGHBORHOOD

There's much talk of conservation
Of the trees and rivers grand,
For we know their preservation
Helps to beautify the land.

We admit that talk like this will
Benefit the public good,
But at present your first job is
To improve your neighborhood.

Small beginnings have big endings,
And if you will make the start,
You will see how quick your neighbor
Pitches in and does his part.

Then you'll find that it's contagious;
Every house upon your street
Will be vying with each other
To keep looking clean and neat.

Paint and varnish are conserving.
You can prove beyond a doubt,
They're the best for the preserving
Of the house, inside and out.

New School Architecture.

A one-story schoolhouse, built in the form of a square around a courtyard, and so constructed that, by raising a series of sashes, it can be converted into what will be practically an open-air school, is the type of structure that marks a new departure in modern school architecture. It provides healthful surroundings for the children, keeps them near the ground, so that the danger of fire and panic is reduced to a minimum, and at the same time affords exercise.

The open-air sashes face on an inner corridor, which will eventually form a sort of cloister around the courtyard. As the needs of the community require, other wings will be added on the three remaining sides of the central square. It is intended eventually to have a gymnasium and swimming pool in a basement under the courtyard.

Gophers in the Garden.

Gophers still infest gardens except in the central portions of large cities, and are hard to exterminate where many vacant lots are found. Garden owners do not care to keep poison and traps on hand, and how easily to accomplish the death of the gopher becomes a problem. Last week one threw up a little mound in the writer's garden, having burrowed under the fence from an adjoining vacant lot. A messenger was hastily sent to a nearby drug store for a bottle of carbon bisulphid. The hole was opened, a half cupful poured in, the hole closed and firmed with damp soil. The next day the soil was dug out and the hole followed but three feet into the vacant lot, and there his gophership reposed, dead.

AMERICANS IN CANADIAN ARMY

Two Thousand Serving, Says General Hughes—More Than 100 Slain.

London.—There are no fewer than 2,000 Americans in the ranks of the Canadian military contingent, said Major General Sam Hughes, Canadian minister of militia, at a meeting of Americans held here.

"I have already written letters of gratitude and sympathy," said General Hughes, "to mothers of more than 100 American boys who have fallen while fighting in Flanders alongside Canadian comrades. More than 2,000 enlisted, and we could have many more if we wished. Any number of West Pointers offered their services as officers, and some are now with us."

PLAN TO OUST ASSESSORS.

Article 10 Could Create Board of Tax Czars at Albany and Divert Taxes to Other Districts—Home Rule Principle Violated.

Albany, Oct. .—Calling upon every taxpayer and assessor above the Bronx to defend the principle of home rule in taxation by opposing article 10 of the proposed state constitution, De Witt C. Talmage, for thirteen years an assessor in Suffolk county, today wrote an open letter describing the harmful intent of this tax section, which he charges the real estate interests of Greater New York have pushed through the constitutional convention. Not only may a state tax board wrest from local assessors most of their present powers under the proposed section, he declares, but taxes collected under such a centralized system may be applied to other districts than those in which they are paid. Mr. Talmage's letter follows:

East Hampton, N. Y., Oct. 15, 1915.

Dear Sir—I have taken the liberty of writing you as a former assessor, having served as such in my town for thirteen years, to call your attention to the pending constitutional amendment relative to taxation, being article 10, and which is to be submitted as a separate proposition to the voters at the ensuing election.

The intent and purpose of the amendment, although this fact does not appear on its face, is to invest the legislature with the constitutional right and power to take away from the local assessors the right to assess personal property of the individual, and the real and personal property of all public service corporations, and place such right in a state board of assessors at Albany.

Under section 2 of article 10 of the present constitution it has been determined by the courts that it is the right and function of the local assessors to assess the real and personal property within their districts and that the legislature cannot deprive them of this right, the latest decision of the court of appeals (not yet reported) on this subject being People ex rel Village of Pelham versus Town of Pelham, and an earlier case, People versus Raymond, 37 N. Y., page 428. To overcome and nullify this it is provided in the proposed tax amendment, article 10, section 2, that "the legislature shall prescribe how taxable subjects shall be assessed and provide for officers to execute laws relating to the assessment and collection of taxes, any provision of section 2 of article 13 of this constitution to the contrary notwithstanding."

This section 2 of article 13 of the proposed constitution is, under the present constitution, section 2 of article 10, just above mentioned. This clearly indicates the intent and purpose of the amendment, and if there is any doubt as to whether it does or not, a reference to the record of the debate on the subject in the constitutional convention settles it beyond the shadow of a doubt.

Proof From Record Quoted.

Mr. Martin Saxe, chief sponsor for this proposed tax amendment, and the present chairman of the state board of tax commissioners, was one of the delegates to the constitutional convention, and on page 948 of the record of that convention he is quoted as saying:

"Now, while I said that there was no tax provision in the constitution, there is, however, a provision which is a serious obstruction to the development of any proper system of tax administration. I refer to section 2 of article 10, the so called home rule provision. Now, while that section refers to local officers, city, county, town and village officers, and says nothing about taxation, the fact is that the local assessor is a local officer and is protected by that section of the constitution, and the functions which he exercises, to wit, the function of assessing property, cannot be taken away from him by the creation of some other officer to perform that duty."

Again, on page 949, Mr. Saxe stated, relative to an act doing away with the village assessor in the county of Westchester and placing the functions of the village assessor in the town assessor, that—

"The question of the constitutionality of that act was at once raised, and only recently, I think last month, the court of appeals decided the Westchester county act was unconstitutional because the legislature could not take away from the village assessor functions to assess property locally.

"So you see, at the very start of the idea of the centralization of assessment we are blocked in this state by the provisions of section 2 of article 10.

"So the underlying purpose of the article reported by the committee on taxation is to open up the home rule provision so as to at least permit of the centralization idea in counties so far as the assessment of real estate is concerned."

Again, on the same page, Mr. Saxe says:

the amendment are thoroughly explained to the taxpayers of the state it will be rejected by a tremendous majority. The power conferred by this amendment is far too great to be lodged with one man or any particular body of men.

There is no question but that the local assessors are best qualified to determine values and are more familiar with local conditions and the financial condition of their constituents than the members of any state board at Albany can be. Yours very truly,

DE WITT C. TALMAGE.

WILL ENABLE STATE TO COMPLETE CANAL.

If I vote "Yes" on the canal referendum and it should be approved, what will be the result?

(a) The state will issue its bonds and raise the necessary money to complete the construction work and to meet all the obligations of the state which have arisen from land damages, riparian rights, railroad bridges and other extraordinary expenses unforeseen at the time the original estimates were made in 1903.

(b) The construction work yet to be done on the barge canal will be proceeded with, and the improvement will be completed and opened to commerce within two years.

(c) The payments will be spread over a long period up to fifty years, and the state and all property within it will be receiving the great benefits from the canal and will therefore be better able to meet the payments before they fall due during the fifty years to come.

FUN RAYS

By Ray I. Hoppman

THE U. S. A.

I'M doggone glad I'm living in old Uncle Sam's domain—this land of milk and honey and the bumper crop of grain. I wouldn't live in Europe for the wages of a prince—to live across the water, why, a man must be a quince. They're busy dodging cannon balls and sabre thrusts, and such. Will I live where the aeroplanes are dropping bombs? Not much! I think too much of this old hide of mine to take a chance—and live in England, Germany—in Austria or France. Let all who will reside in London grand or gay Paree. This good old land of Uncle Sam's is good enough for me. Let all who will eat wieners in Vienna or Berlin. I'd rather look from outside than peep outside from within. I'd rather live, my hearties, where the leaden pills don't whiz and scare you to a standstill as you go about your biz. I'd rather live, my brothers, where the cannon balls don't smash the prunes into the gravy and the milk into the hash. I sit within my cosey room and read about the war, and thank my stars I'm living where the leaden rain don't pour. We kick about the politics, the price of beef, and say that this old land of Uncle Sam's has surely had its day. But when we think of other folks across the briny deep, we're glad we're living here, you bet, and wake up from our sleep. Believe me, friends, the Stars and Stripes are good enough for me—I'm glad I'm separated from Dear Europe—by the sea.

MONT PELEE AS IT IS TODAY.

Its Appearance Thirteen Years After Its Fearful Eruption.

Since its outbursts in 1902-3 Mont Pelee has simmered down to a commonplace volcano, and now vegetation has re-established itself to the summit of the mountain, and even the forest is beginning to reassert itself. The whole aspect of this side of the volcano is verdant and peaceful and gives no indication of the devastation of thirteen years ago. Even the rocks of the new cone are more or less thickly coated with moss, while the sides and top of the old cone are covered with grass, ferns and bushes in addition to the moss and lichens.

On the summit plateau are found an abundance of red raspberry bushes bearing flowers and green and ripe fruit. Sugar plantations on the west side of Mont Pelee have been reinstated as far as the Roxelane river, within the border of the original zone of annihilation, while the ruined city of St. Pierre now contains about thirty new buildings of durable construction and a resident population of between 200 and 300 people.

The zones stretching down the southwest side of the volcano lying between the Seche and Blanche rivers, which was the route traversed by hundreds or perhaps thousands of destructive eruption clouds, still lie drear and desolate, because the soil was completely swept away by the blasts, and the material left behind as well as that added by the eruption is too porous for the retention of the water necessary to restore it to fertility.—Argonaut.

Bernhardt's Wish.

Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, whose leg was recently amputated, is cured. To see her walk one could doubt that she had been maimed, thanks to the miracles of surgery and mechanics. She is much more courageous than heretofore. She looks at her articulated leg and smiles. "It pleases me," she says, "and it would please me entirely if it should be celebrated by two of my best friends—one a poet and the other a painter. I wish that the adorable Edmond Rostand would celebrate it in a little poem and that my faithful Clairin would make it the subject of a beautiful drawing." Rostand and Clairin have been apprised of the wish of the grand tragedienne and it is said that they will not delay to respond to it.—Cri de Paris.

ARNOLD DALY

Arnold Daly, who is producing pictures for Pathe under the name of the "Arnold Daly Series", sprang a new one recently in his desire for realism. Mr. Daly wanted to get a ballroom scene with all the atmosphere of life in high society. Mrs. George Gould generously permitted the use of her palatial residence on Fifth Ave., New York. Upper Fifth Ave. opened its eyes to see a long line of carriages and automobiles discharging scores of men and women in evening dress at high noon before the Gould residence, and received by lines of powdered footmen in full livery. A number of persons well known in society consented to appear in the ballroom scene, and doubtless when "Ashton-Kirk, Investigator", the name of the picture, is shown upon the screens they will be easily recognized.

Cato's Follow-up System

By HERBERT KAUFMAN

Author of "Do Something! Be Something!"

IF A MAN lambasted you on the eye and walked away and waited a week before he repeated the performance, he wouldn't hurt you very badly. Between attacks you would have an opportunity to recover from the effect of the first blow.

But if he smashed you and kept mauling, each impact of his fist would find you less able to stand the hammering, and a half-dozen jabs would probably knock you down.

Now advertising is, after all, a matter of hitting the eye of the public. If you allow too great an interval to elapse between insertions of copy the effect of the first advertisement will have worn away by the time you hit again. You may continue your scattered talks over a stretch of years, but you will not derive the same benefit that would result from a greater concentration. In other words, by appearing in print every day, you are able to get the benefit of the impression created the day before, and as each piece of copy makes its appearance, the result of your publicity on the reader's mind is more pronounced—you mustn't stop short of a knock-down impression.

Persistence is the foundation of advertising success. Regularity of insertion is just as important as clever phrasing. The man who hangs on is the man who wins out. Cato the Elder is an example to every merchant who uses the newspapers and should be an inspiration to every storekeeper who does not. For twenty years he arose daily in the Roman senate and cried out for the destruction of Carthage. In the beginning he found his conferees very unresponsive. But he kept on every day, month after month and year after year, sinking into the minds of all the necessity of destroying Carthage, until he set all the senate thinking upon the subject, and in the end Rome sent an army across the Mediterranean and ended the reign of the Hannibals and Hamilcars over northern Africa. The persistent utterances of a single man did it.

The history of every mercantile success is parallel. The advertiser who does not let a day slip by without having his say, is bound to be heard and have his influence felt. Every insertion of copy brings stronger returns, because it has the benefit of what has been said before, until the public's attention is struck like an eye that has been so repeatedly struck, that the least touch of suggestion will feel like a blow.

WHAT THE WORLD SAYS ABOUT "A FULL HOUSE"

It has been many days since any farce produced in New York met with the entire approrval of every newspaper critic in the metropolis. But such was the case with "A Full House," the laughing treat which took Manhattan by storm and is still attracting crowded housses. Not only is this farce drawing the New Yorkers, but nearly every visitor to New York is taking advantage of the opportunity to indulge in three hours of happy laughter.

The New York World, in speaking of "A Full House" said, "The play easily swept the farce stakes off the boards. It is simply crowded with laughs. It is a bright, breezy, refreshing farce, capitally acted and an ideal show for New York."

"A Full House" comes to the Quirk theatre, Thursday, Oct. 28, matinee and night. Matinee, balcony 25c, main floor, 50c. Night, 25, 50, 75, $1.00 and $1.50.

SECRET SERVICE MEN NIP CONSPIRACY

New York—Secret service men and detectives today unearthed what they declare to be a gigantic plot to blow up munition plants and steamships.

Two men, alleged leaders of the plot, were arrested in a wood at Grantwood, N. J. At the time they were testing a small bomb filled with tri-nitrate toffiol, the highest and highest and most deadly explosive known.

In a series of raids immediately after the arrest of the two men the officers captured and confiscated the following:

Twenty-five pounds of tri-nitrate of toluol, more than enough to blow up the entire island of Manhattan.

Twenty-five large sticks of dynamite.

Five ingenious minues, built to be attached to the screw of a steamship with time-clock attachment and worth $1,000 each.

Two hundred cleverly constructed bomb sylinders.

A complete chart of New York harbor showing the location of fortifications and all steamship piers.

One high-powered motor boat.

One high powered automobile of foreign make.

Four hundred percussion caps.

Two automatic pisstols of German make, fully loaded and a long knife.

The men under arrest arre Robert Fay, 34 yearss old, and Walter Schalz, 32, who for the past week have been living in the boarding house of Mrs. Walter Harbinson at No. 27 Fifth street, Weehawken. From April last up until a week ago the two men lived in the boarding house of Mrs. Robert Stuart on 4th street, Union Hill, N. J.

PREACHER TO SAVE SOULS OF COMMUTERS

Greenwich, Conn.—The Rev. B. Fay Mills began his week of evangelistic work here today by holding two large meetings in the Second Congregational church, at each of which he said that in the morning he would be at the railroad station to save the souls of New York commuters.

As many of the commuters leave before seven o'clock every morning the revivalist will have to get up early. Usually the commuters have no time to stand round on the platform and wait for trains, but arrive at the station barely in time to hop on the car steps. Therefore Mr. Mills is preparing some quick arguments, "hot off the griddle," as he explained it, and these arguments "will be such juicy morsels that the commuters will ponder over them all the way to the city."

AVIATOR DROPS INTO HEART OF NEW YORK

Garden City.—Caught in an air pocket while flying over New York city, Maximilian Schmitt, the aviator who theoretically blew up the bridges in the New Jersey National Guard manoeuvres yesterday, dropped one thousand feet and nearly capsized this afternoon while returning from Arcola, N. J., to the aviation field on Hempstead Plains. Cooly manipulating the levers, Mr. Schmitt brought his machine to an even keel and again ascended. A short time later he encountered another air pocket and dropped again. This time he was in no danger of capsizing.

COAT MADE WITH BUT ONE SEAM IN BODY

Rochester.—A Rochester clothing manufacturer is making a new style of overcoat, which he believes will gain wide popularity. It has been called a "blanket coat." The coat is loose-fitting and hangs close to the shoulders. There is but one seam and that is in the middle of the back. Among the merits claimed for it is that it sits tight to the collar and has two large circular patch pockets, one on each side of the front.

"Blanket coats" are not lined. The body of the garment is made practically of one piece of cloth; the back seam is necessary because cloth is not woven wide enough so that the garment may be cut without it. It is claimed for it that it fits a person of any build; that, having no seam along the shoulders, it shapes itself to the form.

SAT ON BEAM OF STEEL TOWER; WAS KILLED

Auburn.—Theodore Cheney, the 17-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Cheney, was electrocuted this afternoon at 3 o'clock when he climbed a steel tower on the Niagara and Ontario power line.

He and two other young men, Howard and Otis Colbin, were walking on the Auburn-Centerport road, and Cheney, against the advice of his companions, climbed the tower and seated himself on a steel cross-beam. There was a flash and he fell to the ground.

He lived for about ten minutes before he was pronounced dead.

The occasion is the second annual meeting of the North Atlantic Tuberculosis Conference and the Annual Tuberculosis Conference of the State Charities Aid Association. The meetings will be under the auspices of the National Association for the study and prevention of tuberculosis, the State Charities Aid Association and the State Department of Health.

WAR WILL END IN JUNE, SAYS MESSAGE

Rochester.—John Slater, spiritualistic medium from San Francisco, in giving a demonstration at the Plymouth Spiritual church last evening, had several interesting conversations with invisible intelligences, one of them even telling that the spiritual world will force a stop to the European war next June.

"While Mr. Grimshaw was speaking about war this evening," said Mr. Slater, "a spirit spoke to me and said: 'The war will end in June, 1916. There will be an opportunity to end it about the first of December, but the Kaiser will refuse the terms. There will be very little change with regard to different men's expecting to grab this land and that land. The power of the spirits is getting together to force an ending, and they will do it.'"

LILY LANGTRY, 63, COMES BACK FOR NEW PLAY

New York.—Lily Langtry returned to the land of her adoption yesterday She tripped unafraid down the St. Paul's gangplank into the midst of a group of rreporters with a glad cry:

"I feel like a big schoolgirl!"

Her skirts were above her shoetops, her footgear was in the mode that is to be her ensemble was radiant.

It has been hinted that the famous Jersey Lily has found what the late Ponce de Leon sought long and vainly. There are reasons for believing the rumor. For —whisper—the records show that she was entitled to celebrate her sixty-third birthday on the thirteenth of this month.

As to that reference to the land of her adoption it may have been forgotten by some that twenty years ago she became a naturalized American. That was some time beforre she became Lady de Bathe, wife of Hugo Gerald de Bathe, and when she was at the zenith of her dramatic successes.

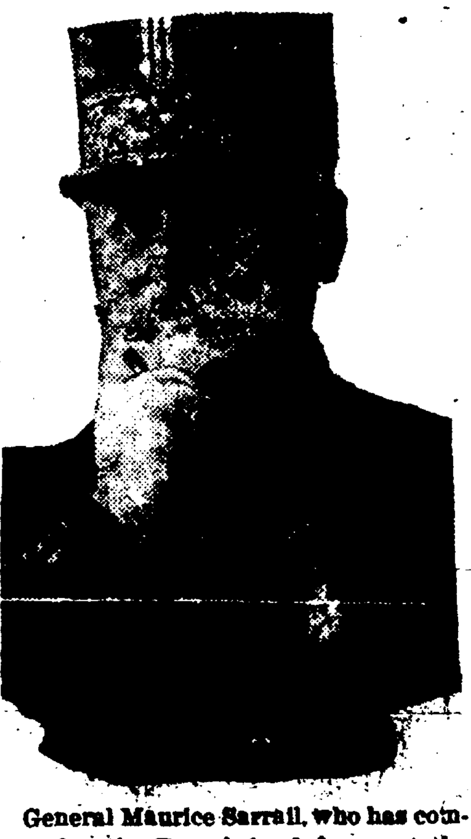
NOTABLES IN THE LIMELIGHT

General Maurice Sarrail of the French Army.



General Maurice Sarrail, who has commanded the French land forces at the Dardanelles since early in August, 1915, had won recognition for military skill before being named commander in chief of the army of the orient. When the forces of the kaiser were making their first onslaught into France General Sarrail commanded the Third French army, which at that time faced northwards, with its back to the fortress of Verdun. Under pressure of the German rush General Sarrail's army bent around Verdun, yet held a firm and unbroken line that effectively stopped the advance of the German center. General von Kluck, in command of the German army at the extreme western end of the line, was forced to swing back, and then General Joffre saw that the time had come to fight the great battle of the Marne. Sarrail had saved the day.

General Sarrail first received military notice when, in 1887, with the rank of captain, he was appointed to the staff of the Seventeenth army corps. Several years later he was attached to the staff of the military governor of Lyons, the headquarters of the Fourteenth army corps. He was made a lieutenant colonel in 1902 and eight years later was appointed director of infantry at the war ministry. The next year General Sarrail reached the rank of general of division, and in 1914 he was given command of the Eighth army corps. This is the position he held just before the outbreak of the war.

The former French commander at the Dardanelles was General Gouraud, who was severely wounded and forced to return to France.

Governor of Montana.

The recent conference of governors, governors elect and former governors at Boston was gathered for the purpose of discussing matters of vital public interest—such matters as more efficient state administration, problems of penology, policies of conservation and the great question of a more adequate preparedness for the defense of the nation in case of war. Thirty-four chief governors, past, present and elect, were present at the convocation.

Among the governors who took a leading part in the discussion of "Economy and Efficiency In the State" was Governor Samuel V. Stewart of Montana.

SAMUEL V. STEWART.

Governor Stewart is a native of Ohio, although he was educated in Kansas. He studied for a time in the Kansas State Normal school at Emporia and was graduated in the law from the University of Kansas in 1898. He began the practice of law at Virginia City, Nev., the same year and for five years was city attorney. Removing to Montana, he served for eight years as county attorney of Madison county. In 1910 he was chairman of the Montana Democratic state central committee. In 1912 he was chosen governor of Montana for a term of four years. His home is at Helena.

DUTY OF UNIONISTS.

The principles of unionism must become the principles of the life of a true trade unionist, for they are founded upon fundamental concepts of justice. He must think unionism, feel it, live it, bring it into the lives of those with whom he works, for unionism is human welfare. He must read, study, talk, act, for the cause of unionism.

This is a question that must come home to the consciences of all those who labor. Are you doing your part?

Are you able to defend the cause of labor, to explain its principles, or do you avoid discussions because you have not prepared yourself to maintain your position?

Let each member of organized labor and every labor organization take up the intensive work of a labor forward movement for America.—Samuel Gompers.

Jones was red in the face now, and the other passengers began to take notice.

"You misunderstand, sir!" he shouted.

"Hey?"

"You misunderstood!"

"Miss Underwood, is she? Peggy, who is starving, is Miss Underwood? Well?"

"I didn't say anything about Miss Underwood!" screamed Jones. "I begged your pardon, and you misunderstood."

"Oh, now I see!" said the old man sympathetically. "It is your Aunt Peggy who is starving Miss Underwood. Well, why don't you report the case at once to the police?"—Pearson's Weekly.

A WOMAN OF DEEP MYSTERY

Tale of Strange Happenings at an Army Post.

Few United States army people remember the mystery which occurred at Fort C. many years ago, a mystery which has never to this day and doubtless never will be revealed. Those under whose notice it took place are now either on the retired list or dead. Yet here and there dozing over a newspaper at some army or navy club a white headed old man may be found who can give the circumstances.

One day away back in the last century guests were assembling at the quarters of Colonel Athern, commanding Fort C., to celebrate the wedding of the colonel's niece, Miss Roxana Bonfield, with Lieutenant Reginald Allen. Allen had secured a leave or had been sent away on some duty—it was claimed that he was purposely absent—and was to have returned for a bachelor farewell dinner he was to give on the evening before the wedding. There were no mails or telegraphs handy at that time by which he could send any word, and when he did not appear for the dinner it was supposed he had been unavoidably detained. But when the garrison clock struck 12 the next day, the hour appointed for the ceremony, and he did not appear there was a hum of surprise.

Allen never did appear again at Fort C. The lady he was to have married bore the slight put upon her so well, never uttering a word of blame, that she received the sympathy of every one. Not a person at the fort who afterward met Lieutenant Allen—he offered no explanation of his conduct—but gave him a dead cut.

Five years after his disappointment Miss Bonfield engaged herself to Captain Gregg. The engagement occurred just before Gregg was ordered to another post. Certain young wags with more love of saying mean things than delicacy debated among themselves if Gregg would behave as Allen had behaved. But Gregg, after being engaged for six months, during all of which time he was absent from his fiancee, returned in ample time for the wedding.

There is no record that any disagreement ever occurred between Captain and Mrs. Gregg. During the first few months of their marriage Gregg appeared as a devoted and happy husband. Then one day when he went on duty he gave evidence of having received a shock. To inquiries as to his health he replied that he was never better. Nevertheless he had a hunted look and lost flesh till his uniform hung about him in deep creases. While the loving devotion he had shown his wife did not continue, he was perfectly respectful and attentive to her. What surprised every one was that she did not treat him or appear to worry about him as a sick man.

Gregg finally got a year's leave and went abroad—without his wife. At the end of the year he returned in fair condition, but with something of the hunted look left, and rejoined his wife. In six months he was sent to a retreat, where he died a few years later.

Mrs. Gregg was now a woman of twenty-eight. She had no children and did not look her age. The unfortunate endings of her love affairs had not seemed to cast any cloud over her. She was not at all depressed. She appeared simply as any other young woman whose husband had died and left her a widow. Her widowhood was short. In eighteen months after Gregg's death she became the wife of Major Thurston. Then the young wags wondered if she was going to climb the ladder of rank till she married a general.

Thurston's sister, an army woman, begged him not to marry Mrs. Gregg. But when the brother asked for reasons he got nothing except what has been told thus far in this story—that is, that the woman had been treated shamefully by her first fiance and that her husband had died of some brain or nervous trouble. The major declined to act the part of the first and saw no reason why he should fear the fate of the second. The sister still protested; but, without a reason, he declined to change his course. He married Mrs. Gregg and ten weeks later committed suicide.

Thurston is not the first man who has made a mistake by not heeding a woman's warning because no good or sufficient reason accompanied it. Women have been known to be right in condemning a man from the shape of his nose. However, there was not the slightest proof that Mrs. Thurston had any direct or indirect influence on her husband's suicide. What surprised every one was that this climax to her unfortunate matrimonial affairs seemed to have no more effect upon her than either of the other cases. She seemed perfectly passive under each and all of them. Nevertheless she did not marry again, though it was reported that several men at different times were attentive to her. It was supposed that on learning that marital record they desisted.

Mrs. Gregg-Thurston died when she was past fifty. No explanation was ever given of the blight that fell on her lovers, but there was a story told by the physician who brought her into the world that her mother a few months before the child's birth had been frightened by a snake.

May not Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes' character of Elsie Venner, whose mother suffered a similar fright, the child inheriting serpentine traits, explain the mystery of Roxana Bonfield?

ENTERTAINMENT KINK.

How to Give a Cafeteria Party, Making the Guests Do the Waiting.

After all the guests had assembled in the library they were invited to come into the dining room through a small door, which obliged them to enter one by one. At their right they passed a table heaped high with black enameled waiters, to which each helped himself or herself in passing.

Still standing in line, they conned the burlesque bills of fare posted around the room and, having made up their minds to a choice of the various goodies, helped themselves from the array of dishes spread on a narrow table extending the length of the room and presided over by a trio of young people attired in the extreme of waiters' uniforms. Having filled their trays to their satisfaction, they gathered the necessary table silver, and as they passed slowly from the low French windows out on to the glass inclosed, heated and lighted veranda each was handed his gay paper napkin, one to go under the tray and an individual one numbered to indicate table. These napkins had, of course, been numbered in duplicate, and one did not know until he had found his table who his partner was going to be. Each little table was decorated with a gay posey and flanked with a pitcher of ice water and two tumblers. The veranda was decorated with garlands of electric bulbs dropped into Japanese lanterns.

After much merrymaking all the lively crowd was seated, only leaving their tables to return to the table for second helps for themselves or partners of the delicious chicken salad, shrimp pates or rasp rolls.

When the first course was entirely finished the proprietor (hostess) asked each youth to return napkins and trays of used dishes to the dumb waiter, while she again distributed the napkins in twos. When the youths returned the numbers on their fresh napkins told them that they must seek partners with numbers corresponding and get for them the cream and cake which by this time was dished and waiting on the long table.

Still another change of partners was effected when the coffee and mints were distributed, and the affair passed off pleasantly, terminating in a jolly veranda dance.

SONG OF THE SHREW.

It Is Pitched So High That Only Sharp Ears Can Hear It.

The high pitched squeaking or whistling of the shrew is a curious sound and frequently acquires quite a songlike character. More often, however, the voice of the shrew is raised in anger, for it is a pugnacious little animal, and the males have fierce combats in the spring of the year. It is a curious fact that many people are unable to hear the shrew's squeaking, not that the sound is not loud enough, but because it is so highly pitched that only sharp ears can record the vibrations.

Though often spoken of as a mouse, the shrew is of an entirely different species, being insectivorous and having sharp teeth on each side of the mouth instead of front teeth, suitable for gnawing, such as are possessed by mice and other rodents.

Though it exists in very great numbers and can very frequently be observed, much remains to be discovered regarding the life of this little creature, an Italian species of which is our smallest known mammal. It is still a mystery why so many dead shrews should be found about the roadsides and pathways. They are fearless little animals, and even when disturbed in their spring journeys from one place to another they do not allow themselves to be put out of their course by a trifle. —London Spectator.

For Thin Arms.

For thin arms gentle massage with cocoa butter will be found helpful. Anoint the palm of the hand with cocoa butter and gently but thoroughly knead the flesh from wrist to elbow, working in the cocoa butter at the same time. A good exercise for the forearm is to lie on your back on the floor and extend your arms to the right and left on a line with your shoulders and open and close the fists fifteen or twenty times, spreading the fingers wide apart every time the hands are opened.

The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

HOMEMADE SIRUPS.

IN making jelly or preserves the thrifty housewife saves the extra cupful of juice or fruit, adds more sugar and water and bottles it as a homemade sirup. Peach, plum, currant, blackberry and raspberry all yield most flavorful liquids. Indeed, one of the best ways in which to use up imperfect fruit or the leftovers which will not keep is to stew them rapidly, strain, add sugar and water and bottle, using the bottles with metal caps or the ordinary bottle or quart jar.

Ginger, mint and cloves are all hot weather seasonings. They can be combined with simple sirups, with iced tea or any of the carbonated waters, vichy, etc. The use of these bottled waters is growing in the home, as iced tea with vichy or fruit sirups with seltzer have a piquant tang that refreshes the heat weary body.

Ways of Using Fruit Juice.

Fruit salads are always welcome, and all practical buyers know that the best fruiterers reduce prices of specimens that are a trifle blemished, but quite good enough for cutting up into a salad. Melon salad with cherries is novel and exceedingly good. Gooseberries may be served in many ways. Here is a new way of serving pears: The pears are cut in half and the center is scooped out; then the hollow is filled with creamed Camembert cheese with a dash of chopped parsley, the dish being afterward chilled on the ice. Peaches, chilled and having the halves filled with vanilla ice cream, quickly rolled in chopped almonds and served with iced raspberry sirup, are delicious morsels.

Grape Juice.

With ten pounds of grapes use three pounds of sugar. Pick over, wash and drain the grapes well. Weigh them and put in a porcelain lined kettle with one cupful of water. Set over the fire and as soon as they burst mash them through a sieve and strain through cheesecloth. Return to stove, add sugar, simmer twenty minutes and bottle at once in bottles which have been previously heated. Set the bottles in a pan of water while filling. Do not put in all the sugar at once. Sometimes it is too much, but it depends on the grapes.

To Remove Cotter Pins.

While removing cotter pins is generally considered more or less of an easy matter, repair men can learn something new, says Blacksmith and Wheelwright. One of the best methods of getting an ordinary pin out of its hole is to grasp it in the jaws of a pair of pliers and use a hammer to pound the pliers. This is a very effective way and is used by nearly all good repair men.

Another method is to use a drift pin or large nail. Put this through the hole of a cotter and strike it with the hammer. Sometimes the pin may be removed with the drift or nail, using the latter as a lever.

Removing Putty Stains.

Putty purchased from a dealer is usually in a soft and oily state, and the amateur glazier soon finds his hands, as well as the tools, plentifully smeared after the job is finished. Removing this from the hands with the putty knife or a stick is very tedious, but if a bunch of fine excelsior is used the putty will be removed quickly and thoroughly.

RECIPES NEW AND OLD.

Chicken a la Newburg.

MAKE a sauce of four tablespoonfuls of butter, mixed smoothly with one tablespoonful of flour. Add one cupful of cream and heat in a double boiler or chafing dish. When thick and free from lumps add one pint of cold chicken meat in small pieces and the hard boiled yolks of two eggs mashed to a smooth paste with one tablespoonful of cream. When hot stir in one-quarter of a cupful of sherry and season with salt and pepper.

Stuffed Round Steak.

Two pounds round steak, two ounces suet, three ounces of breadcrumbs, six olives, one dessertspoonful of chopped parsley, pepper and salt, two eggs. Peel and chop the olives small; chop the suet; put into a basin with the crumbs, parsley, olives, suet, pepper and salt; mix well with the eggs; spread the mixture on the steak, roll and tie securely; place in a greased paper and roast about three-quarters of an hour.

Tuna Fish Salad.

One can tuna fish, a stem or two of finely cut up celery and parsley and mix with salad dressing.

Deviled Eggs.

Boil hard one dozen eggs, put in cold water and peel, cut in halves (lengthwise), take out the yolks and mash fine, put in a lump of butter size of a hickory nut, salt and pepper to taste, a little mustard and enough vinegar to mix all together well; fill the whites and serve cold with or without salad dressing.

Stale Bread Pudding.

Soak a loaf and a quarter of stale bread in water. When soft squeeze it out and put into a pudding pan. Then add one box raisins, one quart milk, two eggs, one tablespoonful of vanilla, one teaspoonful salt, two cupfuls of sugar. Mix together. Before putting into the oven lay little pieces of butter all around the top. This will make it a rich crisp brown.

CHARMING VERSION OF THE RUSSIAN BLOUSE.

Forest green broadcloth is used for this smart Russian blouse. An embroidered girdle, collar and belt-ends of satin are smart decorative features.

Women of youthful figure will find particular pleasure in wearing this Russian blouse of forest green broadcloth, with a self-girdle trimmed with rope silk and bead embroidery. The front and back are in panel effect, while the sides are pointed. Provision is made for a lower straight edge, however. A collar of heavy satin and streamers of the same material are also attractive features of the costume. In average size, 4½ yards 54-inch material and ⅝ yard 40-inch satin are required for the blouse and skirt.

In order that the cutting may be done with the greatest economy, yet in such a way that the lines of the blouse will be retained, it is well to study the cutting guide carefully. First fold the material, then along the lengthwise fold place the collar, as shown in the diagram. Opposite the collar, on a lengthwise thread, arrange the front section, and to the right of the front place the sleeve. The back is laid on a lengthwise fold of material, as is also the belt, but the belt is cut crosswise. Lay the cuff and yoke on a lengthwise thread.

If desired, the front ends of the wide belt may be made of contrasting material from ⅝ inch forward of slot perforations. The small "o" perforations about the neck are for the open neck effect. There are also small "o" perforations along the lower edge of the blouse to determine the shape that may be preferred, both round and pointed outlines being favored.

The silk and bead embroidery adds considerably to the beauty of the blouse and can be used on serge as well as broadcloth. The model is one of the most pleasing guises in which the blouse has been presented.

GETTING READY FOR SANTA CLAUS.

There is no reason why Santa Claus should not be dressed in the latest style. This costume provides for him the last word in yuletide fashions.

In less than two months Santa Claus will begin his round of visits, and as he will appear at numerous concerts and entertainments it will be necessary to provide a change of costume for him. The costume shown here consists of a coat, knickerbockers, hat and leggings and in average size requires 6½ yards 40-inch material and 5¼ yards fur trimming.

The coat is not difficult to make. First the under-arm and shoulder seams are closed as notched. Next, turn hems at front and lower edges on small "o" perforations. Sew collar to neck edge, notches, center-fronts and center-backs even; large "O" perforations indicate center-front. Tack a strap of material to position at underarm seam between small "o" perforations in front to pass a leather belt through.

Close the sleeve seam and, after hemming the lower edge, sew in armhole as notched, small "o" perforations at shoulder seam easing in any fullness.

For the trousers, first sew one fly to right front as notched and one underneath left front as notched for an underfacing; work buttonholes in the left fly, and sew buttons on right fly closing. Close leg seam as notched. Gather lower edge of leg between double "TT" perforations. Close seam of knee band as notched, sew to gathered edge of leg, seams even. Close center seam from upper edge of back to single large "O" perforation in front.

Next, close back seam of casing, indicated by small "o" perforations; adjust to position underneath upper edge of trousers, notches at upper edges even; insert a drawstring.

The hat comes next. Close center-front seam, indicated by single small "o" perforation, and close center-back seam, indicated by double "oo" perforations. Underface the lower part to 1 inch above crossline of small "o" perforations; roll back on small "o" perforations. Finish the pointed end with a pom-pom.

For the leggings, join two sections as notched and turn under back edge on slot perforations, lap to small "o" perforations, notches even; close with buttons and buttonholes or with snap fasteners. Sew strap to leggings as notched. Bring small "o" perforation in strap to corresponding perforation at lower edge of leggings and fasten.

Cotton batting spotted with black tassels makes a very good imitation of ermine.

YOUNG FOLKS' CORNER

An Apple "Stunt."

When you wish to mystify and amuse one of your friends try the trick of cutting an apple into quarters without apparently breaking the skin. It is so old a trick that it will probably be quite new to many of the people you know.

Select a large red apple. Thread a long, slender darning needle with about a yard of strong white linen thread and, beginning near the stem of the apple, take a shallow stitch an inch or so in length toward the blow end.

Draw about two-thirds of the thread through, and be careful to make the break in the skin as small as possible, and when you take the second stitch set the needle exactly in the place out of which it came. Sew entirely round the apple to the opposite side of the stem from where you started.

Now, hold the apple firmly between your knees and, crossing the ends of the thread, take one in each hand and give a strong, steady pull. The thread will cut its way through the fruit and come free in your hand. Repeat the process, beginning again at the stem, but going at right angles to the first cut.

When your friend peels the fruit she will find it neatly quartered. The small punctures that your needle makes in the skin will pass unnoticed, unless the apple is very closely examined.—Youth's Companion.

Jumbled Animals.

To make the game of animals interesting about four persons should play. Of course, the more persons the better the game.

Say, if six persons play, write on six slips of paper the name of an animal—that is, a different animal on each slip, but change the letters all around. For instance, if one animal was to be monkey it should be changed like this: komeyn (2), or if it were hyena it should be changed like this, eynah (3).

Give each one a slip and a pencil, and also a larger piece of paper. The slips should be numbered—that is, from 1 to 6, when six play. Then on the larger slip have numbers from 1 to 6. Then tell the players to pin their slips to their waists or coats. Then each one must go around to each player and try to guess the name of the animal on his or her slip. Each player must guess his own too. When they have guessed the animal they must write the name of it alongside of the corresponding number on the large sheet. For instance, if 3 was donkey they would write donkey alongside of No. 3. Time the players, giving about twenty minutes if six play and more time for more people. At the end of the allotted time the one having the most names correct should receive a prize.

The Useful Owl.

A family of barn owls will number from three to seven birds. It is hard to believe what an amount of vermin a family of owls will consume. An old owl will capture as much food as a dozen cats in a night, or more. The owlets are always hungry. They will eat their own weight in food every night, and more, if they can get it. A case is on record where a half grown owl was given all the mice it could eat. It swallowed eight, one after the other. The rapid digestion of birds of prey is shown by the fact that in three hours the little glutton was ready for a second meal and swallowed four more mice. If this can be done by a single bird, what effect must a whole family of owls have on the vermin of a community?

It would be difficult to point out a more useful bird than the barn owl in any farming country. Like many other birds, it deserves the fullest protection, but man is often its worst enemy.—American Birds.

Game of Pictures.

A large paper curtain is hung up near the end of the room. There are square holes in it, gilded around the edges like picture frames. Half of the players go in back of the curtain and each puts his or her head in a frame. The rest are seated in front of the curtain, and each takes it in turn to criticise the pictures. As soon as a picture laughs he or she must immediately withdraw his or her head from the frame. When all the pictures are gone it is the other side's turn. The two that keep up longest on either side receive a prize.

SOME SANDWICHES.

Pumpernickel Sandwiches.

Slice thin, butter, cover with slices of bologna and a little chopped dill pickle.

Rye Bread Sandwiches.

Between well buttered slices of rye bread spread a layer each of wafer thin slices of Bermuda onions, lightly salted, and bologna sausage.

Cheese and Anchovy Sandwiches.

Blend well together Parmesan cheese and anchovy, one part of the fish to two of cheese. Add a little dill and spread between slices of zwieback.

Honey Sandwiches.

Spread honey between slices of bread and butter, taking care that it does not run over the edges.

Fig Sandwiches.

ALLIGATORS' BILL.

Worries the Town Council of Anderson, Ind.

Anderson, Ind.—Two small alligators, each about three feet long, but nearly twenty-five years old, are causing the city water department some concern because of their meat bill, although the cost has averaged not more than $20 a year.

The last bill just presented for meat was $15, and because that bill was for only one feed City Clerk Collins and City Comptroller Richter were astonished. It was explained, however, that the alligators had fasted since October last. It is regarded doubtful whether the alligators will again manifest hunger until next spring, but the records show that perfectly good meat for the two alligators has cost the city about $400.

Stars in the Flag.

There were thirteen stars in the United States flag at the time of the revolution, fifteen in the war of 1812, twenty-nine during the Mexican war, thirty-five at the time of the civil war and forty-five in the Spanish-American war. Now there are forty-eight.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Loss of Weight.

One of the early symptoms of tuberculosis is a loss of weight. Any decided decreases should be watched with suspicion. It often means that the general bodily functions are not all that they should be. It is certain, under any circumstances, to indicate that one's physical resistance is being lowered, and this in itself opens the way to unusual chances of disease.

If this loss in weight is accompanied by loss of appetite, night sweats or a persistent cough or cold a physician should be consulted and nourishing food, plenty of rest and long hours of sleep in the fresh air should be resorted to in an effort to build up the body.

People will neglect themselves for months when decreasing weight should warn them as surely as the falling barometer denotes a coming storm that their physical well being is in jeopardy.

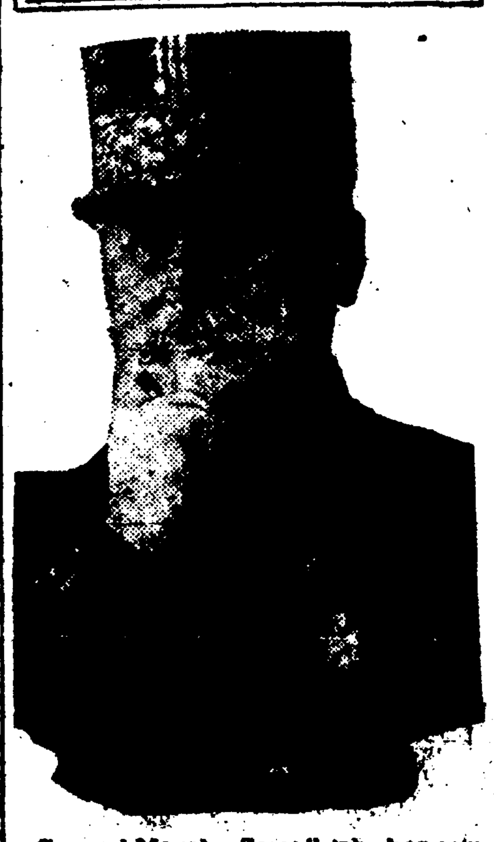
NOTABLES IN THE LIMELIGHT

General Maurice Sarrail of the French Army.



General Maurice Sarrail, who has commanded the French land forces at the Dardanelles since early in August, 1915, had won recognition for military skill before being named commander in chief of the army of the orient. When the forces of the kaiser were making their first onslaught into France General Sarrail commanded the Third French army, which at that time faced northwards, with its back to the fortress of Verdun. Under pressure of the German rush General Sarrail's army bent around Verdun, yet held a firm and unbroken line that effectively stopped the advance of the German center. General von Kluck, in command of the German army at the extreme western end of the line, was forced to swing back, and then General Joffre saw that the time had come to fight the great battle of the Marne. Sarrail had saved the day.

General Sarrail first received military notice when, in 1887, with the rank of captain, he was appointed to the staff of the Seventeenth army corps. Several years later he was attached to the staff of the military governor of Lyons, the headquarters of the Fourteenth army corps. He was made a lieutenant colonel in 1902 and eight years later was appointed director of infantry at the war ministry. The next year General Sarrail reached the rank of general of division, and in 1914 he was given command of the Eighth army corps. This is the position he held just before the outbreak of the war.

The former French commander at the Dardanelles was General Gouraud, who was severely wounded and forced to return to France.

Governor of Montana.

The recent conference of governors, governors elect and former governors at Boston was gathered for the purpose of discussing matters of vital public interest—such matters as more efficient state administration, problems of penology, policies of conservation and the great question of a more adequate preparedness for the defense of the nation in case of war. Thirty-four chief governors, past, present and elect, were present at the convocation.

Among the governors who took a leading part in the discussion of "Economy and Efficiency In the State" was Governor Samuel V. Stewart of Montana.

SAMUEL V. STEWART.

Governor Stewart is a native of Ohio, although he was educated in Kansas. He studied for a time in the Kansas State Normal school at Emporia and was graduated in the law from the University of Kansas in 1898. He began the practice of law at Virginia City, Nev., the same year and for five years was city attorney. Removing to Montana, he served for eight years as county attorney of Madison county. In 1910 he was chairman of the Montana Democratic state central committee. In 1913 he was chosen governor of Montana for a term of four years. His home is at Helena.

DUTY OF UNIONISTS.

The principles of unionism must become the principles of the life of a true trade unionist, for they are founded upon fundamental concepts of justice. He must think unionism, feel it, live it, bring it into the lives of those with whom he works, for unionism is human welfare. He must read, study, talk, act, for the cause of unionism.

This is a question that must come home to the consciences of all those who labor. Are you doing your part?

Are you able to defend the cause of labor, to explain its principles, or do you avoid discussions because you have not prepared yourself to maintain your position?

Let each member of organized labor and every labor organization take up the intensive work of a labor forward movement for America.—Samuel Gompers.

"I beg your pardon," he said.

"Hey? Speak louder. I'm a trifle deaf."

"I beg your pardon," repeated Jones.

"H'm! Peggy starving? Well, I'm sorry. Who's Peggy?"

Jones was red in the face now, and the other passengers began to take notice.

"You misunderstand, sir!" he shouted.

"Hey?"

"You misunderstood!"

"Miss Underwood, is she? Peggy, who is starving, is Miss Underwood? Well?"

"I didn't say anything about Miss Underwood!" screamed Jones. "I begged your pardon, and you misunderstood."

"Oh, now I see!" said the old man sympathetically. "It is your Aunt Peggy who is starving Miss Underwood. Well, why don't you report the case at once to the police?"—Pearson's Weekly.

A WOMAN OF DEEP MYSTERY

Tale of Strange Happenings at an Army Post.

Few United States army people remember the mystery which occurred at Fort C. many years ago, a mystery which has never to this day and doubtless never will be revealed. Those under whose notice it took place are now either on the retired list or dead. Yet here and there dozing over a newspaper at some army or navy club a white headed old man may be found who can give the circumstances.

One day away back in the last century guests were assembling at the quarters of Colonel Athern, commanding Fort C., to celebrate the wedding of the colonel's niece, Miss Roxana Bonfield, with Lieutenant Reginald Allen. Allen had secured a leave or had been sent away on some duty—it was claimed that he was purposely absent—and was to have returned for a bachelor farewell dinner he was to give on the evening before the wedding. There were no mails or telegraphs handy at that time by which he could send any word, and when he did not appear for the dinner it was supposed he had been unavoidably detained. But when the garrison clock struck 12 the next day, the hour appointed for the ceremony, and he did not appear there was a hum of surprise.

Allen never did appear again at Fort C. The lady he was to have married bore the slight put upon her so well, never uttering a word of blame, that she received the sympathy of every one. Not a person at the fort who afterward met Lieutenant Allen—he offered no explanation of his conduct—but gave him a dead cut.

Five years after his disappointment Miss Bonfield engaged herself to Captain Gregg. The engagement occurred just before Gregg was ordered to another post. Certain young wags with more love of saying mean things than delicacy debated among themselves if Gregg would behave as Allen had behaved. But Gregg, after being engaged for six months, during all of which time he was absent from his fiancee, returned in ample time for the wedding.

There is no record that any disagreement ever occurred between Captain and Mrs. Gregg. During the first few months of their marriage Gregg appeared as a devoted and happy husband. Then one day when he went on duty he gave evidence of having received a shock. To inquiries as to his health he replied that he was never better. Nevertheless he had a hunted look and lost flesh till his uniform hung about him in deep creases. While the loving devotion he had shown his wife did not continue, he was perfectly respectful and attentive to her. What surprised every one was that she did not treat him or appear to worry about him as a sick man.

Gregg finally got a year's leave and went abroad—without his wife. At the end of the year he returned in fair condition, but with something of the hunted look left, and rejoined his wife. In six months he was sent to a retreat, where he died a few years later.

Mrs. Gregg was now a woman of twenty-eight. She had no children and did not look her age. The unfortunate endings of her love affairs had not seemed to cast any cloud over her. She was not at all depressed. She appeared simply as any other young woman whose husband had died and left her a widow. Her widowhood was short. In eighteen months after Gregg's death she became the wife of Major Thurston. Then the young wags wondered if she was going to climb the ladder of rank till she married a general.

Thurston's sister, an army woman, begged him not to marry Mrs. Gregg. But when the brother asked for reasons he got nothing except what has been told thus far in this story—that is, that the woman had been treated shamefully by her first fiance and that her husband had died of some brain or nervous trouble. The major declined to act the part of the first and saw no reason why he should fear the fate of the second. The sister still protested; but, without a reason, he declined to change his course. He married Mrs. Gregg and ten weeks later committed suicide.

Thurston is not the first man who has made a mistake by not heeding a woman's warning because no good or sufficient reason accompanied it. Women have been known to be right in condemning a man from the shape of his nose. However, there was not the slightest proof that Mrs. Thurston had any direct or indirect influence on her husband's suicide. What surprised every one was that this climax to her unfortunate matrimonial affairs seemed to have no more effect upon her than either of the other cases. She seemed perfectly passive under each and all of them. Nevertheless she did not marry again, though it was reported that several men at different times were attentive to her. It was supposed that on learning that marital record they desisted.

Mrs. Gregg-Thurston died when she was past fifty. No explanation was ever given of the blight that fell on her lovers, but there was a story told by the physician who brought her into the world that her mother a few months before the child's birth had been frightened by a snake.

May not Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes' character of [illegible] Venner, whose mother suffered a similar fright, the child inheriting serpentine traits, explain the mystery of Roxana Bonfield?

ENTERTAINMENT KINK.

How to Give a Cafeteria Party, Making the Guests Do the Waiting.

After all the guests had assembled in the library they were invited to come into the dining room through a small door, which obliged them to enter one by one. At their right they passed a table heaped high with black enameled waiters, to which each helped himself or herself in passing.

Still standing in line, they conned the burlesque bills of fare posted around the room and, having made up their minds to a choice of the various goodies, helped themselves from the array of dishes spread on a narrow table extending the length of the room and presided over by a trio of young people attired in the extreme of waiters' uniforms. Having filled their trays to their satisfaction, they gathered the necessary table silver, and as they passed slowly from the low French windows out on to the glass inclosed, heated and lighted veranda each was handed his gay paper napkin, one to go under the tray and an individual one numbered to indicate table. These napkins had, of course, been numbered in duplicate, and one did not know until he had found his table who his partner was going to be. Each little table was decorated with a gay posey and flanked with a pitcher of ice water and two tumblers. The veranda was decorated with garlands of electric bulbs dropped into Japanese lanterns.

After much merrymaking all the lively crowd was seated, only leaving their tables to return to the table for second helps for themselves or partners of the delicious chicken salad, shrimp pates or rasp rolls.

When the first course was entirely finished the proprietor (hostess) asked each youth to return napkins and trays of used dishes to the dumb waiter, while she again distributed the napkins in twos. When the youths returned the numbers on their fresh napkins told them that they must seek partners with numbers corresponding and get for them the cream and cake which by this time was dished and waiting on the long table.

Still another change of partners was effected when the coffee and mints were distributed, and the affair passed off pleasantly, terminating in a jolly veranda dance.

SONG OF THE SHREW.

It Is Pitched So High That Only Sharp Ears Can Hear It.

The high pitched squeaking or whistling of the shrew is a curious sound and frequently acquires quite a songlike character. More often, however, the voice of the shrew is raised in anger, for it is a pugnacious little animal, and the males have fierce combats in the spring of the year. It is a curious fact that many people are unable to hear the shrew's squeaking, not that the sound is not loud enough, but because it is so highly pitched that only sharp ears can record the vibrations.

Though often spoken of as a mouse, the shrew is of an entirely different species, being insectivorous and having sharp teeth on each side of the mouth instead of front teeth, suitable for gnawing, such as are possessed by mice and other rodents.

Though it exists in very great numbers and can very frequently be observed, much remains to be discovered regarding the life of this little creature, an Italian species of which is our smallest known mammal. It is still a mystery why so many dead shrews should be found about the roadsides and pathways. They are fearless little animals, and even when disturbed in their spring journeys from one place to another they do not allow themselves to be put out of their course by a trifle.—London Spectator.

For Thin Arms.

For thin arms gentle massage with cocoa butter will be found helpful. Anoint the palm of the hand with cocoa butter and gently but thoroughly knead the flesh from wrist to elbow, working in the cocoa butter at the same time. A good exercise for the forearm is to lie on your back on the floor and extend your arms to the right and left on a line with your shoulders and open and close the fists fifteen or twenty times, spreading the fingers wide apart every time the hands are opened.

The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

HOMEMADE SIRUPS.

IN making jelly or preserves the thrifty housewife saves the extra cupful of juice or fruit, adds more sugar and water and bottles it as a homemade sirup. Peach, plum, currant, blackberry and raspberry all yield most flavorful liquids. Indeed, one of the best ways in which to use up imperfect fruit or the leftovers which will not keep is to stew them rapidly, strain, add sugar and water and bottle, using the bottles with metal caps or the ordinary bottle or quart jar.

Ginger, mint and cloves are all hot weather seasonings. They can be combined with simple sirups, with iced tea or any of the carbonated waters, vichy, etc. The use of these bottled waters is growing in the home, as iced tea with vichy or fruit sirups with seltzer have a piquant tang that refreshes the heat weary body.

Ways of Using Fruit Juice.

Fruit salads are always welcome, and all practical buyers know that the best fruiterers reduce prices of specimens that are a trifle blemished, but quite good enough for cutting up into a salad. Melon salad with cherries is novel and exceedingly good. Gooseberries may be served in many ways. Here is a new way of serving pears: The pears are cut in half and the center is scooped out; then the hollow is filled with creamed Camembert cheese with a dash of chopped parsley, the dish being afterward chilled on the ice. Peaches, chilled and having the halves filled with vanilla ice cream, quickly rolled in chopped almonds and served with iced raspberry sirup, are delicious morsels.

Grape Juice.

With ten pounds of grapes use three pounds of sugar. Pick over, wash and drain the grapes well. Weigh them and put in a porcelain lined kettle with one cupful of water. Set over the fire and as soon as they burst mash them through a sieve and strain through cheesecloth. Return to stove, add sugar, simmer twenty minutes and bottle at once in bottles which have been previously heated. Set the bottles in a pan of water while filling. Do not put in all the sugar at once. Sometimes it is too much, but it depends on the grapes.

To Remove Cotter Pins.

While removing cotter pins is generally considered more or less of an easy matter, repair men can learn something new, says Blacksmith and Wheelwright. One of the best methods of getting an ordinary pin out of its hole is to grasp it in the jaws of a pair of pliers and use a hammer to pound the pliers. This is a very effective way and is used by nearly all good repair men.

Another method is to use a drift pin or large nail. Put this through the hole of a cotter and strike it with the hammer. Sometimes the pin may be removed with the drift or nail, using the latter as a lever.

Removing Putty Stains.

Putty purchased from a dealer is usually in a soft and oily state, and the amateur glazier soon finds his hands, as well as the tools, plentifully smeared after the job is finished. Removing this from the hands with the putty knife or a stick is very tedious, but if a bunch of fine excelsior is used the putty will be removed quickly and thoroughly.

RECIPES NEW AND OLD.

Chicken a la Newburg.

MAKE a sauce of four tablespoonfuls of butter, mixed smoothly with one tablespoonful of flour. Add one cupful of cream and heat in a double boiler or chafing dish. When thick and free from lumps add one pint of cold chicken meat in small pieces and the hard boiled yolks of two eggs mashed to a smooth paste with one tablespoonful of cream. When hot stir in one-quarter of a cupful of sherry and season with salt and pepper.

Stuffed Round Steak.

Two pounds round steak, two ounces suet, three ounces of breadcrumbs, six olives, one dessertspoonful of chopped parsley, pepper and salt, two eggs. Peel and chop the olives small; chop the suet; put into a basin with the crumbs, parsley, olives, suet, pepper and salt; mix well with the eggs; spread the mixture on the steak, roll and tie securely; place in a greased paper and roast about three-quarters of an hour.

Tuna Fish Salad.

One can tuna fish, a stem or two of finely cut up celery and parsley and mix with salad dressing.

Deviled Eggs.

Boil hard one dozen eggs, put in cold water and peel, cut in halves (lengthwise), take out the yolks and mash fine, put in a lump of butter size of a hickory nut, salt and pepper to taste, a little mustard and enough vinegar to mix all together well; fill the whites and serve cold with or without salad dressing.

Stale Bread Pudding.

Soak a loaf and a quarter of stale bread in water. When soft squeeze it out and put into a pudding pan. Then add one box raisins, one quart milk, two eggs, one tablespoonful of vanilla, one teaspoonful salt, two cupfuls of sugar. Mix together. Before putting into the oven lay little pieces of butter all around the top. This will make it a rich crisp brown.

CHARMING VERSION OF THE RUSSIAN BLOUSE.

Forest green broadcloth is used for this smart Russian blouse. An embroidered girdle, collar and belt-ends of satin are smart decorative features.

Women of youthful figure will find particular pleasure in wearing this Russian blouse of forest green broadcloth, with a self-girdle trimmed with rope silk and bead embroidery. The front and back are in panel effect, while the sides are pointed. Provision is made for a lower straight edge, however. A collar of heavy satin and streamers of the same material are also attractive features of the costume. In average size, 4½ yards 54-inch material and ⅝ yard 40-inch satin are required for the blouse and skirt.

In order that the cutting may be done with the greatest economy, yet in such a way that the lines of the blouse will be retained, it is well to study the cutting guide carefully. First fold the material, then along the lengthwise fold place the collar, as shown in the diagram. Opposite the collar, on a lengthwise thread, arrange the front section, and to the right of the front place the sleeve. The back is laid on a lengthwise fold of material, as is also the belt, but the belt is cut crosswise. Lay the cuff and yoke on a lengthwise thread.

If desired, the front ends of the wide belt may be made of contrasting material from ¾ inch forward of slot perforations. The small "o" perforations about the neck are for the open neck effect. There are also small "o" perforations along the lower edge of the blouse to determine the shape that may be preferred, both round and pointed outlines being favored.

The silk and bead embroidery adds considerably to the beauty of the blouse and can be used on serge as well as broadcloth. The model is one of the most pleasing guises in which the blouse has been presented.

GETTING READY FOR SANTA CLAUS.

There is no reason why Santa Claus should not be dressed in the latest style. This costume provides for him the last word in yuletide fashions.

In less than two months Santa Claus will begin his round of visits, and as he will appear at numerous concerts and entertainments it will be necessary to provide a change of costume for him. The costume shown here consists of a coat, knickerbockers, hat and leggings and in average size requires 6½ yards 40-inch material and 5½ yards fur trimming.

The coat is not difficult to make. First the under-arm and shoulder seams are closed as notched. Next, turn hems at front and lower edges on small "o" perforations. Sew collar to neck edge, notches, center-fronts and center-backs even; large "O" perforations indicate center-front. Tack a strap of material to position at under-arm seam between small "o" perforations in front to pass a leather belt through.

Close the sleeve seam and, after hemming the lower edge, sew in armhole as notched, small "o" perforations at shoulder seam easing in any fullness.

For the trousers, first sew one fly to right front as notched and one underneath left front as notched for an underfacing; work buttonholes in the left fly, and sew buttons on right fly closing. Close leg seam as notched. Gather lower edge of leg between double "TT" perforations. Close seam of knee band as notched, sew to gathered edge of leg, seams even. Close center seam from upper edge of back to single large "O" perforation in front.

Next, close back seam of casing, indicated by small "o" perforations; adjust to position underneath upper edge of trousers, notches at upper edges even; insert a drawstring.

The hat comes next. Close center-front seam, indicated by single small "o" perforation, and close center-back seam, indicated by double "oo" perforations. Underface the lower part to 1 inch above crossline of small "o" perforations; roll back on small "o" perforations. Finish the pointed end with a pom-pom.

For the leggings, join two sections as notched and turn under back edge on slot perforations, lap to small "o" perforations, notches even; close with buttons and buttonholes or with snap fasteners. Sew strap to leggings as notched. Bring small "o" perforation in strap to corresponding perforation at lower edge of leggings and fasten.

Cotton batting spotted with black tassels makes a very good imitation of ermine.

YOUNG FOLKS' CORNER

An Apple "Stunt."

When you wish to mystify and amuse one of your friends try the trick of cutting an apple into quarters without apparently breaking the skin. It is so old a trick that it will probably be quite new to many of the people you know.

Select a large red apple. Thread a long, slender darning needle with about a yard of strong white linen thread and, beginning near the stem of the apple, take a shallow stitch an inch or so in length toward the blow end.

Draw about two-thirds of the thread through, and be careful to make the break in the skin as small as possible, and when you take the second stitch set the needle exactly in the place out of which it came. Sew entirely round the apple to the opposite side of the stem from where you started.

Now, hold the apple firmly between your knees and, crossing the ends of the thread, take one in each hand and give a strong, steady pull. The thread will cut its way through the fruit and come free in your hand. Repeat the process, beginning again at the stem, but going at right angles to the first cut.

When your friend peels the fruit she will find it neatly quartered. The small punctures that your needle makes in the skin will pass unnoticed, unless the apple is very closely examined.—Youth's Companion.

Jumbled Animals.

To make the game of animals interesting about four persons should play. Of course, the more persons the better the game.

Say, if six persons play, write on six slips of paper the name of an animal—that is, a different animal on each slip, but change the letters all around. For instance, if one animal was to be monkey it should be changed like this: komeyn (2), or if it were hyena it should be changed like this: eynah (3).

Give each one a slip and a pencil, and also a larger piece of paper. The slips should be numbered—that is, from 1 to 6, when six play. Then on the larger slip have numbers from 1 to 6. Then tell the players to pin their slips to their waists or coats. Then each one must go around to each player and try to guess the name of the animal on his or her slip. Each player must guess his own too. When they have guessed the animal they must write the name of it alongside of the corresponding number on the large sheet. For instance, if 3 was donkey they would write donkey alongside of No. 3. Time the players, giving about twenty minutes if six play and more time for more people. At the end of the allotted time the one having the most names correct should receive a prize.

The Useful Owl.

A family of barn owls will number from three to seven birds. It is hard to believe what an amount of vermin a family of owls will consume. An old owl will capture as much food as a dozen cats in a night, or more. The owlets are always hungry. They will eat their own weight in food every night, and more, if they can get it. A case is on record where a half grown owl was given all the mice it could eat. It swallowed eight, one after the other. The rapid digestion of birds of prey is shown by the fact that in three hours the little glutton was ready for a second meal and swallowed four more mice. If this can be done by a single bird, what effect must a whole family of owls have on the vermin of a community?

It would be difficult to point out a more useful bird than the barn owl in any farming country. Like many other birds, it deserves the fullest protection, but man is often its worst enemy.—American Birds.

Game of Pictures.

A large paper curtain is hung up near the end of the room. There are square holes in it, gilded around the edges like picture frames. Half of the players go in back of the curtain and each puts his or her head in a frame.

The rest are seated in front of the curtain, and each takes it in turn to criticise the pictures. As soon as a picture laughs he or she must immediately withdraw his or her head from the frame. When all the pictures are gone it is the other side's turn. The two that keep up longest on either side receive a prize.

SOME SANDWICHES.

Pumpernickel Sandwiches.

Slice thin, butter, cover with slices of bologna and a little chopped dill pickle.

Rye Bread Sandwiches.

Between well buttered slices of rye bread spread a layer each of wafer thin slices of Bermuda onions, lightly salted, and bologna sausage.

Cheese and Anchovy Sandwiches.

Blend well together Parmesan cheese and anchovy, one part of the fish to two of cheese. Add a little dill and spread between slices of zwieback.

Honey Sandwiches.

Spread honey between slices of bread and butter, taking care that it does not run over the edges.

Fig Sandwiches.

Chop figs fine, add a little water and cook slowly until the right consistency for spreading. Add a few chopped nut meats and a little finely shredded orange peel and spread between thin slices of brown bread.

ALLIGATORS' BILL.

Worries the Town Council of Anderson, Ind.

Anderson, Ind.—Two small alligators, each about three feet long, but nearly twenty-five years old, are causing the city water department some concern because of their meat bill, although the cost has averaged not more than $20 a year.

The last bill just presented for meat was $15, and because that bill was for only one feed City Clerk Collins and City Comptroller Richter were astonished. It was explained, however, that the alligators had fasted since October last. It is regarded doubtful whether the alligators will again manifest hunger until next spring, but the records show that perfectly good meat for the two alligators has cost the city about $400.

Stars in the Flag.

There were thirteen stars in the United States flag at the time of the revolution, fifteen in the war of 1812, twenty-nine during the Mexican war, thirty-five at the time of the civil war and forty-five in the Spanish-American war. Now there are forty-eight.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Loss of Weight.

One of the early symptoms of tuberculosis is a loss of weight. Any decided decreases should be watched with suspicion. It often means that the general bodily functions are not all that they should be. It is certain, under any circumstances, to indicate that one's physical resistance is being lowered, and this in itself opens the way to unusual chances of disease.

If this loss in weight is accompanied by loss of appetite, night sweats or a persistent cough or cold a physician should be consulted and nourishing food, plenty of rest and long hours of sleep in the fresh air should be resorted to in an effort to build up the body.

People will neglect themselves for months when decreasing weight should warn them as surely as the falling barometer denotes a coming storm that their physical well being is in jeopardy.

PATRONS

Greeting:

Within a very few weeks this Newspaper will be celebrating its First Anniversary. Your response to our claim for support indicates that you must be satisfied with our product. That is as it should be. Your satisfaction with our service is more important to us than you are likely to think.

There are some who have not yet become our patrons. To these we commend the advice given by Mark Twain, who while editing a small town paper in Missouri, opened a letter written by a superstitious subscriber. The subscriber told Mr. Clements that he had found a spider in his paper, and asked him whether that was a sign of good or bad luck. The humorist printed the following answer: "Old Subscriber: Finding a spider in your paper was neither good luck nor bad luck for you. The spider was merely looking over our paper to see which merchant is not advertising so that he can go to that store, spin his web across the door, and lead a life of undisturbed peace ever afterward."

PEACE OF THAT KIND IS NOT WANTED BY ANY MERCHANT OF FULTON

TODAY'S FASHION NOTE

DENMARK, FOOD HIGH BUYING PORK IN U. S.

Copenhagen.—Prices on all kinds of food have advanced enormously in Denmark and, for some few articles, they are even higher than in the belligerent countries.

The most necessary articles of food have advanced 100 per cent. and others 40 and 80 per cent.

An unusual feature is that Denmark which has been known throughout the world as a pork and butter producing country, has llately begun to import large quantities of pork from America.

The chances for ejorts were so enticing last Winter that the Government found it necessary to fix maximum prices on pork, an act which made the farmers so indignant that re fusing to rear swine, there being little profit in trade at the Government's price. The result iss that Denmark can now scarcely supply its own market and is forced to buy American pork.

Steps are also being taken to import meat from the Argentine Republic.

U. S. TO GO AFTER WORLD'S COMMERCE

Washington.—Elaborate plans for a worldwide campaign for trade by the United States are revealed in the estimates of the Department of Commerce expenditures for the next fiscal year, to be presented to Congress this winter.

Through the Bureau of oreign and Domestic Commerce, the department proposes to aid American merchants and manufacturers in taking advantages of the wonderful opportunities now before them and in preparing for rthe struggle for trade supremacy certain to follow the European war.

Reorganization of the staff in Washington and an increase to about twice its present extent of the foreign commercial service are contemplated according to a statement made public by Dr. E. E. Pratt, chief of the bureau.

of it is a large and import station. One of the bombs fell within ten feet of theb ack wall of the theatre, and while there was little panic among thea udience the players, back stage, were more confused.

" 'Tonight's the Night' is playing there. The performance had just started when the first-explosions told of the presence of the Zeppelins. In Wellington street a mob broke one of the large gas mains and a roaring volcano resulted when the gas caught fire. It burned for two hours.

"' One side of the theatre/has a great deal of glass to it. When the raid was over not a pane was left. One great piece of plate glass, blown from its position and carrying its frame with it, went high in the air. When it fell it hit a woman. The glass cut her in two. I mean that literally. The sights were horrible. A man was brought into the theatre with his legs off.

"Through it all the people in the streets kept their heads. The lack of panic was uncanny. About the only persons to give way to fear were of foreign birth.

"Not only was the clam abnormal, but the daring, the impudence of the Zeppelins was extraordinary as well.

"They came first at a quarter-past nine o'clock in the evening. That call lasted only about seven minutes. Then they wheeled off and were lost in the night. At midnight they came back again and circled over Woolwich, apparently looking for the arsenals there. This time they left without striking a blow. Again they returned at about two o'clock in the morning.

"The raid of the night of the 13th bade fair to be duplicated on the night of the 14th, but the Zeppelins were driven off on the later occasion by the anti-air craft guns outside of London."

The principal damage by mobs wasc onfined to a small area about the theatrrical district along the Strand, it is declared. In a circle of one and a half blocks from the Savoy Hotel there was not a whole pane of glass. At Batton Gardens a bomb pierced a house from roof to cellar and there failed to explode. So the details went. Almost every passenger on board the St. Paul added his or her share to the long list of incidents.

"Damnable blackgpardry" was Mr. Whitridge's characterization of the Kaiser's method of attacking London from the air. Mr. Whitridge, who has been abroad since August 1, described the British public as "calm as oysters" and marvelled at their phlegmatic manner.

GERMAN WARSHIP SUNK BY BRITISH IN BALTIC

Petrogard.—A British submarine has sunk a German cruiser of the Prinz Adalbert type, near Libau, according to an official statement.

There are only two ships of the Prinz Adalbert class on the German naval lists. They are the Friedrich Karl, laid down in une, 1902, and the Prinz Adalbert, begun in 1901.

Thes hips carry a main battery of four 8.2-inch guns and ten 6-inch. They are only lightly armored, the heaviest strip being four inch amidships. Each ship in peace time carried a complement of 557 men and officers and had four torpedo tubes, three submerged. Their length is 393 feet, with a displacement of 8,858 tons.

ROAD-SIDE

When the Legislature passed the law prohibiting the posting of advertising signs within the highways, it passed a good law, and if the New York State Motor Federation tears down all the signs,or a share of them as it announces itw ill do, it will have accomplished a needed work.

The country side is no place for advertisements. New York State is too beautiful to be marred by the paint, and the people of the commonwealth ought to be so proud of the excellencies of the countryside that they would not allow its desecration by the signs.

The Mohawk Valley is famed for its beauty. The scenery in many places, particularly along the railroad and the highways has been ruined by an "ad" for pils, or some other nostrum. The roadside advertiser has a devilish eye for picking out the places that would naturally attract the attention of a person passing along theh ighway. So the signs arep osted up beside streams, on a hilside at the entrance of a gulch They are nailed to thefi nest trees on the roads. They are painted in red as an imitation of danger signals and placed at bends in the road to fool the automobilists, on the supposition that the fooled autoist will patronize the man who puts up such a fraud advertisement. They are nailed to the fences at road corners and there mixed with road directing signs. The country was becoming plastered with one great mosaic of red ,white, green black and yellow paint. It is time to call a halt.

It is now a misdemeanor to post an adverrtisement within the highway. The offense is the same to post it on the other side of the fence without the consent of the owner of the land. The owner of the land ought to think more of it than to see its appearance spoiled by advertising paint. —Utica Observer.

THE MAN

Who Is Needed at Albany

Democrat, Republican, Prohibitionist and Progressive, all unite in endorsing the sentiment of the Brooklyn Standard-Union, which says of Thaddeus C. Sweet:

The six years which Thaddeus C. Sweet has spent in the Legislature and the two terms which he has been Speaker of the Assembly have been marked by many stirring events and in most all heh as played a prominent part. The Oswego County man is a candidate again this fall and there is small likelihood he will fail of election. And if sent back to Albany it is predicted the Republicans will name him again as Speaker, if they control the Lower House.

Assemblyman Sweet is one of those energetic, forceful legislators who are all to scarce in the State' lawmaking body. The manner ii which he fought Tammany raids and Tammany bills while the organization controlled affairs at Albany and the service he rendered last winter in helping to frame and in pushing the appropriation bills through earned him a reputation of which all Oswego is proud. Reports from upstate encourage the belief that his reelection next month will be by a larger majority than he has ever had.

TAMMANY HALL OPPOSES WORK OF CONVENTION

New York.—On the night of Oct. 21st a rally was held by Tammany in its "Wigwam" on 14th st., New York city, the two principal speakers were Robert F. Wagner, who is the Tammany minority leader in the Senate, and Alfred Smith the Tammany minority leader in the Assembly. Stenographic reports of both of these speeches were taken.

Senator Wagner said: "I have I think a right in the light of the history of Tammany hall to appeal to the members of that organization for their disapproval of the constitution on next election day. (Applause)."

Assemblyman Alfred E. Smith, who is now running for Sheriff of New York County on the Tammany ticket, said:

"So that I feel, and I think when I say it that I speak for a majority of the people of this city, irrespective of their political 'affiliations, I feel that this Constitutional Convention has failed in a solemn duty to the people of this city. It has not only injured them, but it has heaped upon that [illegible] an insult, and every man, irrespective of party, no matter what may be his ideas as to politics of today, should vote solidly and make sure that he says "NO" on the provision that deals with the apportionment article submitted by the Constitutional Convention. (Applause)."

It seems to be the intent and wish of Tammany to defeat this constution if possible so that in case it is defeated Tammany mght control the next Convention.

NEVADA, GIANT WARSHIP IN N. Y.

New York—The super-dreadnought Nevada, mightiest of American battleships, arrived in Brooklyn Navy Yard yetterday. The huge vessel, displacing 27,500 tons, immediately went into dry dock. She will have her hull cleaned prior to undergoing rigid tests before she is accepted by the navy.

The Nevada is the latest word in naval architecture. In six important points she differs radically from her predecessors.

She is the first oil burning battleship in the United States navy. The first completed battleship to the equipped with the three-gun turrets. The first to have aerial defense guns, a single funnel, and the so-called "all or none" armor protection. The latter is a single belt 13.5 feet thick.

Among the minor innovations are two semi-automatic one pounder guns. The main armament consists of ten fourteen inch guns, contained in four terrets, two of which have three guns each.

The secondary armament consists of twenty-one five inch guns. The five inch guns have been given greater firing radius than in previous super-dreadnoughts, with the result that more of them can be trained fore and aft. Four twenty-one inch submerged torpedo tubes, which will discharge torpedoes capable of running 11,000 yards, complete the vessel's offensive weapons.

SHIPS TO STOP ARMS FOR CARRANZA'S FOES

Washington—All United States vessels in Mexivan waters, whether on the Atlantic or Pacific coasts, were today ordered by the Navy Department to assist in maintaining the strict embrgo upon the exportaton of arms and ammunitions of war to the enemies of Carranza. Especial vigilance is desired on the part of such vessels as are now in Mexican waters off Lower California, where Villa is still in control.

RETAIL TRADE DIVISION TO CONSIDER STEVENS PRICE MAINTENANCE BILL

The officers of the Retail Trade Division of the Chamber of Commerce have been gathering information for the past week with regard to the Stevens Bill. This bill was introduced in Congress by Representative Stevens of New Hampshire, and is an attempt to provide a remedy for the unfair practices that are being used to draw trade out of its natural channels by mail order houses, etc.

The Chamber has been in correspondence with the American Fair Trade League who are advocating the bill as well as with the National Retail Dry Goods Association who are opposing the measure. The American Fair Trade League are fighting what they consider the unfair competition of the price cutters who operate their mail order houses and chain stores. They contend that such competition consists chiefly of advertising at cut prices well known goods, inducing the public to purchase them, and at the same time to purchase unknown goods of doubtful quality. The Stevens Bill which they advocate legalizes contracts between the manufacturer and the retailer for the maintenance of retail prices.

The National Retail Dry Goods Association in opposing the bill contend that when a merchant purchases a bill of goods and pays for them, they are his to do with as he pleases. They argue that he may give them away or sell them at any price that suits his fancy, and that any contract which restricts him in this right, is not only illegal, but contrary to the wisest public policy. Information from both these organizations is coming to the office of the Chamber and will be mailed to members of the Retail Trade Division in the near future. As soon as the members have had sufficient opportunity to study the material sent them, the officers of the Division intend to call a meeting to consider and act upon the measure. In order that any decision which may be reached may be truly representative, it is probable that representatives of the Industries Division Chambers of Commerce throughout the country are studying this question and are writing to their Senators and the representative asking them to vote one way or the other on the measure.

JUSTICE HUGHES FAVORED IN THE WESTERN STATES

New Yor.—Many candidates for the republican nomination for President are entering the field for a pre-convention campaign, but with strong sentiment in sections of the West for Charles E. Hughes or Elihu Root.

Progressives are flocking back into the republican camp, some believing the progressive party is about to disband officially and others that they may carry the convention for a progressive platform. In formation to this effect reached the Republican National Headquarters yesterday when James B. Reynolds, secretary of the Natonal Committee, returned from a tour over twenty-two States. Mr. Reynolds spent part of the day in conference with Charles D. Hilles, republican chairman.

If Justice Hughes insists that his name shall not be considered many of the Western States look to New York to present Mr. Root's name, according to this preliminary report, Mr. Hilles said:

Hiram Johnson, of California, who was nominee for Vice President on the progressive ticket, may be a candidate for that office in the republican convention. Favorite sons already in the race include Senator Cummins, of Iowa; Senator Borah, of Idaho; Charles W. Fairbanks, one-time Vice President, of Indiana; Senator Burton, of Ohio; Senator William Alden Smith, of Michigan; Senator Curtis, of Kansas; Senator Sherman, of Illnois; Governor Herrick, of Ohio; Governor Brumbaugh, of Pennsylvania, and Governor Whitman of New York. Little Whitman sentiment has appeared anywhere, it is stated.

LAWRENCE SEVERANCE AT PLAY WAS INJURED

Lawrence Severance, son of Mr. and Mrs. Vernon A. Severance, of 213 W. 3rd street, south, was ajured last night about 8 o'clock near his home when a wagon belonging to W. Johnson ran over the boy's leg.

The boy was playing with several companions in the road and suddenly darted n front of the wagon. He was knocked down and the wheels passed over one of his legs, badly brusing that member. The wagon, fortunately, was a light delivery rig and was going slowly at the time.

Plenty of Pep Today; F. H. S. Puts Out Its Strong Aggregation

The Fulton High school team will this afternoon have on the side lines a reserve of eight substitute players, the largest number reserve men so far this season. Every one of the eight is an experienced player and will no doubt enter the game.

Tickets have been sold to the students at the high school during the past few days and the advance sale is large enough to take care of the guarantee to the Baldwinsville team.

Final practice was held yesterday and the team ran through signals without a hitch. The line has been made heavier to resist the attacks of several of the Baldwinsville backs who featured themselves in line plunging in the Baldwinsville-East Syracuse High school game played last week.

Coach Merrill feels confident the team will make an excellent showing and even predicts a victory for the home squad.

The men who will probably occupy the side lines at the start of the game are: Mangot, Judd, M. Frawley, Pooler, La Point, Martin, McClellan and Webb. The Fulton High team will probably take the field with the following lineup: Barnes, l. e.; Loughlin, l. t.; Kraus, l. g.; Richardson, c.; Gillespie, r. g.; Holly, rt.; Wallace, re.; O'Brien, Quarterback; Johnson, lh.; E. Frawley (Capt.), fullback; Calkins, rh.

The substitutions which may be made during the course of the game are La Point in place of O'Brien at quarter, Mangot and Judd at the ends, Frawley and Pooler at tackles, and Martin and Webb at ends.

Art Works Ruined in the Jewel City

Rome, via Paris.—Three separate raids were made last night and this morning by enemy aeroplanes on the city of Venice. Incendiary bombs were dropped.

In the first raid, about ten o'clock last night the roof of one of the famous churches was crushed in by a bomb and world renowned ceiling paintings by Tiepolo, forever destroyed. Another missile fell perilously near the marvelous Basilica of S, Mark and the Palace of the Doges, with its prieeless art collections. ,

In the second raid, which took place an hour later, no one was hurt and only little material damage was done, while in the third raid, which occurred this morning three persons were slightly injured.

The Rome newspapers express great indignation at the bombardment of the famous Scalzi church in Venice and the destruction of the Tiepolo frescoes. The news of the bomb attack on Venice has stirred the peopleo f Rome to an extraordinary degree.

The Giornale d'Italia, in announcing the partial destruction of the edifice, concludes with the hope that "the pious Emperor and his faithful archdukes may be happy that the weight of their wrath has fallen upon the church."

GERMANY NEEDS MORE MEN IN THE BALKANS

London.—British correspondents in France have just discovered the fact, made known o them by the British Staff, that even after the Anglo-French offensive in September the Germans had the greatest difficulty in procuring new reinforcements to meet that adventure and had to call upon men just returned from Russia for rest to fill the gaps in the western lines.

From this it is argued the Germans cannot spare a great many men for the Balkans, especially as the Russians are keeping them fairly busy from the Baltic to the Roumanian border.

The Italians by their offensive are compelling the Austrians to strengthen their lines, and the French by the capture yesterday of a strongly fortified salient north of Le Mesnil, in Champagne, have shown that they have not yet finished their effort o break through.

The French success is considered important because the capture of this fortified area clears the ground for another general offensive in Champagne.

For the same reason the British are trying to force the Germans out of their redoubts and from the slag heaps to the south of La Bassee. These, however, are only preparatory operations, while the Italians are in the midst of a great offensive which already has gained for them many valuable vantage points, and, according to Rome despaches, any day may place them in possession of the fortress of Gorizz.

THE CANAL AMENDMENT.

The consideration of New York's Barge canal is by no means confined to the voters of the Empire State who will soon be called upon to vote on the proposition to appropriate $27,000,000 additional for the completion of the waterway. In a recent issue the Springfield (Mass.) Republican said editorially:

One of the matters to be decided in the Empire state on election day is whether a $27,000,000 bond issue, to be spent on the Barge canal, will be authorized by the voters. New York state has already spent almost $100,000,000 on this job, and the additional millions are needed to complete it. The argument is used that unless these new bonds are authorized by popular vote the completion of the canal must drag along in a way to compel the loss of interest on the $100,000,000 already laid out while the canal cannot do adequate work until completed. Having put their hands to this task that is proving to be so much greater than the original estimate, the people will probably conclude to see it through, rather than make a bad matter worse by refusing to push the canal to completion as soon as possible. Massachusetts was considering building a canal to Albany when the advent of railroads put an end to the scheme, but we are not without our troubles. This commonwealth has the Boston dry dock to carry, let alone her expensive building of roads.

The Republican has stated the case clearly and fairly. It would be idle to make worse a bad matter by refusing the appropriation and leaving the work unfinished. It is a case in which patriotism and state prde are involved. — Rochester Chronicle-Democrat.

IF ADEQUATE PROTECTION IS RESTORED

When the world is again doing business on a peace basis quite possibly we shall not be able to hold leadership in the export trade. It is certain that we cannot if this country's industries remain exposed to the unfair competition of foregn manufacturers who have the advantage of cheap labor, which competition has been made possible by the low Tariff law enacted by a Democratic Congress and signed by President Wilson.

If adequate Protection is restored then the present impetus that has been given to our foreign trade may enable us to hold the advantage which we have gained, or at least so much of it as will leave us a close second in respect to exports.—Albany Journal.

SHOULD THEY HAVE SALARIES?

Many persons doubt the wisdom of paying salaries to the mayor and members of the board of aldermen of this city, and not without reason. While a provision in the Brown bill passed at the last session of the Legislature gives an out going administration the privilege of voting salaries to the incoming officials there is nothing in the act that sets up a higher standard in the selections of the men who may draw salaries, or in the character of the services they may render.

However, even those who believe in the principle of paying salaries to the members of one board in the city government and not to another ought to concede that a law which warrants such injustice is possessed of a serious fault.

The refusal of Myron Foster to give an ear to the suggestion made by Alderman Quirk, in effect that the time has come to vote salaries for the next administration, is something to the credit of the mayoraly candidate; but Mr. Foster's repudiation of the idea does not settle the proposition— not in the least, as it is quite likely that before the next administration is sworn into office there shall be on foot a movement to take advantage of the Brown Bill provisions.

In the meantime, between the present moment and election day, it is the duty of the voter to become an earnest quizzer—to learn from the man who solicits his vote for himself or another man, whether it is the intention of the present counal to uegislate salaries to the next set of officials.

Many persons in this city believe in the theory of salaried aldermen, but they fail to see how conditions can be improved by paying for something that they have no reason to believe can be made over or made efficient simply because of the salary attached to the offices.

DECEIVING OURSELVES

More men deceive themselves than deceive others. This is worth repeating. The rotten apple spoils its companions; but remember, the apple must be rotten to do the trick.

Plenty of men think they are covering up their decayed spots; but it is not their cleverness at "covering," it is the charity of their friends, that shields them from criticism.

This idea of glossing over our own littleness, trying to hide our own shortcomings, covering up our decayed spots, actually deceiving ourselves, is the bromide that puts us to sleep over our faults.

If a man would only analyze himself as honestly, as carefully, as bluntly as he takes his neighbor apart, he would actually help himself and not harm his neighbor. Finding fault with a neighbor seldom helps the neighbor, but makes the neighbor hate you.

Two men met, not long ago, and one told the other where he got off, and the result was they formed an interlocking attachment for each other, and both were taken to the hospital.

A little later two more men met, and one acknowledged to the other that he was about the meanest man in own. And soon they were forming an attachment, but hey did not go to the hospital.

When a man insists that he is always right, no one believes him. When he acknowledges that he is disappointing himself, the whole community is out for him. When a man must praise himself, it is a sure sign he is sinking.—Silent Partner.

5,000,000 POUNDS OF COD CAUGHT IN SEPT.

Washington.—The great American cod provided the largest source of revenue last month for the big fishing fleet off the New England coast, a total catch of five million pounds, worth about $145,000, being landed at the ports of Boston, Gloucester and Portland, the Department of Commerce announced today.

The fleet of 296 vessels brought into the three ports altogether 19,454,341 pounds of fresh and salted fish, worth $516,822. In addition to the unusually large catch of cod, haddock and mackeral were brought in, in great quantities.
